Sir,—It is said Lord Durham's mission to the Court of Russia has been crowned with success; we sincerely hope …is is true, but even if so it behoves us to be cautious in our …rrangements relative to our naval armament, and on no …ccount to relax in the completion of our forces. The …esigns of that power in regard to Turkey, and her long-…herished hope of getting a footing in India, are sufficiently …nown, as also her effective strength, her resources, and her …lready ample preparation for the prosecution of her views, …hensoever the time may be deemed propitious; and to …ithhold on the diplomatic talents which guide her cabinet …would be but a work of supererogation. Military enterprise, moreover, is the idol of her Emperor, whilst the influential classes thirst for aggrandisement; wherefore, the move…ments of such a power, under such influence, are likely enough to be masked under the guise of political acquies…cence, at the same time watching the period for action. That period will be when England is off her guard, and lulled into imaginary security, when, should such an occur…rence take place, she will doubtless pounce upon her object. The Spanish affair bodes us no good, as Russia may fairly ask, in extenuation of her projects towards Turkey, what right has England to intermeddle with the Spanish…ds, which she may not equally claim in regard to Turkey and Egypt? and she has already intimated that should the latter need assistance it shall not be withheld. Should we become in…volved through the anarchy of our Canadian colonies, or weakened in India through the mutinous state of our troops (if we are to believe the late accounts), may not the oppor…tunity desired by Russia present itself? We should there…fore continue our exertions, and be careful that we do not diminish the efficiency of our dock-yards, or lose a moment in completing the crew of every ship recently commissioned; for even admitting, as you have strenuously urged, that seamen are entering for the public service with a rapidity equal to expectancy, yet the numbers obtained hitherto for the few ships now thought necessary, have demonstrated the fact that there is no redundancy of sailors in the country, else "Greenwich Pensioners*," a body of men whose very designation implies inability for further service, could not be thought an acquisition in the Fleet; but even they, it appears, have been eagerly enrolled for the completion of the crews. What does this argue? Let our good wishes for the country be as paramount as I trust they ever will be among Englishmen; we must not madly draw the bandage over our eyes to shut out the truth; the stake is too momentous. To maintain the honour and security of our country is the first duty of us all, and to preserve the undivided dominion of the seas that of our Navy; wherefore it would be a fal…lacy of the most dire description did we not lay open our difficulties, if any do exist, and meet them like men. The Navy of Great Britain is the bulwark of the empire, and we must not suffer any impediment to oppose its efficiency, either through a mistaken pride "that seamen flock to our standard," or a grudging parsimony "which robs the widow;" for the reign of injustice, if persevered in, will assuredly meet a retribution as bitter as the infliction it has visited on the now desolate. Verbal assurances of expe…dition in manning our ships, whether in Parliament or out of Parliament uttered, will neither realise the fact or con…vince the world; let a statement appear in an official form of the number of men raised for the different ships, and then the question will be fairly developed—there should be no doubt on the subject, lest we have occasion to double or treble our present equipment; for be assured that so soon as it shall suit the views of Russia, her movements will be rapid, and, if unprepared for, decisive. Nor should we be too persevering just now in rejecting landsmen; for the numerous railroads in progress will, ere long, give occupa…tion to such vast numbers, that both the Marine corps and ourselves will find it difficult by-and-bye to recruit from that body, and the political horizon is by no means so serene as it has been. What has become of the registry scheme of Sir J. Graham, proposed and agitated by many officers some fourteen years ago, but in a more efficient form than he has suggested? If it is to remain a dead letter, there was no use in passing it—Naval officers, men especially interested in its furtherance, should be appointed to carry its pro…visions into execution, and not leave it to Heaven knows who, for we hear nothing of it. But this saving propensity! surely it will be the ruin of us, this fear of Joseph!

CORPORAL PUNISHMENT.

Sir,—It is well known that a few dozen given by com…mand of a Naval Captain, is considered to equal as many hundreds in the Army. If any alteration be made in the limitation of the number of stripes, it is to be presumed that Government will deliver from some office the cats, which should not be left to the discretion of the punishers. We heard the other day, in evidence, of a man's lifting a cat and saying he liked it because it swung well round. All cats for punishment should be equal; and any deviation therefrom (as Sir Henry Hardinge to his credit declared in regard to Colonel Arthur on Mr. T. Duncombe's assertion), if proved, ought to be punished with removal. In short, keep up discipline—but let the men see tyrants removed and declared incapable of ever serving again.

THE PILOT.

Sir,—I am induced to address you in consequence of the splenetic observations which appeared last week in a con…temporary publication, with reference to the conduct of the Captain of the Pilot. It was manifest to every one who served in the Mediterranean during the late war, that the Pilot was in as fine order as any ship on that station, and this high state of discipline was maintained without having recourse to corporal punishment. By encouraging a spirit of emulation the brig became one of the smartest vessels in the service.

As the editor of the journal alluded to is desirous to ascertain if the crew under such training were effective in battle, I would refer him to the official reports of the war on the coast of Calabria, where the Pilot frequently dis…tinguished herself; and on the 16th June, 1815, the brig, under the same Captain, gallantly brought to action the French corvette Légère, mounting 28 guns, and after closely engaging her two hours, beat her off, with a loss on board the corvette of 100 killed and wounded, out of a crew of 280. Veritas.

[As we never see the paper referred to by our correspon…dent, we cannot give any opinion on its observations, but we have struck out some passages in this letter, as they might be considered personally offensive to the editor. We do not sully our columns with personalities; they are re…volting to every honourable mind. We have more than once expressed our admiration of the gallant action alluded to by Veritas; it was only owing to the crippled state of the Pilot that the French vessel was not captured.—Ed.]

MANNING THE NAVY.—DOCK-YARDS AND SHIPBUILDING.

"Coming events cast their shadows before them."

Sir,—For the information of "A Lover of Facts," whose letter appeared in your last week's number, I beg to ob…serve that, from the experience I have had as the Outports I know the entry of seamen for the Navy, progresses very slowly.—At Milford, four only were procured. Since then the Messenger steamer twice visited that port, but without obtaining a single addition to the number. Indeed, at Liverpool and Dublin, those frequented places, she only obtained 80 men of all descriptions. Notwithstanding the flourishing accounts of the rapidity in manning the line-of-battle ships, I opine, from actual observation, and facts are stubborn proofs, that something more must be done, either by bounty, guarantee of widows' pensions, or otherwise, as may seem meet to those high in authority, by way of in…ducement, before even the present few vessels can be sent to sea. Thus much for the Navy; and now, a word or two on Dock Yards.

What, in the name of all that is consistent, can possibly be the cause of thus so soon shutting up these establish…ments the extra half day? It is not more than two or three months back, that orders were received at these arsenals for the workmen to be employed the half of Saturday, in ad…dition to the other days of the week. That small addition to their limited wages rendered them comparatively happy.—Now, without rhyme or reason, the boon is withheld, and they,—the persons who have already suffered most privation of any under the Crown, are again reduced to their former unwarrantable nothingness. Where is friend Tristram?—Had I the powers of "pacifying by the way," I'd "Cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war."

I'd invoke such thunders of rhetoric, as would awaken feelings of sympathy in the nation at large, for that in…jured, oppressed, and neglected set of men. Capt. Symonds ought to be their friend. Let him give them his support, and they will ever aid his cause. This leads me to say a word or two on Shipbuilding:—The plans introduced by the Surveyor, so ably advocated in the paper lately drawn up by Mr. Hawkes, of Pembroke, seem by the late debates in the House of Commons, to be highly approved of by persons well qualified to judge. Although Mr. Hawkes has been so severely abused for his report by a certain clique, yet he has risen superior to it all. Even the mem…bers of the School of Naval Architecture, at least, the enlightened and candid portion of them, I allude to your correspondents at Portsmouth and Chatham, not only acknowledge the correctness of the system, but mathema…tically and scientifically prove its advantages. Others still withhold not their meed of praise; and thus daily do the advantages of Vanguard over Clarence, become more and more conspicuous.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1836.

THE intention, known to exist on the part of Government, to abolish the Naval College at Portsmouth, produced some conversation in the House of Lords on Tuesday evening, upon which, and the debate of Friday the 15th instant in the House of Commons, we will offer a few remarks.

To the qualifications of Dr. Inman, as a scholar and a mathematician, we shall ever be ready to concede full justice, and his pupils, Captain the Earl of Hardwicke and Lord Colchester, are not more fully sensible of the ability of the learned Professor to teach and expound the sciences than we are; indeed, we will take this opportunity of expressing ourselves to the same purport, as regards the Governor, and every officer of the establishment,—but that the establishment itself has produced any benefits to the Naval profession, or the country, either by instructing young gentlemen in exclusive branches of knowledge, which they cannot acquire at academies of less pretension, or more particularly that what is called the science of Naval Architecture has made any advances commensurate with the great expense incurred, is what we are bound to deny.

As regards the first point, we must confess, that although the mode of instruction adopted at the Naval College has been in operation for nearly half a century, it has never been our fortune to meet with an officer, educated therein, displaying any thing beyond the ordinary capacity of a lad, who had received the preliminary instruction usually afforded to those intended for the Naval Profession at another school. Indeed, it is a common remark, that the Navy List does not show, in the appendages of merit to officers names, that College Students have distinguished themselves in this respect, and we are bound moreover to state, that we have seen young gentlemen, fresh from science, fail to set about taking the altitude of the sun, and to adjust a Quadrant, when that instrument was placed in their hands, and this occurred only a few years ago, notwithstanding all that has been written about chimney pots, &c. If, therefore, we judge of the value of an institution by its produce,—of the tree by its fruit,—what shall we say as regards the aid which the science, or art of Naval Architecture, has received from this establishment. It will be recollected that, in consequence of the alleged educational defects of our practical ship-builders, and the supposed benefit which the acquisition of certain sciences would afford in designing the mould of a man-of-war, a Parliamentary Committee recommended the establishment of this institution,—and it was established accordingly.

It is true the names of eminent French and Spanish Mathematicians might have been quoted, who had expended a vast deal of philosophy upon this matter, without greatly elucidating the subject; and many persons were doubtful whether any benefit was to be obtained under our imperfect knowledge of the sciences, as they regarded resistance to bodies, &c. A season of peace afforded the opportunity which the students, after twenty years' application, had been earnestly awaiting. Accordingly a set of experimental vessels were ordered to be built not only on the principles of the School, but also by the existing Surveyor of the Navy and two Naval Officers, whose productions had appeared to some shrewd observers to merit attention. It is needless to inform our readers of what all the world already knows, that in the trials of sailing, &c. conducted under the observation of one of the most skilful seamen and best Officers in the Service (Sir Thomas Hardy) the production of the School was reported to be inferior to the others in all the essential points of a vessel of war, and the establishment was therefore ordered forthwith to be abolished, providing for the students, however, by situations in the different Yards. It has been asserted that Dr. Inman had not fair play in the construction of the Sapphire; that he wished to increase her size, &c, but this could not have been permitted, without injustice to the contending parties, who were all limited as to tonnage or displacement and armament though at liberty to construct their vessels according to their judgment as to their form and the proportions of length and breadth. Yet this is not all; Dr. Inman was allowed, another trial—a back hand—and the result was the production of the Actæon, a ship regarding whose qualifications even the members of the School are dumb. We leave it then to any unprejudiced person to say whether—with these practical results of an abortive attempt to force that rare intellect which culture can only improve, namely, genius, which is the gift of nature—it would be prudent to devote a single sixpence, after the present year, to uphold the establishment of the Naval College at Portsmouth for purposes which are equally attainable in private academies, at even the diminished cost of 1600*l*., the sum voted in the Estimates, besides the value of the buildings, &c. appropriated.

IT will appear, by reference to the table drawn up from official data by Captain Badenach, contained in his work, page 36, that of 3,633 officers that the Indian Army consisted of, or who entered it between 1796 and 1820, only 201 of them lived to retire on pensions; that, in fact, as stated by Colonel Salmond, in 1833, before the Parliamentary Committee, but five per cent. of those who go out to India retire on pensions, and the remaining ninety-five per cent. either die, are killed, or resign the service in India without any emolument from the company, or means to return home. Captain Badenach adds,—

"I have chosen this period because 25 years' furlough included being the time that entitles an officer to retire, I wished to exhibit the results of 1796 as they appeared at the conclusion of the first period when they came into action, it appears that, out of all the officers and medical men who had been in that service, only five hundred and fifty had come on the pension list, out of which one hundred and eighty-one died before 1820, which reduced the number to three hundred and sixty-nine, and the aggregate of pensions to 77,103*l*., averaging about 2,000*l*. a-year to each. The yearly increase of the pensions appears to have averaged 6,000*l*. during the whole twenty-five years, and instead of since increasing they have been less every year since 1812, owing to the reduction of the interest of money and the unfavourable state of exchange between India and England; for the year 1820 it was only 1,680*l*., a sum considerably less than the retiring pension of one of his Majesty's judges."

With reference to the retired full-pay and the half-pay lists of both up to 1820, it will be found that the amount to the Company's service was only equal to about a two hundred and ninety-eighth part of the yearly revenue of India, while that of Great Britain, for the Army alone, was about one nineteenth part. In His Majesty's Service, on the retired full-pay and half-pay, there are of one description or other about 13,000 officers, or about 100 to each corps, of the present establishment four General Officers, seven Colonels, or Lieutenant-Colonels, five Majors, twenty-six Captains, and upwards of fifty Subalterns, or Paymasters, Surgeons, and Staff Officers, inclusive of the officers of the strength of regiments; whereas, for the Company's Service, there are but a fraction more than one retired officer for each corps of the present establishment, and the charge for furlough allowances, is attended with an immense saving to the Honourable Company.

In all other services it has been found necessary to hold out a hope, amounting to a strong probability of a moderate proportion of the surviving officers being able to acquire some of those objects that have so powerful an effect on men's minds such as rank, honour, or emolument, how much more necessary must these inducements be in the Indian Army, where the climate alone has such debilitating effect on both body and mind, where the certain and unavoidable difficulties and hardships are so terribly over proportioned to the possible advantages, and where individual exertion or acquirement is of no avail, either in advancing the individual in rank or accelerating his retirement.

Extract from the Evidence before the Naval and Military Committee in 1833.

Question 1925. Is there any limitation to the number of commissions given, without purchase, annually to Cadets of the Military College? Answer. No; the practice of the Commander-in-Chief is to recommend all those who pass a certain examination, and are recommended specially to the Board of Commissioners.

Q. 1926. Can you state the average of that number? A. The average number is 21; there were 28 last year, five have been appointed this year, and there are fourteen now to be provided for who passed at the last examination.

Q. 1927. Are not recommendations from the Governor of the Military College to the Commander-in-Chief for commissions to Cadets, in the order which the Cadets pass the examination, so that if the son of a poor officer pass the first examination he would stand the first for the commission? A. Yes.

Q. 1929. And these are considered as commissions of course? A. Yes; there were only twenty commissions given away last year to private gentlemen, several of whom had served in the East Indies one or two years on the provisional appointment of the Commander-in-Chief in India.

We shall resume this subject in our next.

IT being impossible to find space in our columns for even a third of the correspondence that is addressed to us, we endeavour from time to time to express the opinions of our valuable contributors in our leading columns when those opinions are in unison with our own. The observations of a highly distinguished and experienced officer, which we have lately received, on the subject of the NAVY, being so just and so true, we gladly submit the heads of those remarks to the consideration of our readers, and more particularly to the attention of those who have the power to amend the evils of which this gallant officer with so much reason complains. That the British Navy has, as our respected correspondent observes, ever been regarded as the right arm of our strength, to which we owe chiefly, if not wholly, the rank and station which we so proudly possess amongst surrounding nations, all will, we are sure, most readily admit. Hence, that the Naval Service well merits every protection which a Gracious Sovereign and his constitutional advisers can bestow, is equally unquestionable. Why, then, as the writer alluded to, asks, are not the NAVY placed in every way—in pay, in pensions, in honours, in short in every form precisely similar to their equally deserving brethren of the Army? That this is not the case, in any shape, not even in honorary distinctions, our correspondent refers us but to the list we published a week or two since of the ROYAL GUELPHIC ORDER. There, as he observes, we find that the total number of superior officers in the two services are so very nearly the same, that is to say 2,159 to 2,036, yet that the Navy have not even one-fifth the consideration that the Army has obtained of these Royal favours, being but as 65 to 341. In the Order of the BATH, also, we find a similar disparity, there being only 157 Naval to 467 Military, and, moreover, that in the Second Class of this Order, whilst the number of Military Knight-Commanders are the same as in the year 1815, yet that the Naval have been suffered to decrease to thirty-eight less, although it cannot but be believed that the proportionate number of deaths in both services, since that date, have been very nearly equal. It is facts like these which, as the gallant officer truly observes, ought to be brought before our beloved sailor King, for all who know his Majesty's warm attachment to the profession of his early choice, must be well convinced that our excellent Sovereign has the same earnest desire to reward the old and meritorious officers of our Navy, as he feels to reward those with similar claims of their gallant brethren in arms. Next, as regards the pay and pensions of our Naval men and that of their widows. Why or wherefore the Colonel of Artillery, of Engineers, or of the Marines, or indeed of any other corps of the Army, should receive fourteen shillings and sixpence per day, the moment he has obtained this rank, whilst the Naval Captain, who has the rank of Colonel twenty years, has but ten shillings and sixpence, or that the Major should receive nine shillings and sixpence per day, whilst the Commander of the same seniority, or even higher, has but eight shillings and sixpence,—or the Captain of the Army, including those of the Artillery, Engineers, and Marines, (in neither of which do they purchase their commissions any more than in the Navy,) should receive seven shillings per diem, whilst the Lieutenant of the Navy, with many years higher seniority, has but five shillings, the nation, when it is properly stated to them, will we are sure be at a loss to understand. With similar disparity are the pensions to the widows of the inferior officers regulated. The Warrant Officers' Widow is in future to be wholly excluded from a pension, although that of the Quartermaster in the Army, whose rank is similar to the Naval Warrant Officer, is still to be permitted to enjoy this boon. Again, the pay of Surgeons and Assistant-Surgeons in the Army has been lately increased, together with other advantages, whilst this class of officers in the Navy remains unaltered.

With these incontrovertible facts before us we cannot but deem that this noblest arm of England's strength ought to be placed on precisely the same footing as the sister services; and, recollecting as we do the words of even the economical Mr. Hume in the last Session of Parliament, that "Show him what could be done to benefit our Navy and he would never be found backward in giving his voice in support of this great object;" we feel satisfied that were it proposed to carry into effect this equitable arrangement, that of making the Navy equal to the Army in every way, that there would not be found a dissentient voice in either branch of the Legislature. It is, then, for Ministers to increase their justly-gained popularity by carrying into execution this salutary measure, a measure which we are confident our gallant soldiers will cheerfully acknowledge the fairness of, and, in thus acquiring the gratitude of the whole Naval Service, would reanimate its old and experienced officers to increased zeal and energy whenever their country should again have to call forth those brave men in her defence, who have fought her battles throughout a long and sanguinary war, and always with additional glory to our flag.

In making these observations, it is not that we desire to give the Army less, but that we seek to obtain for the Navy more, we cheerfully admit that the Army most fully merit every thing that they have obtained, but we contend that the Navy have a right to equal consideration,—all that we seek, then, for the Navy is, that it should be placed PRECISELY in every shape and form as their brethren in arms, and in the strict justice of this, we are confident, the whole nation will agree.

ALL the Marines available, from the four Divisions, have been ordered for embarkation, and are to be relieved in their ordinary duties by the Guards and Troops of the Line. They are to be formed into a battalion. This force includes a company of Artillery, and is supplied with trenching tools, and all things necessary for active operations. Major John Owen, K.H., an Officer who greatly distinguished himself last war on several occasions, is appointed to the command. Two armed steam-boats will accompany them, and their active co-operation with the Queen's troops will prevent the possibility of the Carlists maintaining possession of any posts upon the Coast, and thus cut off all chance of supplies to that party. The force will be from five hundred to a thousand men, independent of the Marines of the Fleet, and it is generally supposed that the Line-of-Battle Ships, now nearly ready for sea, are destined to make a demonstration in the same quarter.

THE question asked by one of our correspondents, in his letter which appears in another page, we regret that we cannot at this moment satisfactorily answer. If the Navy List be really published "by Authority," as it has hitherto always been considered to have been, it does seem extraordinary that an officer should sit at a Court-Martial who does not appear, by this List, to have a pendant flying in any one of His Majesty's ships. We will not further enlarge on this subject at this moment having before expressed our opinions fully upon it, and because we hope and believe that measures are in contemplation which will correct all these dangerous anomalies.

IN expressing, as we have done on different occasions of late, our opinion on the subject of the claims of Field Officers of Marines to share with the Officers of corresponding ranks in the Navy, we have uniformly maintained the justice and fairness of this proposition, that is, when the Field Officers are embarked in a command equal to this rank, such, for example, as we consider Lieutenant Colonel Parke at this moment is in the Mediterranean Fleet, where he is regarded as the chief of the whole body of Marines employed on that Station; but we never intended to imply that if a Brevet Major, or a Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel were embarked in a ship as the Captain of a Company only, he should be entitled to share with the Captains of the ships of the Fleet. In that case we would suggest that he should be classed with the Senior Lieutenant (or Commander) and the Master of the Fleet. This arrangement we think would prove satisfactory, because it is, we deem, founded on justice.

As regards there being a difference made where the Prize was a neutral, and that the Captain or Captains of the ship detaining her might be made responsible for damages, we would say that, to entitle Military Officers of corresponding ranks to share with Captains or Commanders on such especial occasions, they should first agree to bear a proportion of the expenses, as is now done with regard to freight between Flag Officers and Captains; but that where the Prize was a positive enemy, and consequently there could be no risk, then we think that the Field Officer embarked in a command equal to his rank, that is to say, at the head of two or three hundred men, or more belonging to the Fleet or Squadron, he should be entitled to share precisely as Officers of the same rank belonging to the Army would do in a joint service with the Navy. In thus again offering our suggestions relative to the claims of the Superior Officers of the Royal Marines, we can only further add that which we have at all times, and on all occasions, so warmly repeated, namely, that no corps under the Crown has higher pretensions to public regard, or is more entitled to whatever favour and protection can with justice be shown to the FAITHFUL, MERITORIOUS, and BRAVE.

THE anomalous, and, we may add, the unprecedented system of continuing upon the LIEUTENANTS' list the 185 Officers who have retired with the rank of COMMANDER, we are convinced can only require to be properly represented in order to cause its immediate correction. A correspondent has communicated to us, however, that a memorial has lately been addressed to the Admiralty from six hundred of the Senior Lieutenants praying for an amendment to be made in the existing regulation, whereby those old Officers who stand highest upon the list of Lieutenants might have that trifling increase to their half-pay to which they deem, and every liberal-minded man who knows the facts must deem, they are so well and so positively entitled. To this memorial, it is stated to us, a most unsatisfactory and averse uncourteous answer has been received from Mr. Wood, saying that "their Lordships cannot recommend it to his Majesty to incur this additional expense," or words to this purport. Knowing, as we do, the Secretary of the Admiralty to be a most liberal, right judging, amiable man, whose delight, we are sure, it will always be to assist in obtaining for the old and deserving Officer his hardly-earned reward, we can scarcely bring ourselves to believe that we are correctly informed in this matter. In petitioning for the alteration alluded to, those six hundred Lieutenants have prayed but for JUSTICE, and JUSTICE, we are confident, will never be refused to any class of men by the present highly respected First Lord and Board of Admiralty. As to the additional cost of a few pounds a day to the two or three hundred Officers who would benefit by this correction, it cannot, and ought not, to be taken into the calculation for a instant, where a right is claimed; for if it be not a right, why then we must ever contend that not only the nine retired Post Captains, but also the twenty-five retired Rear-Admirals should be continued upon the Captain's List, whereby those who were entitled to 14s. 6d. per day would end with Edward Hankey instead of W. F. Wise. And further, that the 100 Commanders under the Order of Council of 1816 ought to be still included in the 300 Senior Lieutenants who are entitled to seven shillings per diem; but the thing is too monstrous to admit of an argument, and the more we think of it the more do we hope and believe that our correspondent must have been misinformed in the supposed statement of the worthy Secretary of the Admiralty. All we will further observe on this question at present is, simply to ask, was ever such a regulation or arrangement heard of as regards Officers of the Army! We are sure that there never was, for in the sister Service even the unattached Captains but just promoted to this rank have seven shillings per day; hence we the more confidently look for the justice that is demanded in this case; for where positive RIGHT like this exists, no pecuniary calculations ought ever to be suffered to have the slightest weight in the administration of our public affairs.

We shall recur to this subject again at an early period, from the perfect conviction that it only requires to be shown to the Admiralty in its true bearings to ensure to the old Lieutenants of the Navy the object which, with so much reason, they now humbly seek.

It is with considerable satisfaction we perceive, that the bill passed last Session of Parliament, for limiting the term of service, and granting various inducements for seamen to enter the King's service, produces good effects on the present occasion. And we are the more particularly gratified at this, because, ever since the establishment of this Journal, we have invariably and unceasingly advocated the adoption of those measures, which the experience of the present occasion, proves to be beneficial, and attended with the predicted results. It is a matter of astonishment to many, that whilst the wages of seamen generally have increased full 50 per cent., and in some trades are nearly doubled! the men notwithstanding volunteer for the King's ships in preference; and it is evident, that did the Admiralty think fit to avail themselves of the powers they possess under the afore-said act of last session, to proclaim a bounty, or other inducements therein provided, they might calculate on the services of all the disposable seamen in the kingdom. This must be a pleasing reflection for all true lovers of their country, and will be adduced as a reason for resorting to inducement rather than force on future occasions. It is but a few years back, that at a season of the year when seamen generally were out of employment, and the wages low, men could not be obtained; and we believe it was the necessity which compelled the embarkation of the Preventive Service men, that first made apparent how futile was a reliance on the riff-raff composing that body. We consider, that under the present inducements, every man who enters the Navy, will become a convert to the advantages of the King's over the Merchants' Service, and diffuse that information amongst his brethren. It only requires these advantages to be made fully known, to be appreciated, and the result is certain, as the present occasion proves.

In giving publication, under the head of "Correspondence," to the letter of Captain Bowles, Comptroller-General of the Coast Guard, to Commander Deare, on the subject of our late observations on the case of Lieut. Dornford, we beg to assure the gallant Commander that, until we heard from him, we were wholly ignorant of the name or even rank of the prosecutor of Lieut. Dornford; hence, that we could not possibly have intended to reflect personally upon Commander Deare. All we stated was, that which we again repeat without intending to offer the slightest personal offence to any individual,—namely, that before an officer be arraigned on so serious an offence as that of betraying his trust, which, if proved, must not only have ruined his prospects in his profession, but must also have damned him for ever in the opinion of every honourable man—the person making the accusation ought to be sure of his facts, and that if made without just grounds, the individual preferring such heavy charges should himself always be taught to expect severe censure from those who are the natural guardians of every officer's honour and reputation—the Chiefs of the profession. We as yet know nothing of the details of this case of Lieut. Dornford; all we have seen of it was in a Portsmouth paper, but whenever those details may reach us we shall readily publish them. This much, however, we will observe, that the inquisitorial system so loudly complained of, of confidential letters on the conduct of officers, which, we are told, prevails in the Coast Guard Service to a great extent, is as objectionable as it is unjust and un-English-manlike; and we hope we are correct in that which we have heard on this subject, that it is intended, by a high-minded and liberal member of the Commons, to bring the question of these secret communications, affecting the characters of officers, fully before Parliament at an early period, when, on a particular case being adduced, the whole of these "confidentials" connected with such case must of course be laid on the table of the House and printed. In concluding these remarks we willingly admit all that Captain Bowles has said in behalf of Commander Deare, who, we will believe, must himself have been misled in this case of Lieut. Dornford; and as we never before recollect even to have heard this officer's name, we will not doubt for a moment but that he merits all the commendations which the Comptroller-General has bestowed upon him.

Much has been written to draw the attention of the Government and the Court of Directors of the East India Company to the inevitable consequences of misrule in India, connected with the dissatisfied and the disgusted state of general feeling on the part of a neglected Army. It was the wise policy of Napoleon to reward merit in all departments, civil or military, and not to make the Services a provision for younger sons of the nobility. And can any man who reflects, who is fully aware of the rapid changes taking place everywhere, deny that, as knowledge is considered and admitted to be power, India will much longer submit to be misruled. If there was ever a period when men in authority should govern for the public benefit, and not for their individual advantage—if ever a colony required men of sound judgment, great experience, and able decision of character, accompanied with a dignified deportment, suavity of manners, to govern, this is the period, and India the colony! We have heard much of the pressure from without, and that Parliament must attend to the public feeling; but in this great commercial country, what would be the effect of the loss of India! We see the effect of dissatisfaction in the Canadas, and what it must ultimately be is universally admitted; but though India and China produce so vast a revenue, and directly or indirectly involve the interests of nine-tenths of the community, yet no member of Parliament calls for an explanation of the line of policy pursued, with a desire to amend the errors complained of, or redress the grievances of the Army constituting the main protection of this vast and important colony! We have seen the gratitude of foreign powers in the probable interruption to our Portugal trade; and if our trade and our colonies fail us, how long will the revenue continue in its flourishing state? As we have remarked so freely on the subject of Indian grievances, we will suggest some remedies. The Army should undergo a revision; old inefficient officers should be required to retire; the officers of the Indian Army should no longer see an invidious distinction between theirs and the King's Service, or the Commander-in-Chief in India should cease to receive Company's allowances; men of character should alone be enlisted, and the ambition of reward would soon obtain a good class of men either as sepoys or European soldiers. And as the Savings' Banks have done so much for England, by giving all the lower classes an interest in the State; create, by some means, an interest in the British away amongst the Indians—attach them to the Company and to the British away, or this dissatisfaction will only be a prelude to shaking off the yoke. Be most particular in the selection of all officers in authority, of every grade, from Governor-General or Commander-in-Chief to non-commissioned officers of the Army, as well as all of the Civil Service. Establish an Asiatic Order of merit for the Army generally, King's and Company's, and do not place a junior officer of the Company's Service, as in the instance of Captain or Lieut.-Colonel Bethune, by a hop, step, and jump, a Major-General, over all old officers! Can any one be so blind as to suppose that the reduction of the Indian Army, the taking away cantonment commands, the allowing a few King's officers to engross the great emoluments as Commanders-in-Chief, the marking a contempt for and disregard of that Army's interest, will tend to attach officers or men to the Company's interest? while all merely seek to eke out their time to get their pension and retire, the esprit of the Service is lost. Corporal punishment has been abolished:—it cannot be restored; and therefore the system of reward must be tried. None but good men, of high moral character, should be enlisted either there or here. Officers for regimental or staff commands should be selected with great judgment. In short, if so much has been done to curtail and clip the Officer and Sepoy, let the Army see the same reduction carried on in regard to Residencies, their Assistants, Surgeons, Collectors and Assistants, Judges, &c. Let the whole go through a revision, and let that Army which encounters all the fatigue and risk, enjoy equal advantages with the Civilian.

We have received a letter, written by a warm friend of Lieutenant Blount, of the Hermes steam vessel (now in the temporary command of Rhadamanthus), detailing a series of constant and active service, on his part, for twenty-three years. We are quite aware of the merit of the gallant officer, and, if we recollect rightly, have already had occasion to record some examples of it. On such occasions we are always gratified, and more particularly when they relate to those officers who have passed the long season of peace in active employment, under the disadvantage of but few opportunities occurring which can afford them the chance of distinguishing themselves. We doubt not but that Lieutenant Blount's professional character is well known in the proper quarter, and appreciated accordingly; and, in scanning over the list of officers actively employed, we cannot help thinking, that the complaint so often made of interest producing these appointments, is in nineteen cases out of twenty most unjust. It is too much the practice of some old officers to add more than twenty years of inactivity, during which they have made little or no exertion to get afloat, to a few years' active service during the war, and then make out a hard case of their claims being neglected by the authorities. We do not think, that at any period real merit was more sought after and more certain to be preferred, over every other consideration, than at this time; and we are confident that those officers of the Navy and Marines who perform their arduous duties with a proper spirit, on the only theatre now open for distinction, we mean the Coast of Spain, will obtain promotion and reward.

Amongst the numerous propositions which we have received on the subject of improving the situation of Masters in the Navy, we think that that which has just been made by one of our Correspondents is the best. This is, that after being six years a confirmed Master, the officer should be promoted to the rank of Lieutenant, still continuing to do the duties of Master as before; but, by being advanced to this higher rank, he should and would become eligible to that of Commander and Post Captain, if his future meritorious services gave him claim to it, discontinuing the duties of Master, of course, as soon as he attained the rank of Commander.

Having always contended for the propriety of rewarding this highly useful class of officers in every way that was possible, we shall be most glad to find that the system we now submit to consideration, or some other that will equally benefit the Masters of the Navy, may at an early period be adopted in the Service.

United Service Museum.—About the time of our going to press on Saturday last, a lecture by the Rev. Richard Sharpshanks, was delivered at this Institution. It was said to be the first of a course, "On the Use of Astronomical Instruments in determining Latitude and Longitude;" including the Reflecting Instruments, the Portable Circles for measuring Altitudes, the Transit Instrument, the Equatorial, with Clock-work, &c., &c. and whilst we are at press this day, a lecture "On the Mechanical Agency of Steam in general," with some Observations on its probable Effects in Military and Naval operations," by the Rev. Dionysius Lardner, will be in course of delivery. These are facts both new and strange, which we are bound to believe, as they have been in due form thus verified:—"By Order of the Council, Lewis H. J. Tonna, Assist.-Director; and confirmed, Henry Itowness, Com. R.N., Director Hon." on circulars, which might or might not have been widely circulated. Be that as it may, we rejoice in the effects which our soft, salutary, and often repeated admonitions have at length produced. Our correspondent X.X. certainly gave a potent mixture to the management. There was no possibility of getting rest under its action, and a dose of double-X having operated most powerfully, we lived in a sort of dread that one of triple-X would some day knock the legs from under what might be called the very sage, scientific, snuggish, peace-bred, warlike, warm, well-feathered, three-per-cented, stuff-collecting, insect-gathering, biped-stuffing, long-staggering, lettered, and learned knowledge box, improving joint stock company. Let us now exult in what we take to be a promise of turning to operations which may ultimately prove not less creditable to the United Service than beneficial to the public. We shall not then be niggards in our praise!

We regret to state, that Mr. Robert Seymour, the well known caricaturist, committed suicide on Wednesday morning.

In the post mortem examination of the body of Gen. Baron Stranch, who died lately at Vienna, a ball was found which this superior officer had received thirty years before in the wars of the empire.

The Prince of Orange is shortly expected in London, accompanied by his two eldest sons. The Prince's visit is unconnected with politics; he feels a desire, from his long residence in this country, to place his sons at one of our Universities to complete their education, and afford them an insight to English society.

There is no truth in the statement that the Canadian Commissioners have been recalled.

The Late Duel.—Lord George Bentinck and Mr. Osbaldiston having exchanged shots, Mr. Osbaldiston's friend expressed himself, on the part of Mr. Osbaldiston, perfectly satisfied, and the parties left the ground.

Navigation of the River Thames.—Mr. Newman, the architect, and Mr. H. H. Price, the civil engineer, have presented to the Navigation Committee a plan for collier docks at Rotherhithe and Deptford, which will tend to remove the obstruction in the collier-pool, and thereby improve the navigation so important to the river, and prevent the loss of life and accidents which have so frequently occurred in consequence of the crowded state of the collier-pool.

From an advertisement in our columns, it will be seen that the anniversary of the Royal Humane Society takes place on Wednesday. Sir Edward T. Troubridge will be the chair; and considering the very great proportion of the Naval and Military profession on whom medals have been conferred by this excellent institution, we shall expect to see the gallant Chairman well supported by his brother officers. The meetings of this institution are generally the most interesting that come under our notice. We shall report the proceedings in our next.

The Marquis of Westmeath has obtained a rule nisi for a criminal information against Mr. Murray, the bookseller, for a libel.

On the 5th inst. Sir J. Ogilvie was married to Lady Jane Howard, third daughter of the Earl of Suffolk. A few days after the nuptials, the Countess of Suffolk, the bride's mother, was taken ill, and on Monday last she expired.

Yesterday the Dublin Committee decided the question of the right of the watchmen to exercise the elective franchise. The decision is that they have not, and as those who voted for West and Hamilton were twenty-two in number, the sitting member will ultimately have the benefit of these votes being struck off the register.

In the House of Commons, on Thursday night, Mr. Gillon gave notice of a motion for June 2, "that it is the opinion of the house that no person belonging to the naval or military services, and in the receipt of full pay, shall be eligible to a seat in the Commons' House of Parliament.

Admiral Sir John Beresford, Bart., only brother of Viscount Beresford, is about to marry Mrs. Peach, relict of J. Peach, Esq., of Portland-place, a lady of considerable property. Sir John Beresford was first married to Miss Molloy, who died in 1818; and secondly, in 1815, to Miss Pierse (grand-daughter of Lord Monson), who died in 1825. He has children surviving by both marriages.

The Newmarket first Spring Meeting has been most numerously and fashionably attended during the week, and the sport of an excellent quality. The chief attraction was the 2000 guineas stake of Tuesday, which was won by the Earl of Jersey's brother to Nell Gwynne, after one of the finest races ever witnessed.

The Orange Institution of Ireland is now dissolved. A debate of two days in the Grand Lodge, at which the Earl of Rosen presided, ended in a division, in which the motion for the dissolution of the Society was carried by a majority of 20, there being 82 for, and 62 against it.

Charles X.'s Family.—The ex-Emperor lives in complete retirement at the Bradschin, where he will not remove probably till the preparations for the reception of the Emperor are commenced in the interior of the Palace; he will then go to Toplitz, and afterwards to Buchtiehrad. It has been again reported that the ex-King had an intention to purchase an estate in Bohemia, and wholly leave Prague. According to another report he will proceed to Saltzburg. The Duke of Bordeaux, who now goes out more frequently than formerly, grows very fast, and appears to enjoy excellent health. The French journals, which represent him to be affected with a chronic disease, are mistaken. The King, the Duke and Duchess of Angoulême, and even Mademoiselle de Berry, seldom appear in public. The Duchess of Berry is said to pass a very agreeable life at Gratz, where she receives all the nobility of the capital of Styria. It is thought she will not return to Brandeis, although her effects, and several works of art, of great value, are there.

The cause of the separation which has lately taken place between a celebrated literary M.P. and his lady, is not that which has been assigned by some journals, but was produced alone by incompatibility of temper: neither party having any other cause of complaint.

Prince Paul Lieven is about to proceed to Paris, for the purpose of escorting his mother, the Princess Lieven, to this country. The Princess is expected to remain in the metropolis, on a visit to her fashionable friends for the season.

Charles X. is negotiating with Count Nicholas Esterhazy, for the purchase of the estate of Papa, in Lower Hungary.

The Duke of Portland will proceed to Lisbon in a few days, in his yacht, the Clown, on a visit to Lord and Lady Howard de Walden.

Gaieties.—The opening of the new Hall of the Goldsmith's Company was celebrated by a brilliant assembly on Wednesday evening, including his Majesty's Ministers, several of the Foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, and a long list of the Nobility and Gentry.—The Duke of Devonshire gave a grand dinner on Tuesday to the Landgravine of Hesse Homberg and a select party of the Nobility. After the dinner the whole suite of rooms was thrown open for the reception of about 500 of the principal Nobility and Gentry. His Grace had an assembly last night.—Count Pozzo di Borgo gave a grand dinner on Sunday evening at Ashburnham House, to the Duke of Wellington and a select party of the Nobility. His Excellency will give another party to the Cabinet Ministers to-morrow.—Mrs. Beilby Thompson gave a ball on Wednesday evening to the juvenile branches of the Nobility, at her mansion in Berkeley square.—Lord Suffield entertained a select party at dinner on Thursday, at his residence in Lower Grosvenor-street.—Lady Antrobus gave a concert on Monday, at her mansion in Hyde Park.—Sir Robert Peel will resume his grand dinners next week, at his mansion in Whitehall Gardens.—The Assembly at Almack's, which was to have taken place on Wednesday last, was postponed till next Wednesday.

Steeple chasing is now so fashionable that two ladies, one wife to a Field Officer of a regiment in Dublin, rode one of these break-neck races near the Curragh, on Monday.

Lieut. Gen. Sir H. Vivian and his lady have returned to their residence in Pall-mall from Paris.

British Auxiliary Legion.—We have not space for a very long letter which has appeared in several papers this week, from General Evans to the Electors of Westminster, in regard to his absence from his parliamentary duties, and in which letter he states in justification for his absence, that he is engaged in forwarding the same cause of which they have always been the warmest and most powerful advocates. It appears that the British Legion at present consists of 43 Field Officers, 90 Captains, 179 Subalterns, 59 Staff, 146 Drummers, 396 Serjeants, 7,209 rank and file, and 745 horses. Of these about 1,000 are convalescents; but there are 6,009 well disciplined troops. The French Legion is about to be augmented by the immediate addition of 5,000 men; and the Portuguese auxiliary troops amount to 8,000. A correspondence has taken place between General Evans and General Cordova, relative to five Englishmen, composing part of the band of the legion, who were captured by the Carlists soon after the arrival of the legion in Spain, and whose lives, they being non-combatants, have been spared. They are detained prisoners in great misery at the village of Lasarno; but fifteen or sixteen other soldiers of the legion, who have been taken at different times, have all been certainly shot, by order of Don Carlos, except two, whose lives were spared at the intercession of Baron de Heber. Gen. Evans, on learning that the five musicians had been spared, wrote to Cordova, to request him to procure their release in exchange for some Carlists, as an exchange of prisoners frequently takes place. Cordova, in his answer, announces that he immediately sent a proposal to exchange the British soldiers to the enemy's Com.-in-Chief, and there the matter rests. We learn, however, with great satisfaction, from this correspondence, that the British legion has always treated the insurgents who have fallen into their hands with great kindness, and that both the Generals express great detestation at the unnecessary bloodshed which has caused the civil war in Spain to excite the indignation of all Europe.

The prospect is now clearer and more distinct of active intervention by the British Cabinet in the affairs of Spain, and should the civil war in that country be protracted another month, orders will issue for an expedition to embark in support of the Queen's cause, to be composed of four Regts. of the line, two of Light Cavalry and a brigade of Horse Artillery. They are to be quartered at San Sebastian, Bilbon, and Santander, as a corps of observation, and if urgently required to co-operate with the British Legion and the Queen's troops.—Irish Paper.

The Court.

The King gave a grand dinner at Windsor Castle on Saturday to the Knights Grand Crosses of the Order of the Bath. The Knights appeared in their respective uniforms, wearing the collars of the Order, and were received at the principal entrance to the Castle, and ushered into St. George's Hall, from whence, at a quarter to eight o'clock, his Majesty, preceded by the Lord Steward, and followed by the Duke of Cumberland, Prince George of Cambridge, Prince Ernest, and the other Knights Grand Crosses, &c., proceeded to the Waterloo Chamber, where the banquet was given. The Knights Grand Crosses present were—

The Duke of Cumberland, Prince Ernest of Hesse Philippsthal, Lord de Saumarez, Lord Howden, the Duke of Wellington, Sir G. B. Barlow, Viscount Beresford, Lord Hill, Lord Cowley, Sir E. Paget, Lord Stuart de Rothesay, Marquis of Londonderry, Marquis of Anglesey, Sir W. Clinton, Sir C. Colville, Sir J. Kempt, Sir G. Drummond, Sir G. T. Walker, Lord Haytesbury, Lord Howard of Effingham, Earl of Rosslyn, Sir C. Bagot, Sir G. Martin, Sir Thomas Hamilton, Sir H. Neale, Sir J. Oswald, Sir F. J. Lamb, Sir S. Canning, Sir T. B. Martin, Sir J. H. Whitshed, Sir P. C. H. Durham, Sir W. Houston, Sir E. Barnes, Lord Strafford, Sir R. Stopford, Sir R. C. Ferguson, Sir T. Williams, Sir W. Lumley, Sir J. W. Gordon, Sir T. M. Hardy, Viscount Palmerston, Sir D. Gould, Sir J. Malcolm, Sir G. Anson, Sir T. Dallas, Sir H. Taylor, Earl of Munster, Sir J. Wells, Sir W. H. Pringle, Lord Beauclerk, and Sir G. Moore.

Several Knights Grand Crosses of the Royal Hanoverian Guelphic Order were also present. Various toasts alluding to the Order of the Bath were drunk in the course of the evening, and salutes were fired by the Royal Artillery from the terrace of the Castle.

His Majesty's levee on Wednesday was attended by the following Naval and Military officers:—

"The wild Albanian, kutled to the knee," walks rough the streets of Corfu, looking unlike and superior every thing about him. I met several in returning to e boat. Their gait is very lofty, and the snow-white ktanilla, or kirtle, with its thousand folds, sways from le to side as they walk with a most showy effect. Lord yron was very much captivated with these people, hose capital (just across the Strait from Corfu) he sited once or twice in his travels through Greece. Those I have seen are all very tall, and have thin prominent features, with keen eyes, and limbs of the most uscular proportions. The common English soldiers ook like brutes beside them.—Willis's Paintings.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 18th April.—Lord MELBOURNE moved the second reading of the Municipal Reform (Ireland) Bill. Lord LYNDHURST stated it was not his intention to oppose the second reading, as he thought it should be considered in committee. He should, however, move certain amendments in committee similar to those moved in the other House by Lord Francis Egerton. The Marquises of Lansdowne and Clanricarde supported the Bill, and the Earls of Mansfield, Falmouth, Winchilsea, Roden, and Ripon, opposed it. The Bill was read a second time. Lord LYNDHURST gave notice that, on the motion for going into committee, either he or some other Noble Lord would move an instruction to the committee, embodying the views he had stated.

TUESDAY, 19th April.—The Cheltenham and Great Western Railway Bill was read a second time, and referred to a select committee.—Lord DUNCANNON presented returns connected with the Constabulary Force in Ireland.—In answer to a question from the Earl of Haulwicke, the Earl of MINTO stated that it was the intention of Government to suppress the Naval College at Portsmouth after the present year.—The Benefices, Plurality, and Clergy Residence, &c. Bill, was read a second time. The Mutiny, the Marine Mutiny, the Slavery Abolition, and a number of Private Bills, were severally read a second time.

WEDNESDAY, 20th April.—The Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Bill was read a third time and passed.

THURSDAY, 21st April.—The Mutiny Bills were read a third time and passed.—A lengthy conversation ensued on the subject of the Irish Constabulary Bill. Lord ELLENBOROUGH, the Duke of WELLINGTON, and other Noble Lords, stated that the returns of the expenses of the constabulary force were not accurate. They considered it impossible that the Bill should be passed without some fair amount of the expense as it had been, and an estimate of the future expense. Lord DUNCANNON said the returns were as accurate as they could be made under the circumstances; and Lord MELBOURNE added, that if any Noble Lord would point out any deficiency, they would endeavour to supply it.—The Earl of MINTO stated he had received a copy of the letter sent to Lord J. Hay, which, if wished for, he would lay upon the table. The Marquis of LONDONDERRY thought it desirable that it should be laid upon the table as a record.

FRIDAY, 22d April.—The Marquis of LONDONDERRY complained of a letter which had appeared in the public journals on the affairs of Spain, and which was stated to have been written by Lieut.-General Evans.—The Earl of WINCHILSEA moved for a return of the persons returned by the Judges to serve the office of High Sheriffs of the different counties in Ireland, together with a list of the number of those actually appointed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 18th April.—Mr. CLAY, after stating that the promoters of the Great Northern Railway Bill had failed to comply with the standing orders of the House, moved—"That the committee on the Bill be revived, and that the petition which he had presented from the owners and occupiers of land on the line might be referred to it."—Sir J. GRAHAM opposed the motion. After some conversation as to whether the standing orders had been complied with or not, Mr. Clay withdrew his motion.—Lord J. RUSSELL stated it to be the opinion of Government that it was not expedient in the present session to bring in a series of measures comprising all the subjects of the Report of the Irish Poor Law Commissioners; but he was not prepared to say that there might not be parts of the report which ought to be taken into consideration with a view to some practical measure.—On the motion that the House resolve itself into a committee on the Registration of Voters Bill, Mr. T. DUNCOMBE moved an instruction to the committee to introduce a clause for the repeal of that part of the 27th sec. of the Reform Act, requiring the payment of poor-rates and assessed taxes as a qualification for voting in boroughs. The Attorney-General opposed the amendment, and Mr. Warburton, Mr. Hume, and others, supported it. On a division it was lost by a majority of 103.—The House then went into committee on the Bill, and the several clauses were agreed to after considerable discussion, and after several amendments had been negatived.

TUESDAY, 19th April.—On the third reading of the Dublin Steam Packet Company's Bill being moved, Sir M. S. STEWART moved as an amendment that the Bill be read a third time that day six months. A lengthy discussion ensued, and on a division, the Bill was lost by a majority of 54, the numbers being for the third reading 120, against it 174.—On the motion of Mr. HARVEY, the House was called over, preparatory to his bringing forward his motion on the Pension List.—In answer to a question from Mr. Buckingham, the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER stated that his intention in regard to the stamp-duty to be imposed on newspapers was, that he should reduce the stamp-duty to a penny per newspaper for what might be considered the largest sized paper, not being what would be called a double sheet.—Mr. D. W. HARVEY moved, "That a select committee be appointed to revise each pension specified in a return ordered to be printed on 28th June, 1835, with a view to ascertain whether the continued payment thereof is justified by the circumstances of the original grant, or the condition of the parties now receiving the same, and to report thereon to the House."—Lord J. RUSSELL contended that no case had been made out which ought to induce Parliament to break the compact made with his Majesty at the commencement of his reign; that the inquiry sought was not called for by any party in the country, and that the course proposed, if adopted, would be productive of much private mischief. He should therefore decidedly vote against the motion.—A debate ensued, in the course of which Mr. WARD declared that though he had entered the House with a strong feeling against the pension list, he had changed his opinion upon the subject, and now looked upon the compact entered into with the King as inviolable. Against the motion, 268; in favour of it, 146. Majority, 122.

WEDNESDAY, 20th April.—On the motion for the further consideration of the Grand Junction Railway Bill being made, Lord G. SOMERSET moved, as an amendment, that the Bill be recommitted. The House divided—for the amendment, 106; against it, 43. A long conversation ensued on an objection taken to the vote of Sir S. Whalley, who, it was stated, had a direct interest in the Bill. Sir Samuel admitted that he was a shareholder, and it appearing that the general run of the decisions in such cases was against their admission, his vote was disallowed. Mr. GROTE remarked that the discussion showed that committees were not proper tribunals for deciding on questions of great pecuniary interest; and Lord J. RUSSELL admitted, that the manner of conducting the private business of the House should be seriously considered, with the view to an alteration in the system. —Mr. HUME inquired if Sir F. Lamb, who had been absent from Austria for sixteen months, received the full amount of his salary and allowances during that period. Lord PALMERSTON said it was a rule for Ambassadors who were absent from the Court where they were directed to attend to forfeit half their salary.—The remainder of the evening was exclusively occupied with the discussion of Mr. P. M. STEWART'S motion for an address to his Majesty, to order a diplomatic agent to be forthwith sent to the free and independent state of Cracow. The motion was opposed by Ministers, and ultimately withdrawn.

THURSDAY, 21st April.—On the third reading of the London Grand Junction Railway Bill being moved, Mr. WILKS presented a petition from Mr. M'William, a magistrate of Middlesex, who complained that 1,000*l.* had been offered to his wife, and subsequently to himself, by a Member of the House, to induce him to refrain from opposing the contemplated line of railroad. Sir S. WHALLEY denied the imputation, if intended for him, and entered into some details explanatory of the circumstance alluded to in the petition. The Bill was then read a third time.—Sir ANDREW AGNEW moved for leave to bring in a Bill for the better observance of the Sabbath. Sir O. MOSLEY seconded the motion, and in doing so rebuked the House severely for the levity with which so grave a subject was received. Mr. GISBORNE denied that this was a religious question, and moved the previous question. Mr. O'CONNELL contended that the Sabbath was better kept in England than in other countries, and that there was no possibility of improving the manner of keeping it by legislation. The House divided—For bringing in the Bill, 200; against it, 82.—The remainder of the evening was occupied in the discussion of resolutions brought forward by Mr. Hardy in regard to the Carlow election. They were to the effect that an agreement in writing was entered into between D. O'Connell and A. Raphael to return the latter to Parliament, to which agreement N. A. Vigors was a [illegible] nisant and a consenting party, and that the entering into or consent to such an agreement was a high breach of the privileges of the House. Mr. O'CONNELL declined entering into the details of the transaction, but rested his defence on the report of the committee. Mr. RIDLEY COLBORNE, chairman of the committee, was satisfied that the report to which the committee had come was a just one. Lord F. EGERTON took the same view of the question. After a few words from Sir R. Ferguson, Mr. Barnaby, and Mr. Warburton, Lord J. RUSSELL entered into a long survey of the charges brought against Mr. O'Connell, and stated that in his opinion they were all "trumpery," but that the charge in regard to the baronetcy was, "after all, the most trumpery, the most frivolous of the whole." He concluded by moving a series of resolutions, which were an echo of the report of the committee on the Carlow election. Lord STANLEY and Mr. Sergeant WILDE then addressed the House, after which Col. CONOLLY moved the adjournment of the debate, which was agreed to.

FRIDAY, 22d April.—Hodge's Divorce Bill was read a second time.—Sir W. GEARY moved the second reading of the Deptford and Crayford Canal Bill. Captain ALSAGER moved that it be read a second time that day six months—For the second reading, 113; for the amendment, 42. The Bill was then read a second time. —Lord J. RUSSELL said the report of the Metropolitan Police Committee was under consideration. Sir R. PEEL strongly recommended the Commissioners to the Noble Lord's consideration; their duties had been most arduous, and their remuneration had been fixed on an extremely low scale.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL said a Bill on the subject of imprisonment for debt would be introduced by the Lord Chancellor.—The adjourned debate on Mr. Hardy's resolutions was resumed.—Sir F. POLLOCK did not impute to Mr. O'Connell any corrupt motives, but considered the letter to Mr. Raphael, in which the price to be paid for his election was named, was a breach of the privilege of Parliament. Mr. WARD defended the conduct of Mr. O'Connell. Mr. LAW agreed in the view of the question taken by Sir F. Pollock. Sir C. B. VERE supported the original resolutions. Sir E. WILMOT, Mr. D. W. HARVEY, and Mr. GROTE opposed them. Sir J. GRAHAM supported the original resolutions. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER supported the amendment. Sir R. PEEL was in favour of the original motion. For the amendment, 243; for the original motion, 169; majority against Mr. Hardy's resolutions, 74. Lord STANLEY then moved a resolution that the agreement to appropriate money, as done in this case, was a dangerous precedent, and calculated to subvert the freedom of election. Mr. WARBURTON and Lord J. RUSSELL opposed the resolution—For Lord Stanley's resolution, 166; against it, 238; majority, 72.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence.

FRANCE.—The plan of forming a camp in the environs of Rocroy seems to be finally given up. Col. Aupick, chief of the staff of the first military division, had set out to examine the ground fit for a camp, and which can be had for that purpose in the vicinity of Compeign and St. Omer. The government renounces the plan of sending General Moline Saint Yon to the head-quarters of Cordova. This mission is confided for the present to Capt. Seuhilly, Secretary to the Committee of Infantry and Cavalry, who will shortly set out for Navarre.

SPAIN.—The French Government is affording facilities for the recruiting 8,000 troops of the line into the Foreign Legion, and their employment in the service of Spain. A large supply of cavalry horses, and other materials of war, will be made to the Spanish Government from the same quarter.—By tidings from Valencia, dated the 1st, the town was still in affright from the vicinity of Cabrera, who had entered Liria by surprise, a town on the same river with Valencia. Cabrera had massacred all found in the town.—Evaristo San Miguel, Chief of Cordova's staff, has written a work to prove the impossibility of reducing the Carlists.—Up to 1st April the British Legion had lost forty officers, and upwards of seven hundred men, principally from sickness.

Some sensation has been created among the speculators upon Spanish affairs, by a report that the city and port of Lequieto had surrendered to the Carlists. It is not, however, quite certain, that the island has actually capitulated, although an inventory of the military effects, cannons, &c., has been set forth in a despatch from Eguia. According to this account, the capture has been considerable, and at a very trifling loss to the assailants—50 killed and wounded. Other accounts state, that the firing was continued at a period subsequent to the reported surrender.

PORTUGAL.—Prince Ferdinand of Saxe Gotha arrived at Lisbon on the 8th inst.; and the marriage ceremony [illegible] Queen was to take place on the following day. The young Prince is stated to have made a favourable first impression upon his future subjects. Whilst he was still disembarking, however, the Cortes were debating with considerable acrimony the subject of his appointment to the office of Commander-in-Chief. A report has reached Paris, from Lisbon, that Campos had annulled the decree for converting the 5 per cents. to fours, and was in consequence obliged to resign. Whether true or false, it is believed that the Ministry must break up.

SWEDEN.—The Duchess of Leuchtenberg, mother of the Crown Princess, with her daughter and son-in-law, the hereditary Prince and Princess of Hohenzollern-Hechingen, are expected at Stockholm on a visit at the beginning of the summer. There will be a camp of 10,000 or 12,000 men on the Ladugaerdsgaerd on the occasion, from the 19th June to the 5th July, under the command of the Crown Prince.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—On Tuesday evening there was a brilliant and crowded attendance at this house, to witness the inimitable performance of Grisi in the arduous character of Norma. The acting and singing of this accomplished artiste was received throughout with the most enthusiastic plaudits. The duet between Grisi and Assandri, commencing "Si fino all'ore estreme," was rapturously encored. Assandri has fully confirmed the favourable impression she made on her debut, on Saturday. The ballet of Rossignol, and the first scene of Rossini's Barbiere, concluded the entertainment. The theatre was honoured with the presence of her Majesty, the Duchess of Kent, Princess Victoria, Prince George of Cambridge, Prince Ernest of Philippsthall, and Prince Edward of Carolath. The Queen, with her accustomed punctuality, entered the box in time for the commencement of the performances.

COVENT-GARDEN.—The new three act drama, called Don Juan of Austria, now acting at this theatre, is a translation from a French drama which is performed nightly in Paris, and is, we are informed, highly attractive there. The work of adaptation has been rather skilfully accomplished; and as the drama possesses no small interest, we think it will prove an attractive piece for a short time. The characters were very well sustained throughout, particularly the repulsive part of Philip the Second of Spain, by Mr. G. Bennett. Mr. Dale sustained the part of Juan with ability; it is well suited to the actor, and is the best thing he has done as yet, excepting his Virginius. Mr. Pritchard played Charles the Fifth—watch-maker, monk, and monarch, very respectably; as did Mr. Tilbury that of Don Quexada. Miss Faucit has advanced in favour by her able personation of the part of Florinda. The scene in which she repels the attack made on her person by Philip, and proclaims herself a JEWESS, was very spiritedly and finely acted, and met with three hearty rounds of applause, a compliment richly due to both performers. The denouement is the worst portion of the play; why was not justice done on the guilty party? The death of Florinda was not required. Miss Murray over-acted the little part of Pedro, but looked exceedingly well in her Page's costume. The drama was well received throughout, and Miss Faucit loudly called for at its conclusion. We are informed the work of adaptation has been done by Mr. Oshaldiston. The new piece this evening is a translation from the French by Mr. Oshaldiston.

LYCEUM.—A new interlude, called The Captain is not a-Miss, produced at this theatre on Monday evening, is a translation from the French, and is altogether a very meagre and common place affair. The part of the assumed Captain was assigned to Mrs. Nisbett, and we must admit that we relished her less in it than in any character of this description in which we have seen her. There appears to be a rage among authors to write what are termed breeches characters for this lady; but if she will be guided by prudence and good sense, she will appear in male costume no more, unless for a part which is of sterling merit. The Captain Doring of Mr. Hemmings was one of the best acted parts in the piece; his exertions for the author are entitled to great praise. The landlord of the Black Eagle found a most humourous representative in Mr. Williams; and the landlord's daughter was cleverly acted by Miss Shaw, a young lady who has just started forth from among the choristers. There is a great deal of promise about this young lady; her acting, though quiet, is natural and pleasing, and she sings with a very pretty taste; time and study, with opportunity, will make her a good actress. The interlude was favourably received by a most elegant and crowded house, and will, we doubt not, run for a few evenings. We have omitted saying anything of Miss J. Mordaunt's first appearance because we do not approve of the character assigned her.

Law and Police.

The King v. the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.—Mr. John Jervis applied to the Court for a rule, calling on the Lords of the Admiralty to show cause why a mandamus should not be issued to them, commanding them to issue their warrant to the Accountant-General of the Navy Pay-Office, directing him to pay 394*l.* to Mrs. Ricketts, that being the balance of arrears of half-pay due to Capt. Beavan, of whose estate she was the administratrix. The affidavit on which his motion was founded stated that Beavan, some time before his death, became insane, and was taken to Hoxton madhouse, where officers of the Navy were received without any charge being made for attendance on them. In 1818 he was, with the rest of such officers, removed to Hasler establishment. During Capt. B.'s confinement, Mr. Hinxman, the proper officer of the Navy Pay-Office, received the half-pay of Capt. B., and soon after the removal to Hasler a letter was received from the Lords of the Admiralty, directing that a certain part of the half-pay of each officer then in Hasler establishment should be deducted, and retained on account of his maintenance there. The other part was at that time paid over to the daughter of the applicant, who was the wife of Capt. B. There was a letter signed "Walter Clifton," directing the amount of the deduction to be 1*s.* 6*d.* per day, and ordering the residue to be paid over to the family of each officer, or to be retained and given to him on his recovery. That letter was dated 22d June, 1818, and stated that the alteration was to commence from the first day of the then quarter. He died, and Mrs. Ricketts became his administratrix, under a will made by him before he became insane. She had applied to the various offices for the payment of the residue payable under the letter of Mr. Walter Clifton, and in the course of the applications several letters were written which admitted that the money was in the hands of the Accountant of the Navy Pay-Office; but after some difficulties arising as to the payment, there finally came a letter from Mr. Barrow, declaring the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty had received a communication from the Victualling Board: in consequence of which they found that if they admitted this claim they should have no less than many others of the same kind brought forward, and under these circumstances, they did not feel themselves authorised to incur the expenditure of so large a sum of money. Having thus established a clear legal claim to the money on the part of the administratrix, and having shown from their own letters that there had been retained a larger sum of money than was authorised to be retained by the Lords of the Admiralty, the Learned Counsel expressed his confidence that the rule would be granted. Mr. Justice Coleridge asked whether a half-pay officer had such a legal right to his half-pay as could be enforced in a court of justice? Mr. Jervis thought that he had, while he remained on the half-pay list. He knew that they might be struck out of the list by the Crown, without any statement of a cause, but while they remained there, he thought that they had a legal right. Lord Denman said that this was the point on which the Court felt at present some difficulty. The Court would not refuse the rule on account of the doubt which their Lordships entertained, but of course they could not grant it while they did entertain that doubt. They would look into the subject, and give their decision in a day or two.—Judgment postponed.

Literary Notices.

The Fellow Commoner. Three Volumes. Churton. This Tale, as acknowledged in the advertisement, a considerable portion of this work has appeared in "The Court Magazine," in a series of papers under the title of "Remarkable Escapes of a Predestinated Rogue," are out the less pleased to find the Rogue's adventures concentrated in three very agreeable volumes. The papers in the Magazine were much admired, and in their present form they cannot fail in being popular.

The Life of Rodney. By Lieutenant-General Mundy. James Carpenter and Son.

A new edition of a popular work, and, from its present form and price, additionally suitable as a class publication for the navy. The name of Rodney will be ever dear to the service, and this biography of the man, as well as narrative of his achievements (in the language of the gallant biographer) furnishes to the young seamen the model of a hero, at once admirable and instructive, for his constant study and imitation. We hope to see the admirable memoir of Collingwood in an edition to match the one before us; and we might add our wish in regard to several other valuable memoirs of naval and military men which, from their present high prices, are not generally available to the United Service.

The Royal Society of the Nineteenth Century. By A. B. Granville. Churchill.

DR. Granville gives a brief historical sketch of the Royal Society; he points out many abuses and incongruities, and suggests remedies, several of which at all events should have attention. We recommend every F.R.S. to read the work; it may induce individuals, who regard the institution, to assist in putting an end to evils that are impediments to what should be its objects; and further, the publication may lead to the better management of a society which, from its antiquity and the good it has done, deserves the support of every friend to science.

History of Austral-Asia. By R. M. Martin. J. Mortimer.

THIS is the second volume of what deserves to be, we hope is, a popular publication, "The British Colonial Library." The volume comprises New South Wales, Van Diemen's Land, Swan River, South Australia, &c. We have much pleasure in again complimenting Mr. Martin on his continual industry and admirable research ompiling such clear and comprehensive histories. As rary book, for reference in regard to statistical in- ation, nothing can be better than the present, but, over, many of its details are equally as entertaining structive to the general reader.

History and Antiquities of the Round Church of ttle Maplestead, Essex, formerly belonging to the nights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem; pre- ded by a Historical Sketch of the Crusades. By W. allen, F.S.A. John Weale.

Wallen has attentively studied Vertot, and the al writers on the Order of St. John; and has col- l and compressed from their publications the most rtant facts in the extraordinary and interesting y of this illustrious Ordar. To the antiquary, and who admire records of gallant achievements, this ne must have a particular charm. The church of e Maplestead belonged to the Knights, and its ry is given with much minuteness. The author oses to give the history of other Round Churches and ings formerly connected with the Order, and as we ve, notwithstanding the numerous works in relation Knights, there is still much valuable matter to be ered from old manuscripts, particularly as to the lish Language of the Order, we hope he will be en- ged to persevere in his task. The work is very ely illustrated.

specimen which has just reached us of a work r the above title gives promise of a production of ssing splendour and pictorial interest. Its general is similar to that of other works of a like nature have preceded it; but its style of execution, and cale on which it is to be got up (as evinced in the men before us), will give it an unquestioned supre- y over every previous publication of the kind. Imm- feature it is peculiar: the portraits are to be those of ervative statesmen alone. It will not be expected ws shall quarrel with this feature of Mr. Ryall's ; and if any of our contemporaries of the press d be disposed to do so, we cannot help thinking that nequalled beauty of the work will at once silence plaint, if it cannot command admiration. For our we most heartily congratulate Mr. Ryall on the ness, no less than on the good taste and good feeling is particular feature of his undertaking, and shall lend ur best aid accordingly, always provided (as we are entitled to expect from the artist's high reputation) the work will be executed in a style corresponding the specimen before us. The first part of the work include portraits of the Duke of Wellington, Lord lhurst, and Lord Wharncliffe, the specimen now d being an exquisite original portrait of Lord Lynd- , from a picture by A. Chalon. We shall look some anxiety to the first number of this most pro- g of all the pictorial works of the day, and if it cor- nd with the specimen now sent us, it will receive will richly merit, our warmest and most earnest ort. We observe that Mr. Ryall announces a second , to be published on alternate months with the nservative Portraits," from the nature of which we ipate for it even a greater degree of success than the oticed above. It is to depict "the Female Aristo- of Great Britain," and is to correspond in size, of execution, price, &c., with the companion work ale portraits. In this instance Mr. Ryall will, of e, repudiate all party feeling, and as the best pro- ons that have hitherto come from his hand have n his forte to lie in the depicture of female beauty ially, we look for even still more success from his s than in the case of the leading work, a specimen ich has called forth these remarks.

Anglo-Polish Harp, &c. By Jevan Jones. ckering.

Jones appears to be a very zealous politician; he thusiastic in support of the Poles, and many of his s are highly creditable to his literary talents.

ina and his Etat Major.—The ordinary dress of during his sojourn in Barcelona is an old redingote r of grey or blue cloth. His head-gear is an otter- cap. When engaged on some military enterprise oes not change his costume, but merely adds to it a triped cloak wrapped about him, in the manner of Catalan peasantry. On review days he dons a scarl- ired uniform of a colonel, and a round hat of a sla- fashion replaces the casquette. When he leaves ortress on some expedition, such as he contemplates. is moment, he mounts a grey mule—he is not over ual to horses—the redingote blue, and round hat, the being strapped on before him; this, with a leathern manteau and saddle-bags, entirely cover the flanks of palfrey. Then, last of all, the stirrups, which are the shortest imaginable, and raise up his knees to a line with the seat. Such is the splendid turn-out of Mina when equipped for the field. The officers of the etat major display much the same taste, with a spice of the dandy, which breaks out now and then. Some have three-corner hats of terrific dimensions placed on the head of each, after his manner; but for the most part all wear them drooping behind, or hanging back on the neck. Others have schakos, very low and ample above, garnished with capes, like a monk's hood, or rather en facon de goutti- ere. Uniforms of every colour and cliné may be seen mostly half buttoned, which we term debraillés, with shirt-collars reaching up to the eyes. Thongs of leather and sabbots (wooden shoes) serve for their stirrups, &c. Then for the soldiers, a ragged regiment in truth, with packs at their backs, but ill closed, from which peep out their tattered apparel (necessaries), with cafaroles and marmites, canteens and porridge-pots, piled up above them, whilst goat skins and flasks, full or empty, as chance wills it, swing by their sides.

The King.—Specimen of Singhalese opinion of his Majesty, extracted from a speech by a Singhalese Chief, at a meeting of natives, in Oct. last, at Colombo, for the purpose of thanking his Majesty and the Governor for the institution of the New Council:—"He who is adorned with a glory whose wide-spread lustre is as auspiciously bright as the milk ocean billows, the hoar-frost, quicksilver, the crystal mansion* of Siva, the Kunda flower (a kind of jasmine), the heavenly Ganges, camphor, the bright rounds of the atmosphere, garlands of pearls, and the white water-lily,*—he who is fatally attached to the worship of the Deity, and is surrounded by a host of conquering heroes like so many ankusas† to subdue the furious elephants, his enemies,—even William, our illustrious and powerful Sovereign, may he be blessed with long life. He who, like the moon in autumn, has risen in the bright heavens his royal lineage; he who is great, in whom the excellent qualities of tenderness, recollection, and fortitude, have fixed their abode; he who is endued with the triple power of royalty as resulting from majesty, perseverance, and counsel; who is devoted to the tenfold regal duties, as charity, &c., and who is the intelligent ruler of a vast portion of the earth,—even William, our illustrious and powerful Sovereign, may he be blessed with long life."

* The several things here enumerated are supposed by the Singhalese and other oriental poets to possess a very auspicious energy in their peculiar whiteness, capable of influencing the happiness of every creature that comes within sight of them.

† Hooks used for managing refractory elephants.

The attention of the members of the Naval and Military professions is called to the following copy of a letter which has been transmitted to Mr. George Franks, Surgeon, 90, Blackfriar's-road, the proprietor of "Franks' Specific Solution of Copaiba," from R. W. Meade, Esq., late Colonel Com. Rifle Brigade Columbian Service, and formerly Captain in H.M.'s 13th Lt. Dragoons:—"Sir, Having retired from active life, I feel a strong repugnance against appearing before the public in any character, but my reluctance has been overcome by a sense of the duty I owe to my fellow-beings, and the gratitude I feel towards you. Having served many years in H. M.'s army in India, and subsequently in the Columbian Forces, under the gallant but ill requited Bolivar, I contracted in those hot climates a disease, which has for years inflicted on me the most poignant sufferings; since, however, I have been fortunate enough to obtain an introduction to you, and having used your 'Solution of Copaiba' a few times, I have been relieved beyond my most sanguine expectations, and am now entirely free from pain, or the obstructions to which I was so many years a victim.

(Signed) "R. W. Meade.

"Waltham Green, 2nd Dec. 1835."

Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various cements to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin, &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them. Greig Thomson, 25, New Bond-street, has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

Small Boxes suitable for private Families.

MESSRS. PRATT beg to introduce their Newly-invented CIRCULAR EXTENDING TABLES to the notice of the Nobility and Gentry, and to solicit their inspection of the very simple construction by which the size can be adapted to any required changes. Messrs. Pratt's collection of Ancient Furniture has been increased by recent importations of MARQUETERIE and BOULE CABINETS and TABLES, Carved CHAIRS and CONSOLES, and PANNELLING for SALOONS, and some very rich VELVET DAMASKS, and TAPESTRY of the style of Louis XIV., and RARE CARVINGS in oak of the Gothic and Elizabethan periods.—47, New Bond-street, opposite Grosvenor-street.

PIANO FORTES BY BROADWOOD.

MR. BROWNE begs to announce to his Friends and the Public, that he has an extensive assortment of superior SECOND HAND PIANO FORTES by BROADWOOD, of every description. To those who may not have visited this establishment, Mr. Browne begs to state that the Piano-forte Repository, 27, Soho square, was established expressly for the sale of genuine instruments by that highly-esteemed maker, and that a greater number of Broadwood's Piano-fortes may be inspected here than at any other MUSICAL ESTABLISHMENT.
Broadwood's purchased or taken in exchange.
27, Soho-square.

ANGLING.—J. CHEEK, Fishing-Rod and Tackle Maker, No. 52, Strand, begs leave most respectfully to acquaint the Nobility, Gentry, and Anglers generally, that he has the largest assortment in London of the very best articles in trout, salmon, and other rods; patent fly and trolling-lines, winches, tackle cases, &c.; one gross of superior trout and salmon flies, from 2s. 4d. per dozen. Bait constantly kept. Lists of prices of upwards of one hundred articles forwarded, on applying, if by letter post paid. Orders from the country, with references in town, attended to with punctuality and despatch, and any article exchanged if not approved of. Country dealers supplied. Golden Perch, 52, Strand.

OF IMPORTANCE to INVALIDS.—ROBERT WISS very respectfully invites public attention to his PATENT PORTABLE WATER-CLOSETS, which an immense demand has proved to answer their intended purpose. In consequence of many complaints from his friends of having been imposed on by imitations of the above, which after a few months become useless, R. W. cautions the Public against the same, and requests them to observe that unless "R. Wiss, 33, Charing-cross," is printed on the basin, they are not genuine. To be seen at the Manufactory, 33, Charing cross, near the Admiralty. Price, from 21s.

CHOICE OF A SERVANT.

FAMILIES in want of really good Servants of every description, both Male and Female, will decidedly find their interest better consulted, and their object much sooner attained, by a visit to the DOMESTIC BAZAAR, No. 134, Oxford-street, near Hollis-street, established in 1820, than through the adoption of any other method whatever; as Domestics, with good characters, are in waiting to be hired from 10 to 5 o'clock.
Many persons are prejudiced against an Establishment for Hiring Servants; but if the Servant possess a good character, it certainly is perfect nonsense to suppose that it is injured by the readiest method having been taken to procure a situation.
N.B. It will be particularly advantageous to send for a Prospectus.

To the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public.—

Families of distinction and Visitors to the Metropolis at this Season, who frequently experience great difficulty in suiting themselves with FURNISHED or UNFURNISHED HOUSES, owing to the great demand, are respectfully informed every attention will be afforded in the House and Estate Agency Department of HENRY L. COOPER, in obtaining or disposing of the same, or in the Selling, Letting, or Valuing, any description of property in Town or Country.

From the central situations of the Establishments in their respective commanding localities, every facility is rendered to families honouring his house with their instructions, and offering the advantage of a double register usually replete with eligible properties.

The general introduction of PLATE GLASS for Windows, Carriages, Conservatories, Internal Decorations, &c., has induced H. L. C. to annex a Tariff of Sizes, adapted to those uses, with Prices exceedingly moderate, but of a quality not to be excelled; also is added an outline of his general business, comprising the Cabinet, Upholstery, and Decorative Departments, in each of which the most careful attention is paid both to quality and cost.

HENRY L. COOPER, Plate Glass and Furniture Warehouses, Nn. 93, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street, left hand side.

Among the variety of Articles above referred to, will be found LOOKING GLASSES of every denomination and size, varying from one foot to eighty feet and upwards; plate glass for windows, carriages, &c., which possess great advantages over crown, and when required for exportation, a considerable drawback obtained. Annexed are the Prices of Current Sizes of Plate Glass for Sashes, &c.

Or any sizes containing from 3 feet to 8 feet, at 9s. per foot; thus a plate being 30 inches by 18 inches, contains three feet nine inches superficial measure, and costs £1. 13s. 9d. as per above tariff. All under three feet superficial at a reduction.

CARVING AND GILDING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

In this department will be found a very elegant and extensive variety of Chimney and Pier Glass Frames, Cornices for Windows, Ornamental Tables and Furniture, and richly mounted Frames in various sizes for Portraits, Paintings, &c. Paintings and Prints mounted, framed, and re-gilt.

PAPER HANGING, AND INTERIOR DECORATIONS

in all its branches, from the most simple to the first style of elegance. A rich variety of new patterns on show.

IN THE UPHOLSTERY ARRANGEMENT,

the greatest attention is paid to unite elegance with economy in character for the drawing-room, boudoir, dining room, library, and bed-chambers, from the most quiet to the most costly styles In the various articles of chintzes, cornices, damasks, silks, &c. A great variety of the most splendid and novel styles are constantly on view of those qualities which can alone insure permanent satisfaction; the extreme disparity in prices in these articles mainly arises from the inferiority of the fabric.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND SOFA WORK

manufactured of the most seasoned materials. In the finish of Chairs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the materials used, and the workmanship. It may not be unworthy of remark that a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one half, but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious disappointment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manufacture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of unseasoned materials and unsound work (that cannot be detected by the casual observer), can never be of that service and durability so essential. H. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own premises, and has always on hand a large stock of well-seasoned materials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest possible rate and of a superior quality.

STEAM and SAILING VESSELS promptly fitted up with CABIN FURNITURE and PASSENGERS' REQUISITES.

SOLID and PORTABLE Furniture, Bedding, Musquito Hangers, &c., for Foreign Climates. Families going abroad will receive every information respecting the articles best adapted for their particular destinations.

Merchants, Captains, and Dealers, supplied with the utmost despatch, on the most liberal terms.

CARPETING

of the fabric especially made for the first Upholstery Houses, viz. Brussels, Kidderminster, and Venetian; also a few of the most admired velvet pile carpets, hearth-rugs, druggets, baize, floor-cloth, &c.

BEDDING, BLANKETS, &c.

well-seasoned, real Dantzic feathers, also equally prepared light downy feathers for second and third rate beds, elastic spring, hair, and wool mattresses; real Witney, fine Bath and York blankets; Marseilles quilts and counterpanes. In the article of bedding, blankets, &c., so essentially important to all, H. L. C. is determined that no trader shall supply them on better terms.

FUNERALS FURNISHED,

and conducted with the greatest propriety, and with every consistant regard to economy.

Families in the country may command the most approved taste by being waited on at home with patterns; and designs made on the spot, calculated to harmonise with the plans, proportions, and decorations of the rooms; and their orders delivered and fixed on terms forming a very small addition to the first cost, by the system adopted by this concern.

With this short enumeration of the leading articles of his trade, and the very favourable terms on which he undertakes to supply them, HENRY L. COOPER appeals to all classes for a continuation of that flattering preference hitherto afforded his house, 93, Bishopsgate Street Within; Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street.

H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to the Address. Also, that any article will be exchanged should a fair objection arise, thus securing the Public from imposition.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed; rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitable have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in nothing selling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found unalleviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable, it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off, for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby, thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.

Mr. S. J. VAN BUTCHELL, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints, without cutting, ruistic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Pralock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store street, Bedford-square.

32, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, and No. 99, Ludgate-hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists,

respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 99, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly effectious, and SOFTLY WEDGE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH. INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE,

introduced by S. DICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Dickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vells, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, DICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

MOST IMPORTANT INFORMATIO

BY HIS MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

G. MINTER begs to inform the Nobility, Gentry, &c., that has invented an EASY CHAIR that will recline and elevate itself, into an innumerable variety of positions, without the le trouble or difficulty to the occupier; and there being no chissery, rack, catch, or spring, it is only for a person sitting the chair merely to wish to recline or elevate themselves, and t seat and back take any desired inclination, without requiring t least assistance or exertion whatever, owing to the weight on t seat acting as a counterbalance to the pressure against the ba by the application of a self adjusting leverage; and for which has obtained His Majesty's Letters Patent. G. M. particula recommends this invention to invalids, or to those who may ha lost the use of their hands or legs, as they are by it enabled vary their position without requiring the use of either to obta that change of position, from its endless variety, so necessa for the relief and comfort of the afflicted.

The Chair is made by the Inventor only, at his Wholesale C tunel and Upholstery Manufactory, 38, Gerrard-street, Soho. M. is confident an Inspection only is required to be convinced its superiority over all others.

PURIFICATION OF SEA WATER.

AT A GENERAL MEETING of SHARE-HOLDERS of the PATENT PURIFYING SEA WATER COMPANY, held at Radley's New London Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, on Wednesday the 20th April, at Twelve o'clock, convened by Public Advertisement, to take into consideration the Reports of the Directors and Committee, and to determine on the adoption of such measures as the shareholders then present may resolve upon, SIR JOHN PHILIPPART in the Chair.

On the motion of Mr. Blackmore, seconded by Mr. Medley, Resolved unanimously,—That the Report of the Committee be withdrawn.

On the motion of Mr. Burnaud, seconded by Mr. Brown, Resolved unanimously,—That the Report of the Directors presented on the 9th December, 1835, be approved.

Resolved unanimously,—That the Accounts of the Company, as made up by Mr. Wells, the Secretary, and presented on the 9th December, 1835, be approved and passed, and signed by the Chairman of this Meeting.

Resolved unanimously,—That the best thanks of the Proprietors be given to the Chairman and the Directors for their great exertions on behalf of the Company.

The Chairman then read the plan for the formation of a new Company.

Resolved unanimously,—That the plan for the new Company, as read by the Chairman, be adopted.

Resolved unanimously,—That, it being on many accounts desirable to introduce various alterations for completing the objects for which this Company was originally formed, it is advisable that a Committee of seven Shareholders be appointed to carry the same into effect; and that, as a preliminary measure, all situations at present held in the Company are vacated, and that the following gentlemen form the Committee:—

Sir John Philippart,
Richard Annesley Sparkes, Esq.
Joseph Barker, Esq.
John Robert Ogilvy, Esq.
W. H. Burnaud, Esq.
Thomas Sedgwick, Esq.
John Barwise, Esq.

Resolved unanimously,—That it be an instruction to the Committee to consider and adopt such resolutions as may be necessary to effect the following objects,—First, the securing to such of the original Shareholders as within fourteen days from this day shall notify their wish to receive it, the full amount of the Subscriptions paid on their Shares. Second, the proper and necessary arrangements for carrying on the Company.

Resolved unanimously,—That the thanks of the Meeting be given to Mr. Slothert for his conduct in placing the Company in its present favourable situation.

Resolved unanimously,—That the foregoing resolutions be published in the London Gazette, in all the morning and in three evening newspapers, and in such other manner as the Committee may deem fit.

JOHN PHILIPPART, Chairman.

Resolved unanimously,—That the thanks of the Meeting be given to Sir John Philippart for his noble and polite conduct in the chair.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches and Wine, in Pots, 1*s.* and 2*s.* each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an ideal of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herrings by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use; in Bottles, 2*s.* and 4*s.* each warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—INJUNCTIONS.

CAUTION.—It having been represented to Messrs. DELCROIX and Co. Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, that frequent disappointments were occurring to the Nobility and Gentry, in purchasing from shops having the appearance of respectability, counterfeit articles, bearing not only similar labels to their own, but even their name and address, Messrs. Delcroix and Co. have taken necessary steps to enable them to expose the parties so acting, and they have the pleasure of informing their patrons and friends that Injunctions have been granted by the above Court, against Messrs. JOHN GRANALL & Co. (late Price and Gosnell), of Regent-street, and 3 Kings' Court, Lombard-street,

Mr. JOHN CRILLY, Perfumer, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Mr. ROBERT RAYENNEY, wholesale Perfumer, Crown-street, Finsbury-square; restraining them from vending imitations of Messrs. DELCROIX and Co.'s much esteemed Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs. And the trade and others are hereby cautioned against similar practices, as Messrs. Delcroix and Co. are determined to proceed against all parties resorting to any means of injuring the great reputation their perfumes have acquired, not only in this country, but in every part of Europe, India, and all parts of the Continent.

Purchasers are requested to be careful to notice that their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, will in future bear the signature of J. Delcroix on the labels, and the name and address "Delcroix, 158, New Bond-street," on the back of the Bottles.

TO EPICURES.

CROSSE AND BLACKWELL'S FLORENCE CREAM, for Dressing Salads, Lobsters, &c. in one Minute.—This delicious Cream is most justly acknowledged a most superior preparation for Salads, Lobsters, and all Kinds of Shell Fish, as a Salad after the Parisian manner, which is universally allowed to surpass all others, can be obtained in one minute. To Families and Hotel Keepers it will be found very economical and convenient, as it only requires the addition of Vinegar to obtain a rich and delicious dressing, and immediately fit for use.

CROSSE and BLACKWELL'S Celebrated SOHO SAUCE for Fish, Game, Steaks, Made Dishes, &c.

DINMORE'S ESSENCE OF SHRIMPS will be found far superior to the Essence of Anchovies for every description of boiled and fried fish, being of a more mild, rich, and delicious flavour.

TO EPICURES, &c.

DINMORE'S SHRIMP PASTE, a superior Delicacy to any thing yet offered to the Public, for Breakfast, Sandwiches, &c.

The above to be had of most Sauce Venders throughout the Kingdom, and wholesale of the Proprietors, 11, King-street, Soho.

DISTRESSING CASE.—The Widow of JOHN CARDEN STRONGE, of No. 61, Commercial Road, Waterloo Bridge, late Captain in the 58th Regiment of Foot, is left with Four Young Children in the deepest distress, and implores the assistance of the benevolent to re-establish her in a small business. On her husband's dying in embarrassed circumstances, his Widow petitioned His Majesty's Council for some pension, but was informed that, as Captain Strong had taken the regulation difference when he retired on half-pay, she was ineligible. In this state of destitution, a few friends came forward and contributed sufficient to set her up in a small Shop, by which she obtained her support, until she met with an accident which was nearly proving fatal, and confined her to a bed of sickness so long, that she was obliged to sell her little stock to procure immediate necessaries. On her case being represented lately to the Secretary at War, he has been pleased to order a donation of £20 to be paid her from the Compassionate Fund; but this, as well as the donations of a few private Individuals, has been expended in discharging her arrears of rent, and redeeming the necessary articles she was obliged to pledge during her long illness. She is now out of debt; but relies only on a generous public to relieve her from the mortifying alternative of an application to the parish, and enable her once more to maintain her family. Mr. Rule, No. 8, Guildford-street or at the Judges' Chambers, Serjeants'-Inn, will give every information respecting the affecting circumstances of her case, and will receive any contributions on her behalf.

Subscriptions will be received by the following Bankers — Messrs. Hoare, Fleet-street; by Messrs. Gosling, Fleet-street; by Messrs. Willis, Percevals, and Co., Lombard-street; at the Office of the Record, Red Lion Court, Fleet-street; by Messrs. Rivingtons, Waterloo Place; and by Messrs. Lawries, Army Agents, No. 18, Charles-street, St. James's-square, who are personally acquainted with the case.

OFFICERS OF THE NAVY are respectfully invited to inspect MERRIMAN'S NEW PATENT HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEAD, forming a Ship Sofa and Swing Cot. The superiority of this Patent over all other Inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers. It possesses superior cleanliness and durability, with great facility of erection and removal, can be swung as a Cot, or securely fastened to the Deck as a standing Couch in a minute, and is admirably adapted to a warm station, not requiring a Mattress.—To be procured only at the Patentees' Cabin Furniture Manufactory, No. 97, Leadenhall-street, London.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 10 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

MILITARY and Naval Gentlemen, Writers, Cadets, Midshipmen, and Families, are respectfully invited to Messrs. W. H. ABLETT and CO.'s, 37, Cornhill, Clothiers and General Outfitters, where every article is charged at the wholesale price, for Cash only.—Calico shirts, 6s. per dozen; ditto, 12s. and 14s. per dozen; good ditto, 18s., 21s., 24s., and 30s. per dozen; ditto, with linen collars, wristbands, and lawn fronts, from 33s. per dozen for the finest quality, a large assortment of long-cloth and Irish linen ditto; striped sea shirts, 18s. per dozen; printed ditto, 24s. per dozen and upwards; cotton half-hose, 3s. 6d. per dozen; handkerchiefs, 3s. 6d. per dozen; silk ditto, 6s. per dozen; dress collars, 3s. 6d. per dozen; cotton caps, 2s. per dozen, a great variety of boys' and girls' under-linen; ladies' chemises 5s. per dozen; ditto, 12s. and 18s., good ditto, 21s. and 24s. per dozen; ladies' night-caps, 6s. per dozen; night-gowns, 18s.; long ditto, 24s., 30s., and 36s. per dozen; sheets, 2s. per pair; pillow cases; linen towels, 6s. per dozen; gentlemen's wearing-apparel made up in the first style; a great variety of jean jackets and trowsers, from 7s. 6d. per suit; superior ditto, made to measure, 18s. and 20s. per suit; duck, drill, kerseymere, &c., ditto, in great variety, bedding, from 3s. 6d. each; cots, hammocks, blankets, counterpanes, trunks, sea chests, and all kinds of cabin furniture, &c.

SHEFFIELD PLATED WARE.—A large assortment of various Articles, comprising Cruet frames, Liqueur frames, Candlesticks, Candelabras, Plain or Chased Round Waiters of all sizes, Oblong Tea Trays, Epergnes and Plateaux, Corner Dishes and Covers, Meat Dishes and Dish Covers, &c., at the prices as in Sheffield, may be selected from a Warehouse fitted up for the purpose. A. B. SAVORY and SONS, Goldsmiths, No. 14, Cornhill, opposite the Bank.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS.—The superiority of this Patent over all other Inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers and Gentlemen of the Civil Service. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture.

An Inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED, and where all other descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied on the lowest Terms.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. the East India Company.

PORTSMOUTH, April 29.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Saturday, April 23—Lightning st. returned from Lisbon with a mail. She left on the 16th; has since gone to the river. Quail was towed into harbour by a Jersey sloop. She is in a miserable plight, under a jury mast; bulwarks, round-house, hammock-rails, &c., washed away. Orders have now been given that she is to be paid off, but remain in her present state alongside a hulk. Buffalo commissioned by Capt. Hindmarsh for South Australia; she is to be allowed a crew of 93, including 20 marines. Rapid, with Lt.-Col. Light, was to sail from the river on Tuesday. The officer in charge of her, Lieut. Field, R.N., has an appointment from Gov. Hindmarsh, and the vessel will be employed as a colonial cruiser, under command of Mr. Sadler, at the expense of the settlers, or sent home with spar timber. Buffalo will not sail until the end of June. 160 settlers are to go in her. Sunday—Salamander st., with 2 cos. of marines, from Woolwich, under Capts. Powell and Pratt put into harbour. She took on board 30 marines out of the Britannia, and proceeded to Santander about 5 in the afternoon. Maj. Owen, R.M., a Capt., 3 Subalterns, and 80 non-commissioned officers and privates went from Plymouth in the Phœnix on Tuesday last, and yesterday (28th) the rest with an officer proceeded in the coast in the Comet. There are but 40 duty men left at Plymouth. Tuesday—Pantaloon returned from Sheerness with more seamen for general service. Pantaloon is to proceed to the coast of Africa. Her crew has been reduced to 56. Moira transport, Lieut. P. Hay, with the headquarters of 7th Fusileers came up to Spithead after a tedious passage of 6 weeks from Malta. On Thursday, while working into harbour to land the troops, she got on the Hamilton Bank off Southsea, and flat-boats were sent to take the men and their heavy baggage out. Moira floated off at high water last night. Lieut.-Col. Farquarson is in command of the reg. Wednesday—Messenger st. arrived from Cork, Milford, Falmouth, and the western ports, with upwards of 150 volunteer seamen; between 70 and 80 having entered for the Asia, Hercules, and Swift packet. Messenger has proceeded with them to Sheerness. Vanguard and Pembroke will be nearly ready to haul out of the basin next week. Bellerophon will be moved out on Monday, and the Pembroke from the dock to the basin. They are fitting very rapidly, and each has got considerably more than half their crew. Pembroke is about 100 short. The flag has been down 3 days, Sir F. Durham having gone on leave to the levee, the duties of the port have been conducted by Rear-Adm. Sir F. Maitland. Ships in port—Pantaloon at Spithead. In harbour—Britannia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, Buffalo, Quail, Moira transport.

MILFORD HAVEN, April 27th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Goodwill lighter returned to this port from Bristol on the 21st inst., with about 40 men, who had entered there for the ships now commissioning. They were immediately transferred to the Messenger steamer, King, Master, which vessel had been awaiting their arrival since the preceding Sunday. In the afternoon of that day the Messenger left Cork in search of volunteers, having also been to Dublin and Liverpool, &c., on a similar mission. The Harlequin brig, lately launched from Pembroke yard, left this port on Thursday for Sheerness, under charge of Mr. Walker, superintending Master at Plymouth. She went down the haven in a very superior style. She worked, as sailors say, "like a top," and sailed in a manner that astonished the numerous spectators assembled to witness her departure. It coming on to blow half a gale of wind from the south-west (dead a-head); she returned here in the evening, but left again the following morning, and no doubt made good her passage. The Master Shipwright of Pembroke yard is ordered to Liverpool on survey of the launches at that place. The Gibraltar is not yet gone up to the dock yard, but will be removed as soon as an opportunity offers. Lieut. Wright, R.N., at present with the detachment ep at Pembroke, is ordered to the division at Plymouth, being next on the roster for sea service. The vacancy is to be filled from Plymouth.

Plymouth, April 28th.—Goodwill lighter has brought round several men from Bristol. Devon lighter is hourly expected from Liverpool with seamen, Comet st., Mr. White, master, was to have been fitted for the Lord Lieut. of Ireland. Last week Lieut. Otway was appointed to her to proceed to the north coast of Spain. Harlequin has sailed from Pembroke to Sheerness under command of Mr. Walker, assist. master-attendant of this Dock-yard. Camel lighter on Tuesday with stores to Sheerness, and to bring back Harlequin's navigating party. Dido at Pembroke yard is ready for launching, and the Old Gibraltar at Milford is to be broken up at Pembroke Dock. Cornwallis and Talavera were on Tuesday removed down the harbour to their sailing moorings, in order to be ready for the first fair wind to start into the Sound. Minden will shortly follow. Partridge brig, tender to the flag ship, was commissioned on Saturday, and went out of harbour the same day. On the following day she sailed for the Northern ports, to convey volunteer seamen for manning the ships lately put in commission. Phœnix st. arrived from Portsmouth on Saturday for Marioea, and was prevented proceeding as intended, owing to some defects in her machinery, which are now being repaired. Arethusa 46, was undocked on Saturday, preparatory to her being jury rigged for conducting to Liverpool. Messenger st., King, master, arrived on Tuesday from Pembroke with seamen for the fleet. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide 110, Talavera 74, Minden 74, Cornwallis 74, Star brig, Phœnix, Messenger, and Comet steam vessels.

Patent Small-Palmed Anchor.—The following letter has been addressed to Lieut. Rodger, R.N.:—"Blackwall Yard, April 22, 1836.—Sir,—I have much pleasure in handing you the following extract of a letter from Captain Martin, of the ship Duke of Buccleugh, dated Calcutta, October 27th, 1835. 'I take this opportunity to communicate to you my safe arrival here, after riding out a very severe gale on the 18th inst. at the Sand Heads, and providentially escaped with loss of an anchor and cable, from the chain having broke. Rodger's Patent Anchor claims my highest praise, for if the chain had held, the ship never would have moved; it was one of the hardest gales remembered here.' I am, Sir, your's faithfully, Richard Green."

It is understood that the Navy Pay Office is to be wholly swept away, and that, in future, Seamen's wages are to be paid by Pursers of ships, under the inspection of the Commanding Officers and the Admiral, or Captain Superintendants of the various ports. Pensions of all descriptions, and allotments, are to be paid by the Collectors of Customs, and dock-yard wages, most probably, by cheques on the branch banks of the Bank of England.—Morning Post. [There is no foundation for this statement beyond that of the contemplated consolidation of departments to Loodoo.—Ed.]

The British Consul, M. Buchanan, has presented to the United States Naval Museum a portrait of William the Fourth, to be placed with those of several eminent naval characters in that Institution.

The period of Capt. the Hon. H. D. Byng's command of the Ordinary at Portsmouth being on the eve of expiring, this gallant officer and the officers of the Ordinary under his command, had a parting dinner, a few days ago, at the Fountain Hotel, at which the most cordial sentiments of mutual esteem and regard were expressed. There is no truth in the report that Sir John Phillimore succeeds to the command of the Ordinary. No officer has yet been selected.

West Indies Squadron, March 14th.—Forte frigate is gone to Vera Cruz; Comus, 13, Meteor steamer, Pickle and Pincher schooners, are at Jamaica; Wasp, 18, gone to Nassau and Bermuda, with Commissariat specie; Nimrod, 20, at Chagres; Cruiser, 16, at Carthagena; Gannet, 18, at Bermuda; Champion, 18, at Honduras; Skipjack and Lark, schooners, on cruises; Dee, steamer, at Mondego Bay; Comus would return to England on the arrival of Commodore Pall from the Spanish Main; Vestal, 28, arrived at Barbadoes on 4th March, and Racer, 16, on 6th March; Gannet and Racehorse, sloops of war, were lying there also on 10th March; Rainbow was at Barbadoes on 9th March, and was to sail on the following day for Bermuda.

Part of a French squadron, under the command of Adm. Macaud, arrived at Martinique on 29th Feb. with 1000 soldiers on board; but as the dispute between France and America is understood to be at an end, it is presumed the Admiral will speedily return to Europe.

The eight line-of-battle ships recently commissioned are getting fast ready for sea; the 3,200 seamen requisite to man them, independent of the officers and Marines, are nearly all raised at the different ports, there being only 240 men required, by the returns to the Admiralty, on Thursday last.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The officers of the Portsmouth Div. of Rl. Marines entertained the Com.-in-Chief, Adm. Sir P. C. H. Durham, at a sumptuous dinner in their mess-room on Thursday evening last, at which were also invited the Lieut.-Governor (Sir T. M'Mahon), R.-Adm. Sir F. Maitland, and the heads of the departments.

The Quail, cutter, which recently encountered such sad disasters, was towed into Portsmouth harbour on Saturday last, from Jersey, under jury masts, by the sloop Sons of Commerce, of Cowes. The Lords of the Admiralty have expressed their approbation of the conduct of Lieut. Bissen, the officers and crew of the Quail, in refusing to leave the wreck of that cutter, although in an unmanageable state, in the Bay of Biscay, when offered to be removed into a French merchant brig.

We feel much pleasure in recording an act of bravery and humanity on the part of Mr. Burney, second Master of H.M.S. Howe, bearing the flag of V.-Adm. Fleming, at Sheerness. Friday evening, 22d inst., one of the seamen fell overboard, and although there was a strong ebb-tide running at the time, Mr. Burney, at the imminent risk of his life, plunged into the sea, and was the means of saving the life of the unfortunate man. He has been 13 years in the service, and is a very meritorious officer.

Royal Marines. (Woolwich Division).—It is expected the 71st Regiment will march in here and occupy a portion of the East horse-barracks, to relieve this corps from the arduous duty they at present are subject to, in consequence of the drafts for the coast of Spain. On Wednesday last, an intimation was conveyed here from the Officer in command of the Guards at Deptford, "That he should be happy to learn when the Royal Marines could send a detachment to relieve him, the London District requiring their services as early as possible." It is strongly rumoured here, from private intelligence, that twenty-seven men of the Royal Marines (and, it is conjectured, an Officer), belonging to the Castor Frigate, Lord J. Hay, have been taken prisoners by the Carlists. The division has mustered eight companies, of twenty-four men each, which have been drilled occasionally on their own parade. Major Wright, K. H., is expected to join the Marine force under Major Owen, K.H., on the coast of Spain. The draft embarked at Woolwich on that service was commanded by Capt. Powell (not Leyton), who will be second in command until Major Wright joins.

Woolwich Dock-Yard, April 29th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Firebrand steam-vessel, Master Allen, R.N. came up the river early in the week and anchored off the yard. Warrior receiving hulk has been hauled out of the basin and moored in the river. Fairy sloop, Com. Hewitt, is still in want of hands. Swift brig, Lieut. Welch, sailed on Tuesday last to the westward. No doubt justice will be done to this vessel, although built by contract, upon Capt. Symonds principle, as the gallant Officer who commands her was a midshipman with the Surveyor, and can "handle the craft." This same Officer commanded Lord Vernon's yt. for many years. Lightning st.-v., Lieut. Stambler, came up the river on Wednesday, and hauled into the basin to refit. Hermes st.-v. Lieut. Blount, has shipped her wheels in dry dock. Ships in Commission in Port—William and Mary yacht, Fairy sloop, and Firebrand st.-v. In the Basin—Lightning. In Dock, Hermes. Salamander st.-v., (4) Lieut. Duffill, sailed on Saturday last, at 4 A.M., to the westward, her destination being the coast of Spain.

The Barossa is taken up at Deptford for a transport; she will bear a Lieut. R.N. as agent, and shortly proceed to the Mediterranean and Corfu, with troops from Cork, to which place the Prince Regent and Pyramelia transports have proceeded to take troops to the Mediterranean. The Alonzo transport, Lieut. Spencer agent, is fitting at Deptford for service.

The whole of the post-office steam and other packets are to be speedily transferred to the Admiralty Board, by recommendation of the parliamentary committee; and it is generally supposed, by the same arrangement, the afloat vessels attached to the Ordnance Board will be similarly placed.—Correspondent. [Extensive arrangements are in contemplation as regards the Post Office Packets; but as the Commissioners have not yet made their report, it would be premature to announce them.—Ed.]

The Magpie cutter is to be fitted at Portsmouth for surveying service.

The Waterloo, Mr. Roberts Surgeon, has sailed for Deptford, to embark convicts for New South Wales.

The Sovereign transport, Lieut. Brady, agent at Deptford, is expected to embark troops for North America.

Prince Regent yacht at Deptford, still fitting for the Imaum of Muscat, having required several unexpected repairs and defects to be made good.

Lord J. Hay has been appointed Commodore of his Majesty's naval forces on the Northern coast of Spain, and is authorised to hoist the broad pendant on board his ship, the Castor.

Rio, 9th Feb., 1833.—"We are very anxious here about the packet (Nightingale) she has been out now 68 days, and no appearance of her; Cleopatra sailed with her from Madeira, and arrived 19th Jan., 20 days since. We have only the two packets in port at present Cockatrice and Hornet. The Admiral is gone on a cruise in the Dublin with the Cleopatra in company. The Talbot sailed on the 8th for the Falkland Islands and Pacific. Actæon is gone to Buenos Ayres for our minister, Mr. Hamilton. Harrier is at Bahia and Pernambuco. Rover is expected in the early part of March from Valparaiso with specie, which it is expected that the Rapid will take to England. The Satellite's slaver is condemned, and was delivered over to the Brazilian government on the 6th inst. The Hornet has captured a small schooner, a slaver, but, unfortunately, the slaves had been landed the day before.

Leeward Islands.—H.M. steamer Dee arrived at St. Thomas the 20th March, with the Jamaica mail, on receiving which Lieut. Lace sailed immediately. H.M. steamer Flamer was so out of repair as to render it necessary to have her sent home, the Meteor had had the misfortune to have a hole burnt in her bottom, even with the copper it would take 5 or 6 weeks to repair her.

H.M. packet Lapwing arrived at Barbadoes 10th March, when H.M. brig Gannet took her mail to Jamaica.

H.M.S. Pearl arrived at Lisbon from Vigo 9th April. Express from Falmouth 11th, and Seagull from do. 12th.

The Euphrates Expedition.—Malta, March 9.—By the arrival of H.M.'s sloop Columbine, Com. Henderson, from Alexandrette, we receive private letters from Aleppo, dated 14th ult., which give some account of the Euphrates expedition. The lighter materials and stores had nearly all reached the depôt at Port William on the Euphrates, and the heavier parts of the steamer Tigris, the boilers, and the diving bell, were on the point of being conveyed from the limits of the Egyptian territory, where they had arrived, to the depot, by animals furnished by order of Ibrahim Pacha, who was then at Aleppo, and had rendered essential service to the expedition by sending orders to the villages in the direction to supply oxen for the transit across the enemy's under his jurisdiction. Lieut. Cleveland, who was charged with this service, was at Aleppo, detained by a slight indisposition. The rest of the officers were well; but almost every individual of the party had been, at one time or other, attacked with fever and ague, and nineteen of the men were dead. Col. Chesney was on a tour to Adana, Marash, and Orfa, in search of coal and other supplies, during his absence Lieut. Lynch was in command of the expedition; which, as the Euphrates steamer was already afloat and equipped, and the Tigris ready to be launched, it was expected would move down the great river upon the return of Col. Chesney. The conduct of the Seraskier Ibrahim Pacha, when personally present at Aleppo and Antioch, was courteous and friendly; and he showed every disposition to assist the expedition, so that the assistance of the Egyptian authorities in this last stage received a full mulus, the want of which was always experienced in his absence. The Columbine convoyed to Syria four sappers and miners to join the expedition, and six of her crew volunteered to accompany them, making a reinforcement of 10 fresh hands.

H. M. S. Harrier arrived at Bahia from Pernambuco Feb. 1st; and H.M.S. Pearl arrived at Lisbon from Vigo April 9th.

It is reported, that the French Government has issued orders to the authorities and commanders of all the naval stations opening to the Atlantic, to send to Toulon all the vessels of war in those ports now in a condition to sea. Also that the squadron now in the West Indies under Adm. Markau, is to return, and proceed to the same destination. It is further stated, that the French Government have advertised for tenders for the following Coals, fit for steam navigation, to be delivered at Toulon. The quantity required is 15,000 tons. An additional supply of 6,000 tons of the same article is also required for 800 tons of cast iron, to be delivered at Rochefort. The execution of these orders would find employment within the time mentioned, for not less than 22,000 tons of shipping; to obtain which, at the present moment, under existing circumstances, would be difficult, if not impracticable.

84th depot—The comp. at Mill-street having been relieved by the 43rd, will arrive at Limerick on 4th May.

85th depot—have quitted Cork for Clonmel.

1st West India Regt.—The establishment has been augmented, and is now the same as the 2d W. I. Regt.

Royal Artillery.—There has been a committee of Field Officers sitting at Woolwich, to arrange a new roster for the Field Officers to go abroad on foreign stations; so now no Field Officer is to go abroad a second time till every one has been once.—Second Capt. W. Fraser is going to recruit at Berwick, vice Lieut. Flude, ordered to join his company at Woolwich. Second Capt. Walsh to recruit at Andover, vice Lieut. Hill, ordered to Woolwich. Lieut. Shuttleworth is appointed to the Cadet Company, vice Lieut. Wilford, who is appointed to instruct the Cadets in geography and general history. Lieut. Robe is appointed to instruct the Cadets in Military Surveying, &c. The summer drills, with gun and mortar practice, commence with the Artillery next week. Lieut.-Col. Cleveland, R. H. A., commanding the field-batteries, is going away on a short leave, during which time the batteries will be left with their Captains. Capt. Walker's company, which is under orders for Gibraltar is detained, in consequence of the transport which was to have taken it, being ordered on some more particular service. Capt. Whinyate's company of Sappers and Miners is expected to embark daily for Halifax, to relieve Capt. Rivers. Capt. M'Kenzie's comp. of the Sappers is gone from here to Chatham for a year's instruction, and is replaced by Capt. Alderson's.—It is not true that any Artilleryman was thrown from his horse on Blackheath. Of the two men hurt some time ago, near Croydon, one is out of the hospital with the loss of the first joint of his thumb, and the other is nearly recovered, but has lost two fingers. The accident was caused by a defect in the gun, which has been withdrawn from the batteries. The Master-Gen. of the Ordnance has ordered Assist.-Surg. Mahon to embark for Bermuda, and Mr. Mahon will be relieved in his duty at the Pigeon-house Fort, Dublin, by Assist.-Surg. Nelson.

Yeomanry.—It is understood that his Majesty will next week review the Surrey Cavalry, now in training at Chertsey.

The Sovereign transport is preparing to convey the detachment of the 83d reg., under orders for Nova Scotia, and those of the 34th and 43d regs. for Halifax; the above detachments will be embarked at Cork.

The Courier freight ship, 362 tons, has been engaged to convey the detachments of the 27th, 72d, and 75th regs. under orders to join their service cos., from Cork to the Cape of Good Hope, about the middle of next month.

In doing away with the Ordnance Establishment, it is the intention to put its civil departments, of barracks and Commissariat, under the charge of a Board of Commissioners, the President of which is to be a Cabinet Minister. The same Board, strange as it may seem, is to have the entire superintendence of the Post-Office Establishment, to the exclusion of the Postmaster-General, Secretaries, and the most highly paid officers. The regiment of Artillary and Engineers will be transferred to the Horse Guards, and one of the first reductions will be to place on half-pay two-thirds of the Field Officers, who, though at present receiving full pay and allowances, have no duty to perform. Nothing is known of gun wharfs, but as their principal use is as a naval depot, they will most probably be transferred to the Admiralty.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The Field Officers at Woolwich complain of the forage allowance being reduced from 2*s.* 4*d.* to 1*s.* 11*d.*, according to the state of the London market, when it cannot be procured near the garrison for the actual sum.

Col. D'Aguilar, Deputy Adj.-Gen., has arrived in London.

The 71st regiment will, as soon as possible, relieve the Guards in the dock-yards at Woolwich and Deptford victualling establishments.

Capt. Pedder and Ensign Harrison, 63rd, and also some of the 28th, are the guards on board the Moffatt for New South Wales, and Maj. Cotton and Lieut. Mackay of the 28th are also embarked in the Waterloo, and have sailed to take convicts to New South Wales from Deptford.

East India Intelligence.

The new Commander-in-Chief at Madras, Lieut.-Gen. Sir P. Maitland, and his suite, have taken their passage in the True Briton, Capt. Beach, which is to leave Gravesend, June 15. The Governor, Lord Elphinstone, intends proceeding to Madras overland.

Joypore Affair.—Major Alves and Captain Thoresby are to proceed immediately to Dewsa, for the express purpose of instituting a viva voce investigation in which Jotha Ram is to be personally confronted and exposed to the ordeal of a strict examination.

Mr. Chinnery, of the Police, is about to proceed to England in charge of presents from the Nuwab of Moorshedabad to the King of England.

Orders have been received from the Supreme Government, prohibiting the contemplated Breakwater in the Madras Roads, being for the present further proceeded in. The reason appears by other reports to be, that the estimate originally calculated was found to be insufficient for the object.

The trial of Capt. Horne, of H.M.'s 44th regt., has closed, as did Capt. O'Hanlon's, on the 11th Dec. The trials of Lieut. Good and Cornet Irving are the next on the list, but the Court has not yet received directions to try them.—Bengal Hurkaru, Dec. 15.

The Directors of the Universal Assurance Society laid before the Proprietors and Policy-holders, at their first annual meeting yesterday, one of the most favourable reports we remember to have met with. Up to the end of Nov., 225 policies have been issued by the Indian Branch of the Society, covering Sa. Rs. 27.35.740.—At home, according to the last statement, there have been issued one hundred and twenty-seven policies covering 130,661*l.* 16*s.* 9*d.* making the total annual transactions Sa. Rs. 40.42.358 6. But what is most extraordinary, not a single lapse has occurred since the formation of the society.—India Gazette and Bengal Chronicle.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL EVANS AND CAPTAIN LOTHIAN DICKSON.

Capt. Dirkson has put forth the following statement of ...e general features of the cause of his resignation of the ...ueen of Spain's service.

On the 12th December last, previous to morning parade ... Vittoria, Brig.-Gen. Evans came to my barracks and ...und fault, in a manner and in a tone which I considered ...yself, as a British officer, no longer called upon to endure. ...stated to him that I found it impossible, notwithstanding ...l my exertions, to give him satisfaction, or continue to ...ive with any to myself, after the conduct which he had ...rsued during the march to Vittoria, and up to the present ...oment, to myself, my officers, and my men; and I ten... ...ered my resignation of the command of the 7th Reg., ...hich he desired me to forward, which I accordingly did. ...he conduct of Brig.-Gen. Evans, above referred to, took ...ace during a most harassing march, from Bilboa to Vi... ...ria, of twenty days, and consisted in the Brigadier ...arching, at Briviesca, in a violent manner, and in my opinion ...r trivial causes, struck several of my men over the head ...d face when in the ranks (with his stick), while receiving ...struction at their drill from me. For grossly and violently ...using my officers on many occasions, and, in fact, con... ...ducting himself towards me, and all under my command, ... such a manner as to put it beyond enduring any longer.

On the circumstances (two days after) coming before his ...xcellency the Lieut.-General commanding the Legion, he ...as pleased to offer me, through my friend Col. Churchill, ...a removal of my reg. to another brigade, and he also pro... ...sed to appoint some officers to the reg., as, from various ...auses, I had only one Capt. and a few (four or five) Sub... ...alterns doing duty with the 7th reg., then upwards of 500 ...strong—not one of the Subs in the reg. had ever served in ...the army before. The reg. also was without an Adjutant, ...consequently nearly the whole of the duties of the corps de... ...volved upon myself. These offers I declined; they were ...followed by others,—viz., to appoint me to his Excellency's ...staff, which I also refused. The Lieut.-General in the ...handsomest manner still declined to accept my resignation, ...but granted me two months' leave of absence to England, ...which I accepted, but persisted in my resolution of not ...again serving in the Legion, my feelings having been ...much wounded by Brig.-Gen. Evans's language and con... ...duct towards me.

My leave of absence having appeared in General Orders, ...I was preparing to depart, when I received a further com... ...munication, through Col. Churchill, from his Excellency, ...stating, that should I change my mind at the expiration of ...a few months in England, I should be appointed to the ...staff. For these most flattering offers I expressed my gra... ...titude in writing to the Lieut.-Gen., and a few days after, having arranged my affairs, I waited upon him for the purpose of expressing, in person, my sense of his kindness, and to obtain the usual passport, when I was much astonished on being informed that my passport would not be given to me, until one of the Captains of the reg. had settled some accounts with the men of his company.

On the following morning Col. Churchill entered my apartment with a General Order, in the handwriting of the Adjut.-Gen., which he informed me would that day appear in General Orders of the Legion, stating, that my regiment was in a state of disorganisation, and that a Court of Inquiry would be immediately held, and that I was directed not to leave the garrison until further orders. This took place after my leave of absence had been notified some days in General Orders. I was naturally surprised, and my feelings much wounded, by this sudden alteration of treatment towards me. My regiment, the 7th Irish Light Inf., had been inspected only one month before, at Bilbao, by Brig.-Gen. Evans, the books and interior arrangements examined, when not a complaint existed, with the exception of one company, which, from the neglect of its officer, had got into some confusion, and which had been previously reported by me. The Lieut.-Gen. had expressed, both at the mess of the reg. and in the field when in brigade, as also in General Orders, his satisfaction at my zeal and of the state of the 7th Reg.: it was now attempted, by a General Order, to cast a stigma on myself and the reg., when I felt conscious that I had done all in my power for its good and for the cause I had engaged in.

Col. Churchill then informed me that this condemnatory order would not appear if I would write a letter to Brig.-Gen. Evans, preventing me at the same time with one already prepared, of which the following is a copy from the original, in my possession:—

"Sir,—It is with extreme regret I have learned that it has been circulated in this garrison, that I have been expressing dissatisfaction at your conduct towards me. It is true that, under feelings of excitement, I may have said that I had been harshly treated by you; but I feel perfectly convinced that your conduct towards me proceeded from the most anxious zeal to serve the Lieut.-General; and as a military man I must admit that your orders have ever been strictly conformable to the rules of the service, and with a view to the general welfare of the Legion. Most certainly, from the want of active officers and intelligent non-commissioned officers, it was quite impossible for me to carry fully into execution the orders for ledgers, acquittance-rolls, and pay-sheets, which, by such omission, have been thrown into confusion, sufficient to justify angry feelings on your part as my General Officer. I have ever laboured most assiduously to forward the discipline and organisation of the regiment; but having been, with very few exceptions, totally unsupported by my officers in these exertions, it is not surprising that it should not have made such progression as might have been desired. I have the honour to be, Sir, &c."

This I plainly and distinctly told him, Col. Churchill, I could not do, but that I felt no ill feelings towards him, Brig. Evans, believing that perhaps his zeal for the service might have been partly the cause of his great indiscretions, and that I was willing to bury in oblivion all that had passed, but I would not again serve in the Legion; and that should any reflections be at any time attempted to be thrown on my character as an officer, I should make a full statement of his conduct, which had caused me to resign the service, in my own defence. I felt I had ever laboured most assiduously to forward the discipline and organisation of the 7th Reg.; but having been without a sufficient number of experienced officers, it was not surprising that it should not have made such progress as might have been desired. The condemnatory order did not appear.

A few days after this I again most respectfully waited upon the Lieut.-Gen., to request that my passport might be given to me, which was however again refused, on the grounds that a report had been made that one of the Captains had not settled with the men of his company, and that, as soon as the Adj. Gen. had reported its being arranged, I should get my passport. I accordingly saw the Adj.-Gen., who was then at the Lieut.-Gen.'s quarters, on the subject, when I was informed by him that Maj. Long had reported the 7th Reg. in a bad state, that the accounts with Captains and their men were unsettled, and that the reg. was in a state of disorganisation. This I knew to be incorrect, and that my regiment was in as good order as any other in the Legion; that, with the exception of one or two disputes the officers of companies had with their men, and which were of a most trifling nature, all was correct. I therefore stated that I considered an incorrect report of the 7th Reg. had been made. I was directed by Col. Le Marchant, Adj.-Gen., to see Maj. Long (who had just been promoted from Capt. of the 2nd Reg. as Maj., in room of Maj. Dundas, since dead, of the 7th) on the subject, which I accordingly did. On seeing Maj. Long at his quarters, I mentioned to him what the Adj.-Gen. had stated, which I observed had astonished me extremely; and I expressed warmly my dissatisfaction at the report which had been made of the 7th Reg., which report he, Maj. Long, denied having made. We had further conversations on the subject, in the presence of the Paymaster of the reg. and a cotbar officer, whose books had been sent for, together with a private soldier of the reg., who was acting in the capacity of clerk.

An examination of the books took place: they appeared to be, with a few exceptions, correct. On my leaving the room, I without hesitation stated that I considered a false report of the 7th Reg. had been made. On this, in my extreme surprise and astonishment, Maj. Long struck me, on my back being turned, a violent blow on the side of the head,—this outrageous conduct being immediately reported, without my knowledge, by the Paymaster, and myself being prevented from taking any steps at the moment, by Col. Kirby, and Majors King and Mackenzie, who were in the street at the time, and by whose advice I mentioned the occurrence to Col. Considine, Military Secretary, as a point of duty as Col. of the 7th Reg.

An inquiry took place; and, afterwards, a General Court-martial was held upon Maj. Long, which dismissed him from the Legion. The moment the facts of my having been thus outraged became known, the Field-Officers of the Legion came forward, and in the strongest manner manifested their indignation at the occurrence. I immediately sent a message by my friend Col. Churchill to Maj. Long, but he refused to meet me. I again, on the following morning, sent Col. Kirby with a similar message, and waited on the ground nearly an hour. The Field-Officers of the Legion—Col. Kirby, Col Kinloch, Col. Fitzgerald, Maj. Reid, Maj. King, and some others—then withdrew me, considering that Maj. Long, by his outrageous conduct, had forfeited all claim to the character of a gentleman; and they immediately addressed a letter to the Lieut.-Gen. commanding, signed by sixteen of their number, including five Colonels commanding regiments, expressing their sentiments.

The following letters were received by Capt. Dickson from the Colonels of regiments, previous to leaving Vittoria:—

"Vittoria, 15th Jan., 1836.

"My dear Dickson,—As we are under orders to march to-morrow morning, I may not have the pleasure of seeing you before you return to England. I cannot go without writing to express the regret which I feel, in common with all your other friends, at your not remaining with us. In the event of any persons attempting to traduce your character or honour, on account of the late outrageous act of Major Long towards you, you may be assured that all your comrades in the Legion are satisfied that your conduct in that affair was in every way becoming a gentleman and a man of honour; and I shall be happy if my humble opinion can be of any service to you in refuting any aspersions that may be maliciously thrown out against you. Wishing you a prosperous voyage back to Old England, and every happiness and success through life, believe me, dear Dickson, yours very sincerely, JOHN KINLOCH, Lieut.-Col."

"Vittoria, 15th Jan., 1836.

"In the late dispute between Lothian Dickson, Esq., Capt. unatt., and Maj. Long, late of the 7th reg., we acted as his friends, and placed him on the ground; but by the advice of several of his friends, in conjunction with our own opinion, after waiting some time, we removed him, it being their opinion, also, that the violent conduct of the late Maj. Long did not admit of that satisfaction usual amongst gentlemen.

"H. KNOX, Lieut.-Col. Com. 1st reg. B.L., and Capt. 4th M.N.I.

"C. FITZGERALD, Lieut.-Col. Com. 9th reg., and Maj. h.-p. 16th Foot."

"Vittoria, 15th Jan., 1836.

"My dear Dickson,—I was your second friend on the occasion of your late dispute with Mr. Long, and I was decided to take you off the ground by the unanimous opinion of the Field Officers of the Legion, who gave it as their decided opinion that Mr. Long's conduct was so ruffian-like, that you could not give him the satisfaction of a gentleman. My own was in unison with theirs. I have had much opportunity of seeing you, and your conduct has always been that of an officer and a gentleman. You retire from this service with the regret of every Field Officer in the Legion. Wishing you health and happiness, believe me, my dear Dickson, yours most truly and sincerely,

"C. FITZGERALD, Lieut.-Col. Com. 9th regt. B. A. L., and Maj. h. p. 16th Foot.

"On the 2nd January the Lieut.-Gen. was pleased to notify in General Orders that my resignation, which had been received some time before, was accepted, and accordingly a passport was sent to me by one of his Aides-de-Camp.

"On the point of my departure from Vittoria, a Board on my regt. was suddenly ordered to assemble, to report upon the state of my corps. This Board was held on 15th Jan. 1836, being upwards of a month after I had given up the charge of it, which was on the 12th Dec. The correspondence and kind concessions of the Lieut.-Gen. to induce me to withdraw my resignation, occupied the period above alluded to. The decision of this Board, and the remarks of the Lieut.-Gen. have never been made known to me; and the first I hear of the result of their deliberations is observing it in the Sun newspaper in London, a few weeks ago. The following statement was laid before the Board by me, and was forwarded with their proceedings, proving the difficulties which I had to contend with, and which was fully admitted, by the officers composing it, to be satisfactory.

"Vittoria, 15th Jan. 1836.

"STATEMENT TO THE BOARD.

"Having been called before the Board, I beg to state, for the information of the Lieut.-Gen. commanding the Legion, that the interior arrangement of the 7th regt. is not that which it is desirable it should be: confusion and irregularity are observable in the books belonging to companies. This most certainly has occurred from the want of active officers and intelligent non-commissioned officers in the regt. It was quite impossible for me to carry fully into execution the order for ledgers, acquittance-rolls, and pay-sheets, which by such omissions have thrown the books into confusion sufficient for fault to be found. But, after the long and fatiguing march which has just taken place, since the books, &c. were examined by Brig.-Gen. Evans at Bilbao, some allowances may be made for their present state. On the occasion of the Brig.-Gen. finding fault with the rooms, the state of the barracks, &c., being the day (12th Dec. 1835) on which I resigned the command of the 7th regt., I have to state, that only one captain and a few subalterns were then doing the duties of the corps. It is also to be recollected that I have had no adjutant for a considerable length of time, and an almost inefficient quarter-master, and many other circumstances might be mentioned which are well known to the Lieut.-Gen. respecting the officers of the 7th regt., viz.—Two subalterns dismissed from the regt. without a court-martial. Two captains have been on the staff. Three captains have been dismissed from the regt.; one for drunkenness; one for being totally unfit; another for being absent without leave. One captain holds that rank, who has never served in the Army or in the military line before. Another captain has been absent for a long time at the depot at Santander (keeping his books, &c. of the company with him), so that I have had, out of the eight captains belonging to the 7th regt., scarcely more than two captains doing duty at one time, and very often only one. Many other circumstances, among the junior ranks of officers, might be brought to show how the 7th regt. has suffered for want of officers. I have now only to add, that I have ever laboured most assiduously to forward the organisation and discipline of the 7th regt.; but having been, with a few exceptions, unsupported by the officers in these exertions, it is not surprising that it should not have made such progression as might have been desired.

"LOTHIAN DICKSON, Capt. h. p. 100st. and late Lieut.-Col. Com. 7th regt. B. A. L."

The following letter has been addressed to the Editor of the Times:—

"Bury-street, April 25.

"Sir,—Lieut.-Col. R. D. L. Evans, holding the rank of Brig.-Gen. in the British Auxiliary Legion, has by the most contemptible subterfuge endeavoured to throw a stigma on my character as an officer and a gentleman. As he was present at the period that the transaction took place he alludes to (explained in the subjoined letter from my friend Mr. Cooke), and was at the time in command of the brigade, he is not only culpable in the highest degree for being ignorant of the circumstance, but, if ignorant, such ignorance becomes criminal; fortunately, however, for myself I am prepared to refute his venomous attack. Mr. Cooke's letter will show the means attempted by Brig.-Gen. Evans to blast my character, and therefore, having no method of obtaining satisfaction from him, the only course left to me is to publish the following documents, and leave the public to judge for themselves. Subjoined is a letter from Lieut.-Col. Kirby, who was my friend on the occasion, into whose hands I placed my honour (as is customary, and therefore conclusive as to the propriety of my conduct), as well as letters from other officers who were also present. The fact is, Sir, that false rumours have been circulated in the Legion that I have been instrumental in anonymously writing against that force since my return to this country, founded, I verily believe, upon the testimony that I, as a British officer, was called upon to give before the Military Punishment Commissioners, which in my mind accounts for this absurd attempt at persecution. In a few days my reasons for resigning my commission in the Queen of Spain's service will be laid before the public. I am, &c.

LOTHIAN DICKSON,
Capt. h.-p. late 25th Reg., and late Lieut.-Col. commanding 7 Reg. British Legion.

"Bury-street, St. James, April 25."

"18 Bury-street, Monday, April 25, 1836.

"My dear Dickson,—I forward the enclosed letter, that I wrote, and proposed sending to you on Thursday last, to inform you of the stigma that had been cast upon your character by Brig.-Gen. Evans, of the British Auxiliary Legion, at an interview I had with him on Wednesday last, at your request, for the purpose of offering for his perusal a statement you were about to publish explanatory of your reasons for retiring from the Queen of Spain's service, in consequence of a letter that appeared in the Courier of the 5th inst., purporting to be written by him (Brig.-Gen. E.), indirectly reflecting upon your character as an officer, which statement you had already forwarded to the military authorities. Wishing, however, to give him an opportunity of withdrawing this reflection upon you, as I conceived he was labouring under some error, I previously wrote to him (No. 1. letter) enclosing a copy of my intended letter to you, which elicited from him a reply that I had rightly understood the purport of his meaning. Still anxious to remove any doubt that remained on his mind regarding the circumstances of the case, I again wrote on Friday to inform him that I had in my possession original letters to you from officers who were present on the occasion of the adjustment of your quarrel with Maj. Long that were highly laudatory of your conduct, to which I received an answer yesterday (Sunday) that gave rise to the following letter from me to him:—

"'Sunday, April 24.

"'Mr. Cooke, in acknowledging the receipt of Brig.-Gen. Evans's letter of this day, begs to observe that there is a passage in it that is rather ambiguous—namely, that 'Brig.-Gen. Evans would be very happy to find that he has been in error respecting Capt. Dickson,' but he has seen or heard nothing calculated to alter his determination.'

"If Brig.-Gen. Evans means by that paragraph to be understood that he is desirous of seeing the letters alluded to by him (Mr. Cooke) in his letter of Friday last, as being highly laudatory of Capt. Dickson's conduct on the occasion of his quarrel with Maj. Long, he (Mr. Cooke) has only to observe, that if Brig.-Gen. Evans will peruse them himself, or appoint a friend for that purpose, Mr. Cooke will be happy to show them.

"'Sunday afternoon.'

"To which I received the following answer this morning:—

"'Monday, April 25.

"'In reply to Mr. Cooke's note received last night, Brig.-Gen. Evans begs to say that he has no wish to read the papers Mr. Cooke refers to. He had already heard from Mr. Cooke that some individuals of the Legion had given such documents to Capt. Dickson, but however much Brig.-Gen. Evans may respect those individuals, he has fully as much respect for the opinions of others, which are in complete accordance with his own.'

"Having failed, after doing every thing in my power to bring this correspondence to a favourable issue, by endeavouring to convince Brig.-Gen. Evans of the error he appears to be labouring under, I have no other duty to perform than to lay the facts of the case before you without delay. Believe me, yours very faithfully,

"W. B. COOKE.

"To Capt. Dickson, unattached."

"Mr. W. B. Cooke presents his compliments to Col. R. Evans, and begs to enclose a copy of a letter he purposes forwarding to Captain Dickson, provided he has not misunderstood Colonel Evans in this interview he had with him yesterday at the club, which he will be obliged to Col. Evans to confirm in case he is correct.

"Junior United Service Club.

"To Col. R. D. Evans."

"My dear Dickson,—According to your request, I yesterday waited upon Col. R. D. Evans, in order to inform him, that in consequence of his letter in the Courier of the 5th inst., together with other insinuations that had appeared against you in the newspapers, you reluctantly felt yourself called upon to publish your reasons for having quitted the Queen of Spain's service, and that as his name would appear in your statement, you considered it more courteous that it should be previously offered to him for perusal, and that I had brought it with me for that purpose. He, however, at once declined perusing it, or having any communication with you, as he stated that you had received a blow from an officer in that service, and had not taken the usual or proper means for obtaining satisfaction; therefore you were not entitled to be treated in the character of a gentleman. After some further conversation, I said, 'Am I to understand the above as your fixed determination?' He answered, 'Decidedly so.' Believe me, yours very truly,

"W. B. COOKE.

"Sir,—With reference to Capt. Dickson's letter in The Times newspaper of this morning, I beg to inform you, as his friend, that I cannot notice him as a man of honour, until he has wiped off the stain which I conceive he has incurred; then I shall be most happy to show him that I seek no subterfuge. I think it right to inform you that I shall make this letter public. I have the honour to be,

THE CAT-O'-NINE-TAILS.

ADMIRAL CORNWALLIS—perhaps better known in the navy by the nickname of Billy Blue, which he acquired from hoisting a "blue-peter" (signal for sailing) the moment after he cast anchor in any port—had once been severely wounded in the head, so severely that at times he lost his reason; and though a taut hand, a perfect officer, and as good a seaman as ever trod a plank, and humane man withal, if by accident he was induced to swallow one additional glass of wine beyond his prescribed modicum, the control of his mind vanished, and his brain, pro tem., were in the region where Astolpho sought those of Orlando Furioso. In this unfortunate state, one evening, he came out of his cabin while his ship was at sea; and his eye alighting upon one of the officers for whom it was supposed he entertained a dislike, he instantly ordered the hands to be turned up for punishment. The grating was rigged, the ship's company mustered aft, and each looked at his messmate to learn who was to suffer. When all was prepared, the Admiral, who portrayed scarce any outward signs of his inward derangement, pointed out the individual whom he intended to have punished. Every body hesitated at first to obey the order for seizing up a commissioned officer. But the maxim on board ship, "To obey orders, though you break owners," tallies with the eastern one of "To hear is to obey;" so without much ceremony, the astonished officer, found himself naked from the waist upwards, firmly lashed by wrist and ankle to the grating, and the boatswain's mate, cat in hand, ready to lay him. The officers were entirely taken aback at these unlooked-for proceedings, and had not time to remonstrate, even if such was their intention, before Admiral Cornwallis himself gave the signal to the boatswain's mate, and two dozen were soundly laid in, Billy Blue looking on all the while as if he was doing the most natural thing in the world. At the end of the two dozen the seizings were cast loose, and the bleeding shoulders of the punished gentlemen were submitted to the surgeon, the watch was called, and back to his cabin hied the Admiral as sedate as a judge. . . . If the ship's company were astonished, the aggregate of their astonishment could scarcely equal the wonder of Admiral Cornwallis, when, next morning, he was informed of his over-night's freak. He refused to believe it, till the fact was brought so circumstantially before him, that it was impossible longer to doubt. Then all hands were again turned up for punishment, and the officer who had been flogged was brought from below, still in arrest, from which he refused to be released. When the crew were wondering what next was to happen—some of them, perhaps, thinking he was to be flogged again—the Admiral appeared on the quarter-deck with a cane in his hand, and walking up to the punished officer, addressed him nearly as follows:—"I am told that yesterday evening I ordered you, sir, to be flogged, and that my orders were carried into execution on this quarter-deck; but, upon my word of honour, I have not the remotest recollection of the circumstance. It appears to be true, however; and therefore, this morning, I have assembled together those who saw you punished. Now, in their presence, I have to tell you that I don't come here to make an apology for what I have done, because no British officer could receive an apology from any one after being struck; if I did not strike you myself, I caused another to do so. I will ask your pardon, sir, because, as a man of honour, you could not in this way pardon an unpardonable offence. Nor sir, will I wave my rank to give you personal satisfaction on shore, because, by receiving your fire, or firing at you, I could not obliterate the stain I have left upon your shoulders. But I ask a favour of you before the ship's company; which is, that you will take this cane and use it on my back as long as it will hold together. By ——! I could do so to any one that serves me as I did you. Mr. ——, you may thrash me as you please, and as much as you like, and, as I am a live man, it shall not interfere with your future promotion." Here he presented the handle of the cane to Mr. ——. Now every man there knew that Cornwallis was true steel, and brave as a lion; and if he thus humbled himself to his inferior officer, it was not through fear of fighting a duel, nor yet from apprehension of being brought to a Court-Martial; but they saw that, in the keenest spirit of the most bitter self-condemnation, the gallant old chief took the only step which could heal the honour he had wounded; and, however unused to the melting mood, many a broad eye, set in the weather-beaten faces that thronged round the mainmast, glistened with moisture on witnessing the penance which old Billy Blue inflicted upon himself. Mr. —— behaved very properly. He took the cane, snapped it in two across his knee, flung the pieces overboard, and extending his hand towards the Admiral, told him he forgave him with all his heart. The ship's company burst into an involuntary cheer when they saw them shake hands, notwithstanding the usual sanctity of a line-of-battle ship's quarter deck; and more than one among them would have kissed the gunner's daughter himself, to the tune of a similar two dozen, for the pleasure of being afterwards rewarded by grasping old Billy's "flipper." . . . Mr. —— finished his naval career with that same voyage, and commenced another one on shore under the patronage of ...quis Cornwallis, brother to the Admiral, which, if ...venturesome, was more profitable far. He lived to ... himself collector of customs in a northern sea-port; ...ug berth, for which he might have sighed and sought ... in vain, but for his good luck in tasting Billy Blue's ...cipline. It is said that Billy himself was never after... ...known to be in the slightest degree inebriated.—...ine's Magazine.

...ISTRAM'S ANECDOTES OF A LOGICAL AND MYTHOLOGICAL MASTER, R.N.

SIR,—The series of letters which I have written on vari... subjects, and had the honour and pleasure of seeing ...blished in your columns, have, of course, been animad...ted upon, and criticised as interest, bias, like, or dislike, ...d swayed the minds of your readers and correspondents. ...ave invariably answered the latter to the best of my ...ty, and being guided by an honesty of purpose to do ...d for the service at large, I have generally convinced all ...ose hearts are open to reason and conviction that such is only fit, and met with many a generous thank—an ...me compliment—an appeal to my decision on Courts-...rtial, and invitation to continue my correspondence. ...t as I write for amusement only, I take my time to rumi...e over the subject on which I am writing, and when I ...e carefully studied it, on all its bearings, with fair truth ...d worthy argument to support it, I send it forth to your ...ders for their opinion or discussion; but I beg to submit ...t it is inconsistent in any correspondent to attack my ...ers without reason, or answering without having them ...ore him, as trusting to memory alone, in many instances, ...d gain him no credit, but give me much unnecessary ...uble to answer impertinent or litigious questions. In ... 160 of your Gazette, a "Master R. N. Employed," ...blishes the "soundings" of his brain upon my observa...ns on the important duties and situation of a Master of a ...-of-war, as I overhauled the Naval Officers' Manual in ... 162. Look not at the composition of a correspondent's ...er with a view to criticise it, for were I, or others to ...op in such an uncharitable act, many an illiterate brother ...r's hard case would remain unknown, and pitifully his ...ngs unredressed—"a round unvarnished tale" is the ...e varnish of an honest seaman's letter. With all my ...rt I pitied this "Master Employed," when thus I read ...is learned letter—"I commonly wear a coat, the price ...hich is £4 10s., and having a FAMILY NOT YET PAID FOR, ...e much less could I afford seven guineas to a fashionist ...the same garment"—as I naturally supposed that Cupid ...d mastered this master of all Masters, and handed ...m over to Hymen, who spliced him to a cast-off mistress ... the Captain Bold in Liverpool," with their illegitimate ...geny, not yet paid for, in consequence of the New Poor ...w Bill having been in force before the consummation of ...s happy and reputable marriage; but my pity vanished ...n he accused me of publishing a reflection on the integ...ity of the Masters of the Navy in general. Let your ...ers judge whether I am deserving of an accusation of ...s kind or not, in comparing the two following extracts from ... letters: Tristram says—"The Master is in a ship of ...e a greater personage than he thinks himself; in him ...ould be concentrated the knowledge divided amongst the ...er Officers, both warrant and commissioned. This ...anual will give him that knowledge not previously pos...ed by one Master in twenty. His attention to the ...eorological indications will give him the coup de maître." ...he "Master Employed" thus unworthily perverts the ...h:—"Now for the coup de maitre that Tristram states ...s comprised in the knowledge of the barometrical indications, and which he asserts not one in twenty understand."

Tristram solely alluded to the knowledge divided amongst other officers, &c. not previously possessed by one Master in twenty, and did not assert that not one Master in twenty understand the barometrical observations. This sentence, "his attention to the barometrical indications will give him the coup de maître," stands by itself, and is totally unconnected with the previous one, in which the words not one Master in twenty, are introduced. This necessary explanation is given to clear myself of an unjust accusation, that of publishing an unmerited reflection upon the abilities of the Masters of the Navy in general. As my Uncle Toby said to the blue-bottle which had been buzzing about his nose all day, so I say to this "Master R. N. Employed," "get thee gone, poor thing, surely this world is wide enough for thee and me." In all cases of a ship's danger and difficulty, when a "poor thing" of a "Master Employed" like that offers his advice, I strongly recommend the Lieutenant of the Watch to throw that poor thing—that somebody overboard, as the surest and readiest way of extricating the ship from every danger. The Lieutenants will understand Tristram's meaning in recommending the Master to be thrown overboard.

The knowledge of this "Master Employed" in logic is just as profound as that of a Master, in mythology, with whom I once messed. He prided himself in the history of Neptune, Mars, and POLLY PERUS, as well as any scholar and gentleman in the ward-room. One day at dinner a Mid reported to the First Lieut. the arrival of the Cerberes. "Master," said the Purser, "who is Cerberes?" "Who, who? —damn it, I had almost forgot—aye, to be sure, he was a DOG, and a h—ll of a dog he was, for he had seven heads." "How many tails," asked the Purser. "Why a tail to every head to be sure." "How many feet?" "Why—why, four—times—seven—twenty-eight to be sure; you Pursers thinks us Masters don't know nothing. You thought to puzzle a feller by axing about that infernal dog Cerberus." His knowledge of orthography was partic...larly accurate, as thus exhibited in the ship's log-book to this day—"Harrived in Majestis ship Dafne," as affirmed by thy friend TRISTRAM.

PROMOTION AND STATE OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

SIR,—I observe in your paper frequent allusions to the state of the Indian Army, many of your correspondents appearing to think that the discipline is not such as to quiet the anxiety of those interested in the security of our eastern dominions; indeed, the number and nature of offences taken cognizance of by Courts-Martial in that territory prove the existence of some general cause of complaint, or the operation of some unpolitic regulation.

Whatever be the cause of these frequent trials of officers and men, it should be the study of the government to check an evil so likely to produce ruinous results in times of warfare or difficulty. One of your correspondents has suggested the propriety of extending the power of Commanding Officers, and has repudiated the restrictions now laid on those responsible for the discipline of the regiments; but before we condemn the superior authorities, we should consider whether, by the existing system of promoting wholly by seniority, we furnish to corps officers properly qualified for command, to whom extensive powers could be entrusted, without inconvenience to the service, and injustice to their subordinates.

Writing anonymously, I am bound to abstain from citing instances of regiments where the removal of the Commanding Officers has given a new character to the corps; but I think all will admit that many men perform well their duties as inferiors who are totally unqualified for command, and should, therefore, on an account, be allowed to occupy a station they are not able to fill with credit to themselves, or benefit to the service; and if those who have access to the punishment returns of our troops, both at home and abroad, will take the trouble to note the numbers, they will, I have no doubt, find that (making due allowance for peculiar circumstances) where promotion by seniority prevails, the number of defaulters is in the aggregate greater than in those branches of the service where a different system of promotion is pursued. Should what I have now stated prove correct, I think it is time we discontinued a mode of advancement advocated only by the indolent and apathetic, and gave to the active and energetic their natural place in society. I am well aware that in promoting by patronage, instead of seniority, we enable those in power to act upon a system of favouritism which may, in many cases, be made injurious to individuals; but while we limit the expense of a service, and expect those at its head to hold themselves responsible for its efficiency, we are guilty of great folly and injustice, if we, by our regulations, give the commands of corps indiscriminately to those who have served longest, thus offering no reward for talent, and holding out no incentive to good conduct. Were expense no object for consideration we might by retirements, or nearly sinecure appointments, provide for the incapables*, and only give important commands to the trustworthy; but the day for such lavish expenditure is past, and we must think seriously of rendering our Army efficient with the means at our disposal.

In corps where the promotion is by seniority, each officer (out a candidate for a staff appointment) feels that he is independent of his Colonel, and content with avoiding a line of conduct likely to be punished by a Court-Martial, disregards alike the praise or censure of his superiors, well knowing that by no act of his own can he in his profession be advanced or retarded. Had it been the intention to repress talent and enterprise, a system more efficacious than this could not have been discovered; contrast with it that pursued by the legislators for the Royal Navy during the last war, and we shall be compelled to acknowledge that their regulations have produced some splendid examples of what men will do when rewards are fairly offered for exertion, and advancement is made to depend on personal qualities. If the East India Company would have an efficient army at little expense, let them promote entirely by patronage, and, paying due attention to the recommendations of the superior officers in immediate command of the troops, give them those powers without which, however judiciously selected, they can never make the most of their position, or act in a manner calculated to give their country the full benefit of their experience in military affairs; but as a long residence in India is of itself a claim to some reward; let the Company guarantee to all officers on retirement the present regulated allowance for a Captain, although, after twenty years' service, they may not have attained that rank, and in all other respects continue the rules now established relative to retirements, thus weeding the service of all those whose attainments do not warrant their retention, and making room for such as are better qualified for commands.

London, April 25. A. C.

* I have no wish to state that there are many officers in this service who would be thus denominated; but the remarks sometimes promulgated by officers approving sentences of Courts-Martial, prove the existence of a serious difference of opinion between the members and the approving officer. Surely they cannot be all in the right, and persons who do not form correct opinions on the common subjects usually brought before Courts-Martial cannot be very intellectual.

THE BAND OF THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.

SIR,—I wish, through the medium of your valuable Gazette, to give those in authority at Woolwich a hint of the impolitic measure which it is reported they are about to adopt of preventing the Artillery Band from playing on a Sunday evening. It will cause great discontent and unpleasant feelings towards their superiors, from both officers and men, as it is during the summer a most pleasant lounge of an evening, and many of the soldiers, more particularly those with families, that are attracted there by the music would otherwise be passing away the time in a public house. Moreover, it is a great recreation for the people who come down from London for the purpose of enjoying a little fresh air. A FRIEND TO YOUR GAZETTE.

PROMOTION AND THE DEAD WEIGHT.

SIR,—It being a self-evident fact that a very large number of those most unfortunate and ill-treated beings ycleped Young Gentlemen, are, and must remain, without the most distant prospects of promotion, and as many of those who do contrive to ship the swab, are useless to the service, from the disgust raised in their minds by "hope long deferred," there appears to be an absolute necessity for some regulation tending to lessen these evils, and I conceive it to be the duty of every one who wishes well to the service and its various members, to come forward with any suggestion of a plausible nature which may present itself to his mind. In accordance, therefore, with this sense of duty, I beg to offer to the consideration of the Lords of the Admiralty, whether it would not be most beneficial to the service to leave the path of promotion as open as possible to the younger branches of the service, thereby ensuring a supply of healthy zeal to fill the higher grades. No doubt can be entertained on this point; the question is, how to open the path without injustice to the older claimants. Now, Sir, I would propose one opening; as our colonies would be much benefitted by a further importation of loyal and respectable subjects, let a grant of land be offered to the acceptance of all officers who may be disposed to find fault with their present situations, including Mates of a certain standing, say five or seven years; but as a grant in the colonies would be useless without the means of locating themselves, I would also suggest that government should purchase (at a reduced rate) the commissions of such officers as wished to avail themselves of the grant, and as Mates (poor fellows) have no commissions (although Ensigns have) they should receive a gratuity according to their length of service. I think this plan would reduce the dead weight very materially, as there are many officers unable to take advantage of the present opportunities in the colonies, for want of funds, and who would readily resign their half pay for a moderate sum. I now beg, Mr. Editor, to offer my warmest thanks for the able and spirited manner in which you have ever advocated the just claims of the service. May you "go on and prosper." CONSTANT.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1836.

Our pages have constantly advocated the cause the Widows of our gallant brethren of the vices, and we have repeatedly pressed the ms of those unfortunate persons on the con- eration of the country. The justly-conceived independent observations of Colonel Parry and Edward Codrington on this subject, in the House Commons on the 19th instant, will, we trust, e had their due weight on His Majesty's Go- nment, and thus lead to some amelioration of present regulations regarding the afflicted fa- ies of our brave officers who have died, after ing the best of their lives to their country's vice. With respect to the pensions of the idows of our Naval officers, a correspondent re- nds us of that which we have again and again ted, namely, that during the whole period of late war, and we believe in many years beyond the officers of the Navy paid annually a proportion their pay towards the fund styled "The Widows' sion Fund;" hence the pension to the Widow such old officer became her right, which no Mi- ter could with justice subsequently deprive her by any narrow-minded regulation which his beral advisers might have led him to put in ce. We mean not to contend against the power the Admiralty to make any rules they may see as regards the Widows of those officers who r paid towards the Widows' Fund, but to those did so we must maintain that their right to pension is indisputable in strict justice, if not aw, whether their private incomes be double amount or not.

t a period when we are most wisely using our ry effort to encourage our seamen to enter the vy, we think it would be good policy to con- ue, or rather to renew, the pensions to the dows of our Warrant Officers, which were so un- ly taken from them a few years ago, because, these situations of Boatswain and Gunner are the y ones which the brave and meritorious sailor aspire to, we deem that this reward should be d out to him in every shape that can make it rth his study to deserve. In like manner the rpenter's crew in our ships of war would use ir best efforts to merit promotion, in the hope ultimately obtaining the situation of Carpenter, d that thus their wives and children would be ovided for in the event of their father's death.

Amidst the different representations which have ached us on the subject of the present much mplained of regulations connected with Widows' nsions, there is one regarding the Widows of old Pursers, which we think only requires to be fairly stated in order to ensure its correction. It seems, that whilst the Widows of Pursers, who may have died subsequent to the year 1830, are entitled to forty pounds per annum, those, whose husbands died prior to that date, only receive thirty pounds per annum, and this too, although these old Pursers had actually paid towards the Pension Fund throughout the whole war, and many of whom had been personally distinguished in action with the enemy, as the public dispatches of the period show. Again, we are told that the Widows of the old Assistant-Surgeons, who served in the war, and died in it, or very soon after its close, have no pensions, whilst those who are employed in peace, and who may now die in actual service, have this bonus held out to them. If this be the fact, we think that common justice demands that the Widow of the old Assistant-Surgeon, who faithfully served in war, should be alike considered; for though it is all right and proper to economise the revenue of the State in every possible way that it can be done with propriety, yet we are sure, that the nation at large never will desire that, in carrying this measure into effect, the claims of the old and faithful servants of the Crown should be neglected and forgotten.

With reference to the table of Reliefs of King's Regiments in India, given in our paper of the 16th instant, we will now endeavour to direct the attention of the authorities at the Horse Guards more particularly to the hardships of the service imposed on His Majesty's Corps in the East.

Taking it as the rate at which regiments are in future to be relieved, from looking back to the rate at which reliefs had been effected since 1823, we find that it will be only one regiment yearly, and at this slow rate much injustice must be done to several corps, which went abroad in the same year, but proceeded to India from the Cape, Ceylon, and New South Wales. To begin with the four first entitled to relief,—20th, 45th, 54th, and 16th. These regiments left England in 1819, and the last named cannot at the present rate return before 1839, while the 20th may be expected in 1836. The 6th and 55th, which embarked in 1821, cannot be relieved before 1840 and 1841, and then come five regiments, the 13th, 41st, 44th, 49th, and 3rd, all of which left England in the year 1822, but the last of which must wait until 1846 to be regularly relieved. We need not proceed further down the list, but will merely state that the 9th Regiment, which is the last for relief, embarked in 1832, and its probable return will be 1856. Here, surely, is a case for the consideration of the Quartermaster-General and the other authorities at the Horse Guards. The whole hardship of the case, however, is not merely the length of service abroad, but the inequality of its pressure on the officers and privates. In all the other Colonies the period of service does not extend beyond twelve years at the utmost, and of regiments serving in all foreign stations, except India, only six companies are abroad, leaving four companies as a depot, at which officers and privates spend at least one-fourth of the period that the head-quarters are abroad. In India the regiments, on the other hand, never return under a service of nineteen years, and no portion of that time, except a few months, is spent by either the officers or privates at home. The depots of regiments in India consist of only one Officer, four Sergeants, and four Corporals, with a Drummer, from which the recruiting parties are drawn. No officer or private, except as sick, or an invalid waiting discharge, can remain in England. Under these circumstances, the retaining regiments in India twenty-five or twenty-six years, and none less than nineteen, must be acknowledged a hardship. It would be a much fairer system to keep regiments in America and other good climates for a longer period, if reliefs cannot be effected, than to detain them in India beyond fifteen years, which period should be the maximum of service abroad.

Scarce a week passes but that we are favoured with the perusal of various memorials drawn up by Officers who have claims for consideration, with the request that we will lend them our influence and advice in furtherance of their applications for preferment. We need hardly inform our readers that the necessity thus forced upon us of making ourselves acquainted with the merits of claimants, and of course with the demerits of their more successful competitors—for there never appears to be a why without a wherefore—is a laborious and oftentimes an unpleasant task; and that we frequently encounter very moderate pretensions put forth with clamorous demands. Still we shall never complain of any personal inconvenience or sacrifice which we make either for the benefit of the United Service generally, or of individual members thereof; and we shall always be ready, as we ever have been, to use the influence which our paper possesses in furtherance of the claims of real merit. These observations are elicited by the perusal of a memorial which appears to us the beau ideal of that composition, and we wish we were at liberty to print it, for the benefit of the Service generally, in order to show how gallant services may be set forth in modest terms, and with such perspicuity as shall afford some hope that the First Lord or his Secretary may find leisure to peruse it.

The memorial in question records an honourable as well as an actual service, of nearly thirty years, distinguished by several gallant deeds; and no opportunity appears to have been lost in peace or war of gaining the approbation and esteem of superior Officers, all which is testified by most honourable certificates. The character for ability, gallantry, and devotion to the Service appears to be so well substantiated, the recommendation of distinguished Officers so strong, and the pretensions of the memorialist so modest and so reasonable, that we are sure it must have had its due effect, although circumstances may not hitherto have afforded a proper opportunity for noticing it; and our honest recommendation is that the gallant Officer, Lieutenant Wesley, Royal Marines, may indulge a little patience, and continue in the course which he has so honourably pursued, and which will, we doubt not, insure him preferment when occasion offers.

We published in our Gazette of the 31st January, 1835, the Regulations which exist at his Majesty's College at Sandhurst, and we know of no just reason that similar regulations should not be adopted at the East India Company's Seminary at Addiscombe. Why, for instance, a Field Officer should not be allowed the indulgence at Addiscombe, as at his Majesty's College, of educating his son there, at 40*l.* a-year; or that the son of an Officer falling in the service of his country should ot have the privilege of doing so at 20*l.* a-year. t is a rule also at Sandhurst that the sons of fficers so situated, who pass the required examiation, are entitled to a commission without purhase. This is stated by Lord Fitzroy Somerset, his evidence before Parliament, and that Lord ill, for the past nine years, has granted upon an verage 21 commissions in every year from 1828 1833, without purchase, to claimants who passed.

In one of our recent numbers, we suggested a lan for the appropriation of the share of the atronage hitherto enjoyed by the former Presients of the Board of Controul, grounded on the ledge of Lord Glenelg; and were it adopted, we ould no longer witness the Minister who is vested ith the power of controlling the amount of paronage, having a direct or immediate interest in ither the extent or decrease of it. All managements similar to this would evince a just attention the sons of the old Officers that are now unable, arough the want of home influence, to obtain s uccession to the profession that their fathers had ng served and often bled in.

We must further again solicit the attention of ur readers to the able letter of Argus, published the 5th January, 1835, suggesting the expedicy of selling the first military commission in e India Service, and ensuring to the sons of old fficers a preference to purchase them, to a certain extent. The revenue that may be created by is measure would prove very ample to compenate the India Directors for the loss of their military patronage; as the Return laid upon the table the House of Commons, in 1833, of the military appointments made between that Charter and e former one showed that they amounted to ore than 5000 Cadetships. Supposing each of ese to have been sold for 300*l.* (and they are orth much more), they would have aggregated fteen hundred thousand Pounds! and after deucting from this sum 150*l.* a-year, in lieu of the ss of patronage to each Director, a clear revenue ould have remained to the State, in that period, 774,000*l.* Mr. Auber's evidence states the hole territorial home charges of Government at 1,000*l.*, a sum that might in this way be raised in is country sufficient to prevent a call any longer r a remittance from India for this purpose.

Rules and Regulations should also be framed at the commissions are only to be granted to ersons who may be qualified, after a proper exsination, to hold them; and any special indulence that it is deemed desirable to offer to the n of an old Officer might be provided for, the ppointment of each candidate being made by the ourt of Directors, and not by any Director. In is way, the plan, as recommended by Lord Grenille, might be accomplished. His Lordship ated—

"The Cadets should not be named by the choice of y man, but by some fixed course of succession from the milies of officers who have fallen in the public service." Hansard's Debates, vol. xxv, p. 727.

Again, in page 2933 of the Mirror of Parliament, iving the Debates on the India Bill in July, 33, Mr. Charles Wynn stated—

"He has always thought the officers of the Indian rmy do not possess their fair share of patronage, and at some regulation should be made to entitle their sons a preference to these appointments to a certain extent. would undoubtedly be inexpedient to render the India ilitary Service wholly hereditary; but it would be desirable that some portion of the Cadetships should be signed as a reward of merit to the sons of those who ve fought and bled in the service of the Company: e Directors now have it, and each of them naturally wishes to give this share among their private friends, and there is no fund upon which their claim for public gratitude can be urged. It appears there are three hundred and fifty ladies among the Proprietors, and it seems highly probable that these, as well as a large proportion of the male Proprietors, in giving their votes, are more likely to be influenced by the hopes of obtaining preferment for relatives and the solicitations of others, than by an abstract notion of the fitness of particular candidates. I would suppose, however, the Directors elected in the first instance are the fittest possible for the discharge of their duties. How is it possible for the Proprietors afterwards to obtain any knowledge of the manner the Directors fill the office? How can they ascertain whether he is attentive or negligent—whether he discharges his duty in the most able and efficient manner? This want of control over the Directors appears to me to be the great sin of the present system, and I trust Government will consider whether it is not possible to make some alteration. I think eleven Directors fully sufficient to execute their public functions."

We have quoted at length from this eminent public authority, as he must be well acquainted with this subject, from having long presided over the Board of Controul; and we shall conclude with the opinions of another authority, the gallant and lamented Officer Sir John Malcolm:—opinions deservedly of great weight on all subjects that respect India and the public services in that country:—

"The Court of Directors are often generous to the widows and families of their deceased officers left in distress, and have given a liberal support to the funds instituted for their relief; but this liberality imparts little, if any, of that feeling which would be spread throughout the service by the son receiving such notice and protection, on account of the service of his father. To estimate the value of this principle, we have only to look to its effects in the Navy or Army of England; notwithstanding that eagerness for patronage which pervades these services, hereditary claims are seldom neglected or rejected, and the attention known to be given to them stimulates the highest minds to actions in a degree beyond all other motives."

Sir John Malcolm adds, in pages 119 and 120 of his Political History, when speaking of the manner the Directors exercise their patronage, as follows:—

"It is to be regretted that their patronage should form the principal object in seeking the direction, and the chief reward after having attained it. The first circumstance induces some to become candidates for the office of Director whose views are limited to the attainment of a provision for their families, relatives, or friends; and the second deprives the Government of one of the greatest means which all other Governments possess, that of encouraging, rewarding, and attaching those by whom they are served, by admitting, to a certain extent, the claims of sons and near connexions of persons who have been distinguished in the public service. These are not only rejected by Directors in their corporate capacity, but their advancement is considered an infringement of their most valued privilege. This is the fault of the system, not of the Directors; they are paid in patronage, and a deduction from its amount would operate as a deduction from the wages of their labour. This fact clears them of all blame, but it does not render the evil less. It may, perhaps, be asserted that the interest and commerce of men in the service, combined with the humanity and consideration of individual Directors, palliates, if it does not remedy, this defect of the system; but this is a mistake, for the very mode in which such favour is bestowed, though it may raise the reputation of him who confers it, lowers that of the body to which he belongs; besides, it is not seemly to see the sons of those who have stood the highest in the Civil service of the Company, or of officers who have fallen in some memorable engagement, enter the list of common solicitors, or carrying their petitions from door to door of those who preside for the season over the interests of that empire, the prosperity of which the parents of the supplants have laboured with distinction, or died with glory, to promote.

Our readers will perceive by this day's Naval Appointments that the intention, which we some time since reported to exist of nominating Admiral Lord Amelius Beauclerk to the Plymouth command, is confirmed, and that the gallant Admiral has selected Captain Sykes for his Flag Captain. The shift of flags will take place to-morrow. We are sure the appointment will prove as acceptable to the Plymouth folks as that of Sir Sir Philip Durham has done at Portsmouth, where his suavity and condescension have won golden opinions from all classes of persons.

We last week announced the appointment of Major John Owen to the command of the Royal Marine Battalion employed on the Coast of Spain, and we are glad to find that the announcement has been hailed with satisfaction, Major Owen being considered one of the most distinguished officers now capable of active service in that highly gallant corps. He served in the Navy originally under the command of one of the best officers in the Service, the late Admiral Sir Thomas Trowbridge, and being taken prisoner in the Castor, was present on board a French ship on the glorious 1st of June. We do not know exactly when he bore up for a Marine, but find him serving in that capacity at Trafalgar in the Belleisle; he afterwards commanded the Marines of the Leviathan, and by his highly spirited and gallant conduct on several detached expeditions, established a character which gained him the applause and admiration of the Mediterranean fleet. A better selection for the present command could not have been made.

Colonel Napier's "History of the Peninsular War" must be well known to an immense majority of our readers, and to that majority we appeal, whether his work does not, as far as any uninspired writing can, possess impartiality.—whether a trace of the worst description of bias, party feeling (which, in a man of a strong head, is almost synonymous with venality), is to be discovered in it. But if a deep feeling of nationality, connected by a sound judgment, if the purest patriotism be crimes, he must plead guilty. Was there ever a history particularly one involving so great a variety of events absolutely free from erroneous statements of unimportant facts? Doubtless not. The errors of importance, however, proved against Col. Napier have been singularly few, which indeed was to be expected from his character, his personal knowledge of war, and of that war in particular, and the variety of documents to which he had access; and whenever mistakes have been clearly pointed out he has always candidly admitted and cheerfully corrected them. On this history an attack has just been made in the Quarterly Review, in a spirit for which there is the less excuse, because, though professing and avowing strong feelings on public events, Col. Napier is not a party politician, and has equally censured Whigs, Tories and Radicals whenever he has considered their conduct deserving rebuke.

As all our readers may not be aware of the real value to be attached to the anonymous criticisms in what are called "Reviews," we shall just observe, that nearly all of them have a strong party bias, and that the Editors and many of the principal writers of most of them, but especially the Quarterly and Edinburgh, are Lawyers. The first of the two we have named supports the Tories, right or wrong; the other the Whigs, equally as a matter of course; and the professional habits of the Editors have assisted to render them adepts in the mischievous sophistry.

We address not the base, nor those who would sacrifice nationality to party spirit, but the candid and English reader, and we request them to read Napier with attention, if they have not already done so, and compare his manly, fearless, and straightforward work with the garbled and tortuous remarks of his anonymous critic, who, if ever man did, has sat down with the intention of not only magnifying the errors, and concealing the merits of his author, but of inventing faults where none existed, and this with a degree of impudence that has rarely been equalled in the annals of reviewing, as the passages of the history which he quotes, often give the negative to his assertions. For instance, because Col. N., whose object was to write a history, does not fill whole pages with declamation about the injustice of the war and the atrocity of Bonaparte, he is accused of not perceiving or allowing its injustice, although a conviction to the contrary is to be found even amongst the passages inserted in the review. Mr. Southey, a writer who, notwithstanding his great abilities, was not particularly qualified either by nature or circumstances for the office of a military historian, has also published a history of this war which we may say has been rejected as an authority by those best qualified to judge of its military details,—the British actors on the scene,—and has been confessed by honest men, even on the Tory side, to be a thoroughly partial work, seasoned with an extravagant and possibly real admiration for the Spaniards. Weary, perhaps, of his subject, which he seems conscious of his inability to describe, he is glad to escape from it to spend succeeding pages on words rather than actions, the ephemeral debates in Parliament, &c. To support this production, of their own principal writers, completely cast into shade by the masterly work of Napier, has been hitless one of the main objects of the review.

One of the principal charges against Col. N. (Introed as if it were a discovery, which it is not, even if ) is that he has underrated the successes of the niards. In his own preface he has avowed that one his principal objects was to expose the falsehood of extravagant praise lavished on them; but, in his 3rd me, he has nobly vindicated himself from the very ges of the Quarterly, already brought against him by es of less reputation. Because he has not believed the absurd tales of the Spaniards, although he has ed from "disfigurement," or "neglect," the notions is countryman, he is to be accused of being a partizan e French! And is it, after all, so much worse to e with a French than with a Spanish bias, or to unte foreign rather than British achievements, like Southey and the reviewer.

some cases the critic has opposed his own unsuped assertion to the facts stated by the historian, as if former were more worthy of reception, and Colonel ier (nor of course the army in which he served, of numbers, and those not the least qualified to judge, k far more manly both of Spaniards and Portuguese he does) is not even considered worthy to form an ion of the character of those Dons, and is denied a knowledge of the face of a country over which he fought inch by inch, instead of journeying in peace tranquillity like his censor. Is, then, a knowledge country more likely to be acquired in the last than in first state, when so much depends upon it? Are the acters of men displayed more truly? Nor is it ly as a soldier that Colonel Napier looks around He has also the eye of a painter, and loves the ty of nature for its own sake. It is very possible the reviewer may have been assisted by some militen, perhaps even of rank and ability, in whom party ails over patriotism, but we suspect the writer, mainly verable for the critique, to be a civilian, for though it rds another melancholy proof how far national spirit ngst us is merged in party, there are still some reas of it happily amongst the United Service; com, for instance, the strictures of Tory soldiers in our ellent monthly contemporary the *United Service Jour*with those of the Quarterly Review,—compare, also, party attacks on the British Legion, not only by the s but in Parliament, with the manly speech of Sir n Elley. Almost the only living non-military writer eminence, whose patriotism and British feeling is unnebed by political or foreign predilections, is Professor Wilson; but Christopher North is every inch a n.

The Quarterly makes it a grave charge against Col. ier, that he has not done justice to the valour of nish women; as if unsexed viragos (supposing the ons attributed to them true) were to be regarded as nour to any nation, as if they were not rather a reach to it, and a sign of effeminacy and want of energy e men. But it has been pretty well ascertained, that r actions (of which by the way Col. N. expresses no ded opinion) were neither more nor less than women eadily perform in similar circumstances; and, if masne qualities in the female sex are indeed so admirable, would undertake to pick a corps of fox-hunting ladies pugilistic fisherwomen in this country who should l in heroism those of Spain, or any other nation, or surpass them.

With his usual candour, the reviewer, attacking Napier aving frequently preferred French to Spanish writers n they clash, brings against him some of the most oughly French writers, as the declamatory Foy and ey, as if they had better opportunities of judging than er himself, or their style was preferable. Lamey in ndia appears remarkably partial to the Spaniards: es (like certain Quarterly Reviews) a man of a swarthy plexion, and by no means unlike that nation in geal appearance: those who are well acquainted with an nature may perhaps think it possible that this apently trifling circumstance may have had its share in ducing his extravagant encomiums on that people, as , on his stupidly false assertion, that men of that hue are cold better than those of a light complexion.

How would Mr. Southey's history look if reviewed in spirit of this critique, which few can read and doubt , had the Colonel written with the pen of an angel, would not have found much favour in the eyes of this iewer. The noble emphatic maxims, military, politi- and philosophical, thickly scattered through his es, are passed over without notice. The style, so geally admired, is also censured. This, like other kinds beauty, may be principally matter of taste; but the t test of eloquence is the effect it produces. These nutes have been devoured by even persons of the most ectful occupations with as much avidity as the roances of Scott, and have sent the blood rushing luriously through many a gallant heart. But "envy will follow merit like its shade."

As our object, at present, is to expose the want of candour of the Quarterly Review, and not to inquire into the Spanish character, we shall only remind the Iberian critic, that in their very best days, when superior discipline and tactics had rendered them, for the time, the best troops of continental Europe, the raw British soldiers, fresh from the plough, not only stopped their career of victory, but converted their triumphs into rout. Of the naval conflicts of the two nations we need not speak. There is no nation, not even the French, over whom the British have so uniformly triumphed as the Spaniards.

We continue to receive communications respecting the extraordinary appointment of Captain Sir Henry Bethune to the rank of Major-General, over the heads of hundreds of officers of service and reputation. The gallant Major-General, or some unwise friend, has put forth a statement of his Persian services as a "Lieutenant." Does he suppose that before we noticed his extraordinary promotion we did not make ourselves fully acquainted with his history and claims? that we did not know his name was originally "Lindesay?" Though his medals be in "pure gold," and the register signed by "Mohammed Shah," we could point out hordes of Lieutenants and Captains who, in point of services, have as much pretension to so unfair a promotion. We advise Sir Henry's "Persian friend" to be quiet, or we may next examine his claims.

It appears by last night's Gazette that Captain Shee, of the Indian Army, has got the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in PERSIA: and had Sir Henry Bethune's promotion been confined to like manner to Persia, instead of being extended to all Asia, it would not have been so much objectionable.

United Service Museum.—We have but little space to bestow upon a notice of the lecture recently delivered at this Institution, by the Rev. Dr. Lardner, on the Mechanical Agency of Steam, and the probable effects of its application to Naval and Military purposes. It is, however, incumbent upon us to give a few of his facts, and some of the conclusions at which he arrived in a course of reasoning thereon. In the first place it may be observed that nothing yet known tended to warrant a belief that in battles or sieges the agency of steam could ever be employed to produce anything like the effect of gunpowder; although it was quite possible that in steam-vessels it might furnish powerful means of defence against boarding, if applied to the movement of armed revolving wheels, or in jetting with great force streams of boiling water, to the probably great dismay or complete discomfiture of an approaching enemy. Naval warfare, therefore, it would appear, is not likely to be much affected by the use of steam, except from the extension of its employment as a motive power for the the purposes of propulsion. Military operations on shore, it would follow, will be affected only by the facility which steam must afford for the transposition of men, arms, and ammunition. To the rapidity with which some military movements might, by railroads, be made, limits could scarce be assigned, and the cutting through or destroying most parts of a railway could only produce delay according to the extent of destruction accomplished, the effect being indeed very little worse than rendering so much of a common road impassible. The Doctor most properly exhibited satisfactory proof that the danger of explosion in high and low pressure engines was much the same. Practical men admitted the truth of this; and high pressure engines alone were employed on railroads, whilst condensing, and consequently clumsy, engines, only were in use afloat. In the eyes of ignorance and prejudice, danger at sea and danger ashore appeared to be very different things, for people cheerfully exposed themselves to all the danger of explosion from high pressure engines in travelling by railways who would not sanction the use of like engines at sea. Extended knowledge would, in time, sweep such prejudice away, and to the general use of high pressure engines, consideration of space, weight, and expense to be saved, must bring us, at length, not only on the land, but at sea. One fact, recently discovered in practice, above all things deserves especial notice. That is, by diminishing the length of cylinders in steam-engines, and proportionately increasing the circumference thereof, additional power may be obtained in a scarcely credible ratio. To this last subject we shall probably some day return; in the mean time, we think that lectures from such men, delivered with some regularity, may prove highly advantageous to the United Service, and save a hitherto sluggish Institution from sinking into the ocean of contempt.

A Committee has been appointed in the House of Lords, on the motion of the Duke of Leinster, to inquire into the best means of facilitating the intercourse between the United Kingdom and our North American Colonies. The object sought, is to ascertain whether it would not be attended with considerable public advantages were the packets, conveying the mails to those Colonies, to take their departure from a port in the south-west of Ireland, instead of from a port in the English Channel, whereby they would at once avoid all the dangers and delays of the Channel navigation. This question has already been fully discussed in our columns, and the letters, under the signature of A Post Captain, have clearly shown the great national benefit which must accrue from this arrangement, not only as regards the North American Packets, but also those which convey the mails to the West Indies and to the Brazils, by accelerating the transmission of letters many days every voyage.

The evidence, which has been already given before the Committee of the House of Commons on this subject, and which was published in the Session before the last, by order of the House, all goes to prove the facts which have been stated in our columns, as to the importance of making a port in Ireland the starting point for the Packets crossing the Atlantic, instead of the one on the south-west coast of England, and, as the testimony is so conclusive on this question, we will give a few extracts from the published report.

In the examination of Captain Beaufort, the present talented and experienced Hydrographer of the Admiralty, he is asked by the Committee (page 40 of the Report), "What would be the advantages with respect to embarkation for even the west and south of Europe, but more particularly for America generally, by choosing a harbour in the west of Ireland instead of one within the Channel? Captain Beaufort's answer is, "The first object of vessels bound to the Mediterranean, or to the West Indies, or to America, on the supposition of an adverse wind, is to get far enough out of the Channel to be able to adopt either tack without fear of the land; for, when it blows hard, no ship can work to windward without sufficient room for long stretches, and to take advantage of the changes of winds and tides. The next object is, when once fairly out, to gain sufficient westing to fetch round Cape Finisterre. Now, by sailing from a port on the west coast of Ireland, both those objects are secured, as with a south-west gale a vessel could at once stretch off to the north-west, instead of struggling for days between Ushant and the Lizard, and, with the wind at WEST, she would be able to clear Cape Finisterre, while a vessel from FALMOUTH would be embayed and obliged to stand to the north west to keep an offing. One disadvantage of Falmouth as a port of embarkation is, the difficulty of sailing when the wind blows with violence from the southward. It appears that, on an average of the last four years, six Packets per annum have been detained about 40 hours each! A Packet Harbour should, if possible, have two ways of exit, like Spithead, for instance." This, we may here observe, BEAUMARIS possesses, which Port has before been so strongly recommended by our correspondent A Post Captain. Captain Beaufort then goes on to state, in his subsequent answers to the different questions put to him by the Committee, that "In comparing the coasts of the two countries (England and Ireland), IRELAND seems to have this advantage, that a vessel once out of any of her western ports, can weather the land either on one tack or the other." And further, with respect to the prevailing winds, he observes, "The average of ten years there were on each year 186 days of westerly winds and 101 easterly." And in answer to the question put by the Committee—"Are you in possession of any facts on which to estimate the difference generally, in sailing to the southward and westward from a more westerly harbour, compared to one within the Channel?" Captain Beaufort replied—"I have had a sheet of tracks projected on a small scale from the logbooks of thirty packets, which had to contend with foul winds after leaving FALMOUTH; and, supposing that other vessels had sailed from a port on the south-west of Ireland at the same time, and been affected by the same winds and weather, their comparative progress is shown by a similar series of tracks in red ink. The average result of these tracks gives about 4½ days in favour of the Packet from Ireland." This average advantage of nearly five days in each voyage out and home, is of vast moment to our commercial interests in the transmission of the mails; but, as Captain Beaufort most truly adds, it is not this accelerated progress of the mails alone that deserves to be considered, but also the saving of this time in the wear and tear of the vessels, together with the health and comfort of the passengers. A collection of homeward-bound tracks, similar to those alluded to, show the like great advantage of a harbour in the south-west of Ireland. The average difference on the return voyage likewise being upwards of five days in its favour, thus making just ten days altogether out and home (see page 43 of the Report). It may here be remarked, as regards the outward voyage, that it is stated in the evidence that the American Captains always consider half their time and all their danger is passed when they reach the longitude of the south-west end of Ireland on their return voyages.

We regret that we cannot afford more space at present to give further extracts from this interesting report; we

, however, to recur to the subject again, it being one h seriously affects our communications with our nies in North America, and likewise those in the t Indies; our intercourse, as regards correspondence passengers with the former, being now almost wholly ed on by the vessels belonging to America, which ey more than nineteen-twentieths of the men of busi-, as well as a still larger proportion of the letters veen the United Kingdom and the Canadas; and, as rds the passengers and letters for the United States, American Packets may be said at this moment to y almost the whole; for example, a return obtained ugh the Treasury shows, that in one year only the ber of passengers leaving Liverpool alone by the erican Packets amounted to between five thousand six thousand, making an average annually to and of near eleven thousand persons, whilst, during the e period, the total number that sailed in his Ma-y's Packets, from Falmouth, for all parts of the ld, was only two hundred and forty! These evils, it tated in the evidence adduced, will be in a large degree ected by the King's Packets being stationed on an reme western port of the United Kingdom; the ole of the persons examined before the Committee ing concurred in opinion "that it must be obvious e would be vast advantages in every respect by esta-hing his Majesty's Packets in a port on the South-st of Ireland.

A Peep at the Court.—An officer of the Guards, who has lately had the honour of dining frequently at Wind-sor, gives the following account of the domestic habits there:—At dinner there was much French spoken, but more German, which the Queen utters with clear rapi-dity and much gesticulation, frequently quoting from the poetical and prose writers in that language. Her amiable consort has something cheerful to say to every guest, with an extraordinary power of remembering names and events which interest the parties addressed. He is a hearty laugher, and enjoys a gay anecdote extremely, being a good raconteur himself. After dinner the Queen em-ploys herself with the German worsted work, of which she is now engaged in executing a fabulous pattern, the gentlemen standing around her table and conversing while she works. Our informant was many times struck by her reference to the opinions and principles of Queen Charlotte, more especially when the young Prince of Padua inquired as to some points of etiquette in this country; among others, he asked "how was the line drawn as to receiving or excluding any female whose con-duct was said to be questionable?" The Queen replied, "It was the rule of the late Queen that if a lady's cha-racter was unimpeached before marriage, the Court was not to know any of her actions as long as she lived under her husband's roof; once leaving that protection, under any pretence, after having excited observation by her conduct, no circumstances could reinstate her in her former position in society." The Prince added, "And in the case of divorced persons, Madam?" The reply was, "The Queen disapproval of this proceeding so much, that, although she publicly received some persons thus situated, they were never admitted to her private parties." The Prince inquired, "When the New Palace was to be inhabited?" and was answered, "I wish it as soon as possible, and constantly go to superintend its de-coration. I quite love my rooms there, and those charm-ing gardens." During the evening the King played cri-bage and whist with some of the veteran companions of his early days, but constantly mixed in the conversations around, relating adventures which had occurred to him and his family. He always uses the words "my father," or "my mother," instead of the more formal titles, giving an impression of natural affection in the allusions to them. Politics were never once introduced, and persons of all parties were invited together. The dress of the Queen in private is as plain as possible, generally a sim-ple light silk; and she wears very few ornaments, except her rings, which are always of great value and beauty. She is much paler than last year, and in figure consider-ably slighter. Her consort seems in excellent health, occasionally disposed to sleep after dinner, a habit he much dislikes, and dreads its increase with his years.

New Club.—The crowded state of the principal Clubs, and the consequent difficulty in obtaining admission, have induced some noblemen and gentlemen, with whom are associated several Naval and Military officers, to open a new Club, and one is now in progress of formation in the immediate vicinity of St. James's. It is to be entirely unconnected with party or politics, and is to be founded on the basis of the Union. At the principal Clubs there are upwards of 10,000 persons on the Candidates' Lists, many of whom will gladly avail themselves of an oppor-tunity to become members of the new Club.

Clayton, Bart., M.P., and many other gentlemen of rank and influence. It appears that no less than 251 human beings have been rescued from a watery grave during the past year, either by individuals in direct communication with this noble society, or by others heretofore unknown to it, but rewarded by medals and testimonials for their intrepid and successful exer-tions in the cause of humanity. Nine individuals re-ceived this honourable token on Wednesday from the hands of the chairman. Their names are, Master Wil-loughby, Lieut. Somerville, Mr. Fitzjames, Mr. J. Crawford, Mr. W. Pritchard, Master Keys, Mr. J. Morum, and Mr. W. Soame. During the evening 17 persons, who, during the year, had been restored to life when apparently drowned, walked in procession round the room, carrying in their hands the bibles with which they had been presented on their recovery. We are com-pelled from want of space to abridge our account of this very interesting anniversary.

Yesterday at half-past twelve the King and Queen, the Duchess of Kent and the Princess Victoria, attended by a numerous suite, occupying altogether seven car-riages, proceeded to Somerset House to have a private view of the exhibition.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 25th April.—Lord Lyndhurst presented a petition from the proprietors of the Times, Morning Herald, Standard, and Morning Post, complaining of the restriction about to be laid upon newspapers by im-posing on papers of a certain size a low stamp duty, and a larger tax upon papers which exceeded the restricted size. The petitioners also stated, that if the double papers were discontinued a great injury to the revenue would be the consequence.—Several petitions were pre-sented for the better observance of the Sabbath.—Lord Duncannon stated that a Bill would shortly be intro-duced in the House of Commons to amend the Act com-monly called "Sir Perrin's Act." The Noble Lord then postponed the consideration of the Irish Constabulary Bill till Monday next.

Tuesday, 26th April.—On the order of the day being moved for the House to resolve itself into a committee on the Irish Municipal Corporations Bill, Lord FITZGERALD and VESEY moved—"That it be an instruction to the committee that they have power to make provision for the abolition of such corporations, and for such arrangements as may be necessary on their abolition for securing the efficient and impartial administration of justice, and the peace and good government of cities and towns in Ireland." The Lord CHANCELLOR said that all parties admitted that evils existed which it was necessary should be removed, but no cure could take place if the remedy proposed by the Noble Lord were adopted. Lord ABINGER did not see the necessity of creating new corporations. Lord HOLLAND defended the Bill. He supposed the Noble and Learned Lord (Lyndhurst) had delegated the introduction of the instruction, because he was unwilling to be the executioner of that very corporation system which he, a short time ago, so highly extolled. Lord LYNDHURST said, that whatever he recommended he should always have the courage, if necessary, to bring forward. As to the delegation of the introduction of this subject to his Noble Friend, the same thing had been done in the other House on this very question. Lord MELBOURNE was firmly of opinion that it would be better to go into the consideration of the Bill as originally proposed, and that their Lordships would take a very hasty and imprudent step in acceding to the instruction moved by the Noble Lord. The House then divided, when the instruction was carried by a majority of 84, the numbers being, for the original motion 119, for the amendment 203.

THURSDAY, 28th April.—Petitions were presented in favour of the Irish Municipal Reform Bill and for the better observance of the Sabbath; and from Bombay for the equalisation of the duties on coffee, sugar, and tobacco. The Benefices, Plurality, and Clergy Residence Bill was reported with amendments, and the second reading appointed for Monday week. The Lord CHANCELLOR introduced two bills for the Reform of the Court of Chancery. Lord LANGDALE, Lord LYNDHURST, and Lord ABINGER objected that the bills did not effect their principal object—the separation of the political from the judicial functions of the Chancellor. Lord MELBOURNE saw nothing in these objections that might not be removed in a future stage of the proceedings. Both Bills were read a first time.

FRIDAY, 29th April.—Several petitions were presented praying that some measure might be adopted to compel the better observance of the Sabbath Day.—The Earl of HADDINGTON pointed out certain inaccuracies in the amended returns which had been ordered relative to the Constabulary Force in Ireland.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 25th April.—A great number of petitions were presented for the better observance of the Sabbath. Sir G. SINCLAIR gave notice that at the proper time he should take the sense of the House on the grant to Maynooth College.—The House then resolved itself into a committee of the whole House on Irish tithes, and Lord MORPETH laid before the committee the measure proposed by Government for the settlement of that important question. He concluded by moving—"That it is expedient to commute the composition of tithes in Ireland into a rent-charge payable by the first estate of inheritance, and to make further provision for the better execution of ecclesiastical duties." Sir R. PEEL, on the understanding that the resolution was moved simply to enable the Government to bring in the Bill, thought it better not to provoke premature discussion: he reserved to himself the power of entering into the principle and details of the measure at a future stage. Lord STANLEY adopted the same course. The resolution was agreed to.

TUESDAY, 26th April—Lord STORMONT moved the second reading of the Great Northern Railway Bill, upon which Colonel Sibthorp moved that it be read a second time that day six months. A discussion ensued, in which Mr. Hardy, Mr. G. Heathcote, Lord Alford, and Mr. Lyma opposed the Bill, and Mr. Eaton, Mr. D. W. Harvey, Mr. Finch, and other Members supported it. On a division the Bill was lost by a majority of 14, the numbers being, for the second reading 85, against it, 99. Mr. ROEBUCK moved for certain papers connected with the affairs of Canada, to the production of which Sir G. Grey said there was no objection.—Mr. RIPON then brought forward his resolution, "that the attendance of the Bishops in Parliament was prejudicial to the cause of religion." The motion was seconded by Mr. GISBORNE. After a few words from Mr. Trevor and Mr. Lawson, Lord J. RUSSELL thought that neither the House nor the country were disposed to entertain any proposition of the kind. The House then divided—For the motion, 99; against it, 180; majority, 127.—Mr. W. S. O'BRIEN brought forward his motion for the repeal of the tax on window-glass; but finding that the House was indisposed to entertain the question, withdrew it.

WEDNESDAY, 27th April.—The Marquis of CHANDOS brought forward his motion to the effect that, in the application of any surplus on the revision of taxation or otherwise, due regard should be had to the necessity of affording relief to the agricultural interest. Lord J. RUSSELL considered the motion premature, because the committee appointed to inquire into the subject had not yet made its report, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer had not stated what reductions of the taxation of the country it was his intention to make. He therefore moved that the House pass on to the order of the day. The Earl of DARLINGTON supported the motion. Mr. HUME contended that the agriculturalists had no claims to relief superior to the other interests of the country, and that they paid no more than their fair share of the general taxation. Sir J. GRAHAM hoped that the Noble Lord would withdraw his motion, otherwise he should be obliged to vote against it. Col. SIBTHORP and Mr CAYLEY supported the motion, and Col. THOMSON opposed it. Sir R. PEEL hoped the motion would be withdrawn; but if not, he should vote against it. The House divided—For Lord Chandos' motion, 172; against it, 208; majority, 36.

THURSDAY, 28th April.—A long discussion took place on a motion by Mr. W. P. Campbell, that the projectors of the Stirling Canal Bill should be allowed to proceed without further notice, although they had not strictly complied with the standing orders. Ultimately the motion was withdrawn.—The Herne Bay Pier Bill was read a second time, and on the motion of Mr. P. THOMSON, a select committee was appointed to inquire into the state of Dover Harbour.—The ATTORNEY-GENERAL brought up the report of the committee on the Edinburgh Poor Rates Bill. After a short conversation the House divided, when the Bill was carried by a majority of 31.—Mr. WAKLEY moved for a "copy of the evidence and verdicts of the juries at the inquests lately held at Woolwich, on the bodies of two Marines who had been subjected to the punishment of flogging." Lord J. RUSSELL opposed the motion, on the ground that it was inexpedient that the evidence taken before a legal tribunal should be submitted to the House, excepting in a case of great necessity. The motion was withdrawn.—Mr. BUCKINGHAM obtained leave to bring in a "Bill for the repeal of so much of the Copyright Act as enjoined the gratuitous delivery of eleven copies of every published work to eleven of the public institutions, colleges, and libraries of different towns in the kingdom."—Mr. AGLIONBY obtained leave to bring in a Bill to alter and amend the law relating to the period of the execution of persons convicted of murder, and the prison regulations as to murderers under sentence. He proposed that the sentence of death should not be carried into execution before the expiration of fifteen days after sentence was passed, nor later than twenty-seven days.

FRIDAY, 29th April.—After the presentation of several petitions, the House, on the motion of the Attorney-General, went into Committee on the Registration of Voters' Bill, and several clauses were agreed to.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence

FRANCE.—The Paris journals of Tuesday dwell principally upon the approaching excursion of the Dukes of Orleans and Nemours to Germany. The Crown Prince of Sweden is to meet the Duke of Orleans and his brother in the Prussian capital, and thence proceed with them to Vienna, for which purpose the Austrian Court has intimated to Prince Gustavus Vasa that he had better take that opportunity of visiting Italy.

SPAIN.—Gen. Evans with two battalions of the Legion landed at St. Sebastian on the 21st. Don Carlos was on the 10th at Elloro, which place Gen. Egoia had left in the evening of the 19th on another secret expedition. Cordova marched towards Bilboa on the 19th with imposing forces. Several engagements of little significance on either side have been reported. The chief subject of immediate interest in Madrid, is a duel, which has been fought between M. Mendizabal and M. Isturiz.

PORTUGAL.—The marriage with the young Queen was celebrated on the 8th inst. with considerable splendour. The reception of the future partner of the throne of Portugal is said to have been very enthusiastic. Campos had resigned his portfolio as Minister of Finances, and the ministry has not yet been completed.

AUSTRIA.—Vienna papers affirm that the measures for the reduction of the army are prosecuted with great activity, and will be on a very large scale. It is said that about 15,000 horses will be sold.

ITALY.—Letters from Rome say that the festival of Easter was celebrated with the greatest solemnity. The King of Naples was expected, but did not come. Don Miguel went to a convent, and with his own hands washed the feet of the pilgrims; he also distributed orders and titles to the friends surrounding him.

SWEDEN.—Stockholm, April 5.—The Fademestandet, a ship of the line, and a tender, are fitting out at Carlscrona, and a cutter brig here, to be employed, as we hear, as barrack ships, to give the boatmen an opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of navigation. Another ship of the line and a smaller man-of-war are to be fitted out to convey the relations of our Royal Family to Lubeck and back again. A division of gun-boats is also preparing to exercise the men during the summer for 20 days. The Nya Argus says, "However small in itself this squadron is, yet there has not been such a considerable naval armament in Sweden for many years as this, which originates in so many circumstances. What is strange enough, we have heard several persons connect the establishment of a line of telegraphs from this place to Lorndsort with these armaments."

TURKEY, Constantinople, March 30.—The Turkish fleet is ready to sail. A part has already left for the Dardanelles. Much uncertainty still exists as to Mehemet Ali's intentions regarding the firman relative to his monopoly in Syria. The English Embassy is in active communication on the subject with the Porte. In the course of last week 60,000 Turkish piastres have been sent from Alexandria in payment of the Pacha of Egypt's tribute.

EGYPT.—The Pacha, as if he had not done enough already for immortality, has given orders that one of the pyramids of Geuss shall be pulled down in order to furnish stones for the Barage. This only was wanting to consummate his glory. The fame of him "who fired the Ephesian dome," will sink into obscurity before the lustre of this achievement. Old Cheops must yield to Mehemet Ali—he who has stood on the rock of ages, the wonder of the world, who has seen barbarism and civilization alike respect him, must at length give way to the spirit of thrift, and bow his lofty head at the foot of this modern Attila.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—Bellini's admired Opera of I Puritani, with the same effective cast as last season, was performed on Thursday evening, and went off with the greatest eclat. The favourite polacca, "Son vergin vezzosa," was most brilliantly executed by Grisi, and rapturously encored. The same compliment was bestowed on the spirited duet by Tamburini and Lablache, commencing, "Suoni la tromba," and it richly deserved the honour. We do not think Rubini ever sang more beautifully, and his acting was really unexceptionable. The intense expression which he infused into the following delicious adagio, drew forth an unanimous encore—"Ella e tramante." The four great artistes were never more enthusiastically nor deservedly applauded. At the termination of the opera, the numerous assemblage of royalty, rank, and fashion, testified their satisfaction at the display of vocal and histrionic talent, by renewed tokens of approbation, when the four unrivalled vocalists were compelled to appear before the curtain. Her Majesty was present, and appeared to take great interest in the performance.

COVENT GARDEN.—A new after-piece, entitled The Assurance Company, was played, for the first time, on Saturday, and has been repeated every evening since, with tolerable success. This piece is a translation from the French, and strongly reminds us of Morton's inimitable farce of The Invincibles; we are informed that Mr. Oshaldiston is the translator. The military evolutions of the ladies of the Assurance Company are amusing enough, in their way, but very far inferior to the little band of Invincibles who once mounted guard on this stage, under the command of Corporal Vestris. Miss Turpin, who commands the present company, was never seen to less advantage; she should never appear in male costume; she is too gentle and feminine to swagger and bluster through a part of this description. The only part in the piece worthy of favourable notice was that sustained by Mr Tilbury. A new piece, called O Flanagan and the Fairies; or, a Midsummer Night's Dream, NOT Shakspeare's, was produced at this theatre on Tuesday evening, and proved successful. As a drama the piece does not possess the slightest merit. Its success depended on the humour of Power, who, by hard fighting, dancing, and drinking, managed to keep his audience in a continued roar of laughter. Miss Turpin sang two or three Irish airs very pleasing, and Vale, as a hawker of free-stone, gave his comic song with excellent effect and in good taste. The piece was well received. The Hungarian singers are not likely to prove attractive.

LYCEUM.—The new piece entitled the Huguenots, produced on Monday evening, is doomed to enjoy but a short life. This piece, in the hands of a skilful adapter, might have been made highly effective, there is plenty of excellent material in the drama for the formation of a very efficient opera; and the opportunities for the introduction of full concerted pieces of music, are not only numerous, but striking in point of situation. With a trifling alteration in the last scene, this piece would have nswered well as an opera. The denouement is very adly managed, the tableau in the back ground particularly absurd, indeed, the whole of the last scene is of the eal Coburg stamp. The part sustained by Mrs. Keeley as beneath her talent, and indeed out of her line. She ang two songs of little merit, and no novelty, quite as vell as they deserved to be given. Mr. Hemming and Ir. Searle did their utmost for the success of the piece, but without avail, the audience were not to e won over to applaud; indeed, we never sat out a piece hat received less applause that was allowed to be nnounced for repetition. We wish Mr. Bland would blige us by endeavouring to sing a little in time, and hen, perhaps, the chorus singers might be induced to ollow his example.

Literary Notice.

Sketches of Germany and the Germans, with a Glance at Poland, Hungary, and Switzerland, in 1834, 1835, and 1836. By an Englishman resident in Germany. 2 vols. Whittaker and Co.

We could not wish for a more pleasant and agreeable work of Travels than these Sketches. They are entertaining in the extreme; afford an abundance of information as well as anecdote, much of a novel character; and there is throughout the work a continuous interest. As a "Guide Book" to tourists in Germany, it may unquestionably rank with the best in our language. The title being fully explicit of the contents of the work, we shall offer such extracts as are likely to be most acceptable to our class of readers, and will give them an insight into the general character of the volumes. We will commence with a short notice of the battle of Lissa, 'the theatre of Frederick of Prussia's most daring, most glorious achievement. Our author has a decided penchant for the memory of "Old Fritz," the pet name of the Prussians for Frederick the Great.

"Frederick, with his little army, arrived on the field of Lissa, after a fatiguing march from Rosbach, fully expecting to effect a junction with General Beiern and a numerous division of the Prussian army; but, instead of this, he received the dispiriting intelligence that his General was completely routed, and consequently his last hope of saving Silesia destroyed, as Breslau and Schweidnitz had capitulated to the victorious troops of Austria. Such a combination of misfortunes would have bowed down the spirit of any ordinary man; but the great mind of Frederick rose with his danger; and to the utter astonishment of the enemy, he took a commanding position, harangued and inspirited his little army, which amounted only to thirty-three thousand, gave battle to the Imperialists, who numbered ninety thousand; and though already flushed with victory, and fighting with the most determined bravery, yet they were entirely defeated, solely through his superior tactics; he had also so well matured his plans, that if the shades of night had not covered the retreat of the vanquished, it would have been one of the most complete victories on record. This splendid achievement not only enrolled his name as the first General of the age, but secured the important duchy of Silesia to the Prussian sceptre. His laconic message to the British Minister, written on the head of a drum, announcing the important event, was truly characteristic of old Fritz: 'J'ai joué le tout! J'ai gagné le tout!'

"After the battle he rode with a few followers to the castle of Lissa (still in the hands of the Austrians, and full of superior officers who had fled from the field), and requested accommodation for the night. The demand was so singular and unexpected that the officers felt doubtful whether they were to be considered as prisoners. However, they thought it would be the wisest course courteously to grant his request; and the novel spectacle was presented of a guard of soldiers rendering military honours to their victor, and of hostile Generals acting as hosts to that very conqueror to whom the next morning they were to resign their swords."

The traveller's visit to Kriblowitz, where, by the side of the road, with no other canopy but heaven and the united foliage of three lindens, reposes our old favourite, Marshal Blucher, calls forth some comments:—

"This spot was, no doubt, endeared to his recollection from its being the theatre of the important battle of Katzbatch, when, in 1813, at the advanced age of seventy-one, at the head of the Prussian Landwehr, he completely routed the French under Marshal Macdonald, taking seventeen thousand prisoners and one hundred pieces of cannon. This battle was productive of the most important results to Germany; it reassured and raised the almost broken spirits of the people, and was, if I may so speak, the vanguard of the glorious battle of Leipsic. For some time previous to his death, the health of the old veteran had been visibly declining, but he appears to have passed away without any severe suffering; his faithful aide-de-camp and friend, Graf Nostitz, who saved his life at the battle of Ligny, attended him during his last moments. A few minutes before his death, he gently pressed the hand of his friend, saying, 'Nostitz! sie haben vieles von mir gelernt, lernen sie nun auch von mir ruhig sterben.'—(Nostitz, you have learned much from me, learn now how to die.) And he thus calmly expired, on the 12th of May, 1819, aged seventy-seven.

"This great German, the Herman of his age, commenced his military career as Lieutenant of Hussars, under Frederick the Great, and soon distinguished himself; his undaunted bravery was fully equalled by his impetuosity, which, on some occasions, bordered on rashness; he possessed a high sense of honour, and was keenly susceptible of neglect: this he showed at a very early period; for, on the promotion of Jägerofield, his comrade, above him, whose only claim to such a distinction consisted in his being the son of a margrave, he wrote to the king requesting his discharge, concluding his letter with the following pithy reason for this proceeding, 'that the service was not worth the acceptance.' The reply of Old Fritz was equally laconic, and displayed as little command of temper; for he not only granted his petition, but told him he might go to the devil! ('Kann sich zum Teufel scheeren.') In decision and energy, those indispensable qualities in a great military Commander, Blucher had few equals; but his countrymen consider him to have been defective in judgment, and, without the council of the more prudent and experienced Scharnhorst, discomfiture would probably have been his fate more frequently than victory; but in steady unostentatious adherence to his engagements, however difficult might be their fulfilment, he exhibited a trait of character equally honourable to himself and invaluable to his coadjutors."

From the chronicles of Donauwerth we are furnished with the following details of the melancholy history of the ill-fated Maria, Princess of Brabant:—

"The beauty of Maria of Brabant was so highly celebrated that she attracted princely suitors from nearly every royal house in Europe, among whom she selected the handsome Duke of Bavaria, Louis V., for her husband. The loveliness of her person and amiable disposition created in him the most violent attachment, and he hardly ever permitted her to be absent from his sight a moment; her slightest wishes were gratified, and the court resounded with festive mirth and gaiety. At length, business of great importance obliged the Duke to leave home, and the indisposition of his beloved consort alone prevented her accompanying him; however, previous to his departure he took the precaution of placing her under the especial care of his own confessor, the Captain of his body guards, and his favourite sister Elizabeth Queen Dowager of Naples. Only a few days had elapsed after his departure, when Louis wrote to his adored Maria, and dispatched the letter by a courier. On the return of the messenger, the Duchess transmitted two letters, the one sealed with red, and the other with black; the former was addressed to her husband, and the letter to Graf Heinrich von Ruchen, aid-de-camp to the Duke; at the same time, the courier received the strictest orders not to permit the letter addressed to Grat Heinrich to be seen by the Duke.

"By an unlucky chance, the ill-omened mistake occurred. Louis, on perusing the superscription, instantly recognised the hand-writing of his wife; and, without waiting to examine the contents, in a paroxysm of mad frenzy, stabbed the unfortunate courier to the heart! A prey to the wildest rage of jealousy, he now mounted his horse, and rode, day and night, till he arrived at Donauwerth. The first person he encountered at the palace was the Captain of the Guards, whom he caused to be immediately put to death. He then rushed, like a maniac, to the chamber of his wife, whom he found engaged with the Queen of Naples, in embroidering a banner. The infuriated husband seized his beautiful victim by the hair, dragged her to the place of execution, and, in a voice of thunder, commanded her to prepare for instant death. In vain she protested her innocence; in vain implored for mercy. The supplications and tears of the Queen, who threw herself on her knees, together with the venerable confessor, and the loud lamentations of her maids of honour, were equally unavailing; the ruthless tyrant caused the unfortunate princess to be instantly beheaded! During the convulsive agonies of death, a locket, which she was accustomed to wear next her heart, flew open, and disclosed to the eyes of the agonised few who witnessed the murderous scene the portrait of her husband! Her countrywoman and attendant, the young and beautiful Thekla von Fannenberg, the betrothed of Graf Heinrich, shared the same fate; and the rest of her attendants were either exiled, or sentenced to be imprisoned for life. This deplorable event took place on the 18th of January, 1256, in the eighteenth year of the age of the lovely heroine of our tragic tale."

Some additional elucidations from the chronicles of Brabant show that the letter of the Princess to Heinrich contained nothing more than an injunction to surprise the Duke, by displaying her present of a banner on the next grand field day, and which was to be sent to him privately for that purpose in a few days. We shall now give a notice of the Austrian Army:—

"In every other part of the world except in Austria the drapeau blanc is the harbinger of peace; here it is the livery of war. And certainly we must congratulate the Government on the martial appearance of her well-appointed army, amounting to nearly four hundred thousand men; not an army of beardless boys of two or three years' standing, as we see in Prussia, but veterans; not an army on parchment, like that of Russia, but well-disciplined troops, commanded by excellent officers, so judiciously distributed that the élite of the army may be assembled at any given point in less than four weeks. The destinies of the empire are no longer confided to officers whose sole merit was the number of their quarterings; no young nobleman can now purchase a company or a squadron; the highest individual in the empire must go through a regular course of military studies, or commence his debût in the ranks; military schools are everywhere established, and the periodical works on military science are held in high estimation. I cannot but think that one regulation in force in the Austrian army might be advantageously adopted in our own; the whole of the men are taught swimming; and in summer this forms as essential a part of their evolutions as exercise in the field; hence we find swimming-schools on all the rivers and lakes throughout the empire. It would be well if we could end with commendation; but her military, contrasted with her humane civil code, is tyrannically severe,—as desertion, sleeping on duty, and other offences of equal magnitude, are punished with instant death; and we cannot admire the use of the lash, nor the cane carried by the non-commissioned officers, which must have a tendency to break the high military spirit of the soldier, at least if he has either intellect or feeling."

"After the battle of Wagram," said my friend, "which decided the fate of the Austrian empire, Napoleon established his head-quarters at Schönbrun. It so happened that I was on duty in the palace about midnight, and while passing the apartment of the Emperor I heard a noise, appearing as if he were in the act of repelling an attack, which caused me to fly to his assistance. In doing so, I was accompanied by another officer and the Mameluke, when a most ridiculous scene presented itself. The greatest warrior of Europe was engaged, sword in hand, in mortal combat, charging, not an assassin, but—must I say it—a cat! Upon seeing how contemptible an enemy we had to subdue, we could not forbear smiling, and the Emperor, after a hearty laugh, good-naturedly related to us the origin of his dislike to the little tyrant of rats and mice. 'When I was very young,' said he, 'I took great pleasure in hunting cats and dogs; and when I saw them flying from my naughty strokes, I fancied myself already a Cæsar. One of my sisters had a pet Angola cat, to whom I had become an object of great dislike, from the incessant war I waged against it. Having one day found it alone in a room, I commenced my attack as usual, whip in hand: the little tiger, frantic with rage, flew at my head, tore and bit me in such a manner that the marks remain to this day. My cries soon brought assistance, but so deep was the impression stamped upon my young mind, that I verily believe, at this moment, I should prefer attacking a lion to a cat.'"

"In 1805, as the celebrated composer, Haydn, was regarding, with no very agreeable feelings the triumphal march of the French troops, as they took possession of the capital of his beloved country, he was not a little alarmed when he observed an officer and his guard stop at the door of his house, and demand an interview. The immortal composer of the Creation advanced to meet them, and with a trembling voice demanded for what purpose they sought him, adding, with great humility, 'I am merely poor Haydn, the composer; what crime can I have committed against the French government?' 'None,' replied the officer, smiling; 'on the contrary, I have received the orders of the Emperor Napoleon to place a sentinel at your door, in order to protect and honour an individual of such rare genius.' The guard was continued while the French occupied Vienna; and whenever the troops passed his door, the band played some of his most celebrated compositions."

We shall conclude with a sketch of the situation of Napoleon and his army after the battle of Wagram, as related to our traveller by an Italian gentleman:—

"Immediately after the battle of Wagram," said my friend, "the Emperor took up his head-quarters at Schönbrun, and, although sated with victory, yet our situation was anything but enviable — winter approaching, and our troops in the heart of an enemy's country, who had evinced towards us the most rancorous hostility, and in action the most unflinching bravery. We heard nothing more of erecting Hungary and Bohemia into separate kingdoms, to be governed by French princes; but we did hear that the natives were rising in tens of thousands, and that it was not improbable the Sicilian vespers would be repeated in Germany; we also heard that the army was discontented, and, worse than all, that a dreadful conspiracy was formed, which had for its object the destruction of the imperial power, and the election of a republic; its ramifications extended through every part of France, but Napoleon had so entrenched himself in the affections of the soldiers, that his death was not once contemplated; the plan was merely to compel him to acknowledge a republican form of government, and accept the office of president for life.

"The conspirators assumed the name of Philadelphieists, and their chief was the famous General Oudet, acknowledged to be one of the bravest officers in the French army, he was generous, daring, and eloquent—the idol of the soldiers, to whom he was ever a zealous friend. Such was the man who had now bent his energies to the emancipation of France, and the destruction of the imperial dynasty of Napoleon. But heaven had not willed that his high purpose should be accomplished, for, immediately after the battle of Wagram, he received the commands of the Emperor to come to Schönbrun, and bring with him a certain number of officers, whose names were specified. Whether the General and his cortége set forward with the hope of being promoted, we cannot say; however, on their route, under shelter of the darkness of the night, they were attacked by a superior force, and all massacred or mortally wounded; the unfortunate General Oudet was among the few who lingered till morning; he was only able to articulate these words, 'Betrayed! unhappy France!' One circumstance, however, told a tale more eloquent than a thousand tongues, for although the whole was attributed to the treacherous Austrians, yet there was not found a single German among the slain, as the whole of the assailants the officers had killed in their defence were soldiers of the French army; thereby creating the possible, I fear too well-grounded, suspicion, that Bonaparte had taken this method of crushing a conspiracy, which he dreaded openly to brave."

Gold is the only material with which decayed teeth can be filled with any permanently beneficial result; the various remedia to which so many impossibilities are unblushingly attributed, being amalgams of mercury, with silver, tin &c., quickly combine with the acids of the mouth, and thus, forming muriates of those metals, turn the teeth black, and ultimately destroy them. Craig Thomson, 25, New Bond-street, has succeeded in making a preparation of gold, which, without inflicting the least pain, effectually arrests the progress of decay, and resembles the teeth in point of colour much more than any other invention now in use.

To A. Rowland and Son, 20, Hatton Garden, London.

Gentlemen,—I consider it a duty I owe to you, and to the public in general, to declare the very happy results I have lately experienced from the use of your Macassar Oil. I am now in my fifty-seventh year, and about a year ago I returned from the East Indies, where I had resided upwards of twenty-six years. On my arrival in India, I began gradually to lose my hair, and until last October had been completely bald for upwards of twenty years. About last Christmas an eminent physician recommended me to use your Oil. I accordingly purchased two large bottles; in about a month after I perceived some faint appearance of hair on my head. I continued using it, and I now declare that my head is at present completely covered with hair of a dark brown colour; and although at my years it is usual for hairs in general to turn grey, I likewise assure you that I have not a single grey hair in my head. You have my full permission to make what use you please of the above.

I am, Gentlemen, your grateful servant,

DODSWORTH and SON, 49, Lombard-street. Established 1781.

ANGLING.—J. CHEEK, Fishing-Rod and Tackle Maker, No. 52, Strand, begs leave most respectfully to acquaint the Nobility, Gentry, and Anglers generally, that he has the largest assortment in London of the very best articles in trout, salmon, and other rods; patent fly and trolling-lines, winches, tackle-cases, &c.; 200 gross of superior trout and salmon flies, from 2s. 4d. per dozen. Bait constantly kept. Lists of prices of upwards of one hundred articles forwarded, on applying, if by letter post paid. Orders from the country, with references in town, attended to with punctuality and despatch, and any article exchanged if not approved of. Country dealers supplied. Dobbin Perch, 52, Strand.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it. Inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1825. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHEREAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions, it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Langoor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals, also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Windy Flatulencies, Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undermained, and 209 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, G. Loudon, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Peretra, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Cowls, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 16, King William-street, New London bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

OF IMPORTANCE to INVALIDS.—ROBERT WISS very respectfully invites public attention to his PATENT PORTABLE WATER-CLOSETS, which an [illegible] manner damned has proved to answer their intended purpose. In consequence of many complaints from his friends of having been imposed on by imitations of the above, which after a few months become useless, R. W. cautions the Public against the same, and requests them to observe that unless "R. Wiss, 88, Charing-cross," is printed on the basin, they are not genuine. To be seen at the Manufactory, 88, Charing-cross, near the Admiralty. Price, from 21s.

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE.—Its va[luable] and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced its salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and effectual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the officinalis parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla, Buchu, and other choice alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scorbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Diabetes, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercury or from any other cause.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, J. W. Stirling, 86, High-street, Whitechapel, from whom it can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London (carriage free), in Bottles, at 4s. 6d., 10s., and 20s. each.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The Proprietor being apprised of several unprincipled Medicine Venders, who, when applied to for this remedy, substitute, under the name of Cubebs, Sarsaparilla, &c., a worthless and injurious article of their own make, feels it to be an imperative duty to state that it is absolutely necessary, before purchasing, to see the name "J. W. Stirling," Whitechapel, is engraved on the Government Stamp affixed outside the wrapper on the bottle, without which it cannot be genuine.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "Joseph Henry Green."

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From Bransby Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New Street, Spring Gardens, April 15, 1836."

From William Hentsch, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been of many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "William Harris.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR SOILING the SKIN.—INFALLIBLE HAIR DYE.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID'S SANS CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few days change light, red, or grey hair to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between the two, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots or discolouring the skin or linen. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and Gentlemen of the turf in removing "white stockings," and giving to every part of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, William Day and Co., at their Old Patent and celebrated Sauce Warehouse, 65, Gracechurch-street; Hanway and Co., Oxford-street; and by all the principal Chemists, Perfumers, Booksellers, in town and country, in bottles, at 5s., 10s., and 21s. each, having directions for use, with a fac-simile of the signature of Agid Hassen; also that of William Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

TO the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public.—Families of distinction and Visitors to the Metropolis at its Season, who frequently experience great difficulty in suiting themselves with FURNISHED or UNFURNISHED HOUSES, owing to the great demand, are respectfully informed every attention will be afforded in the House and Estate Agency Department of HENRY L. COOPER, in obtaining or disposing of the same, or in the Selling, Letting, or Valuing any description of property in Town or Country.

From the central situations of the Establishments in their respective commanding localities, every facility is rendered to families honouring his house with their instructions, and offering the advantage of a double register usually replete with eligible properties.

The general introduction of PLATE GLASS for Windows, Carriages, Conservatories, Internal Decorations, &c., has induced H. L. C. to annex a Tariff of Sizes, adapted to those uses, with prices exceedingly moderate, but of a quality not to be excelled; also is added an outline of his general business, comprising the Cabinet, Upholstery, and Decorative Departments, in each of which the most careful attention is paid both to quality and cost.

HENRY L. COOPER, Plate Glass and Furniture Warehouses, No. 24, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Western Branch, 67, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street, left hand side.

Among the variety of Articles above referred to, will be found LOOKING GLASSES of every denomination and size, varying from one foot to eighty feet and upwards; plate glass for windows, carriages, &c., which possess great advantages over crown, and when required for exportation, a considerable drawback obtained. Annexed are the Prices of Current Sizes of Plate Glass for Sashes, &c.

any sizes containing from 2 feet to 8 feet, at 9s. per foot; thus a plate being 20 inches by 18 inches, contains three feet nine inches superficial measure, and costs £1. 13s. 9d. as per above tariff. All under three feet superficial at a reduction.

CARVING AND GILDING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

In this department will be found a very elegant and extensive variety of Chimney and Pier Glass Frames, Cornices for Windows, Ornamental Tables and Furniture, and richly mounted frames in various sizes for Portraits, Paintings, &c. Paintings and Prints mounted, framed, and re-gilt.

PAPER HANGING, AND INTERIOR DECORATIONS

in all its branches, from the most simple to the first style of elegance. A rich variety of new patterns on show.

IN THE UPHOLSTERY ARRANGEMENT,

the greatest attention is paid to unite elegance with economy in character for the drawing-room, boudoir, dining-room, library, and bed-chambers, from the most quiet to the most costly styles, the various articles of chintzes, moreens, damasks, silks, &c. the great variety of the most splendid and novel styles are combined only on view of those qualities which can alone insure permanent satisfaction; the extreme disparity in prices in these articles mainly arises from the inferiority of the fabric.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND SOFA WORK

manufactured of the most seasoned materials. In the finish of Chairs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the materials used, and the workmanship. It may not be unworthy of remark that a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one half, but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious disappointment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manufacture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of unseasoned materials and unsound work (that cannot be detected by the casual observer), can never be of that service and durability so essential.

H. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own premises, and has always on hand a large stock of well-seasoned materials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest possible rate and of a superior quality.

STEAM and SAILING VESSELS promptly fitted up with CABIN FURNITURE and PASSENGERS' REQUISITES.

SOLID and PORTABLE Furniture, Bedding, Musquito Hangings, &c., for Foreign Climates. Families going abroad will receive every information respecting the articles best adapted for their particular destinations.

Merchants, Captains, and Dealers, supplied with the utmost speed, on the most liberal terms.

CARPETING

of the fabric especially made for the first Upholstery Houses, viz. Brussels, Kidderminster, and Venetian; also a few of the much-admired velvet pile carpets, hearth-rugs, druggets, baize, floor-cloth, &c.

BEDDING, BLANKETS, &c.

well-seasoned, real Dunlzic feathers, also equally prepared light downy feathers for second and third rate beds, elastic sprung hair, and wool mattresses, real Witney, Rug Rath and York blankets; Marseilles quilts and counterpanes. In the article of bedding, blankets, &c., so essentially important to all, H. L. C. is determined that no trader shall supply them on better terms.

FUNERALS FURNISHED,

and conducted with the greatest propriety, and with every consistent regard to economy.

Families in the country may command the most approved taste being waited on at home with patterns; and designs made on the spot, calculated to harmonize with the plans, proportions, and decorations of the rooms; and their orders delivered and fixed on terms forming a very small addition to the first cost, by the system adopted by this concern.

With this short enumeration of the leading articles of his trade, and the very favourable terms on which he undertakes to supply them, HENRY L. COOPER appeals to all classes for a continuance of that flattering preference hitherto afforded his house, 24, Bishopsgate-street Within; Western Branch, 67, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street.

H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to the above, from that new article will be exchanged should a fair objection arise, thus securing the Public from imposition.

PAPER-HANGING, UPHOLSTERY, AND PLATE-GLASS WAREHOUSE,

No. 20, LAMB'S CONDUIT-STREET, HOLBORN.

J. F. ISHERWOOD most respectfully informs the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public in general, that he has just completed his new Designs of Decorations for Drawing-rooms, Dining-rooms, Halls, &c., at his usual low prices; with an extensive assortment of Cabinet and Upholstery Furniture.

PATENT PERRYIAN INDIA-RUBBER SPRING PEN.—The distinguishing feature in the India Rubber Spring is to render the same pen capable of accommodating itself to the various degrees of pressure used in different hand-writings, so as to produce with perfect ease any strength of character at the will of the writer. Nine Pens, with Holder, 2s. 6d. Nine Double Patent Perryian Pens, with Holder, 2s.; Nine Perryian Office Pens, with Holder, 1s.—PERRYIAN INK, 6d., 1s., and 2s. per Bottle, Manufactured expressly for MACNIVEN PENS; this Ink has a flowing property peculiarly adapted for Metallic Pens, and will not corrode them. It is also excellent for Pens made from Quills. Perryian Ink Powders 1s. per packet, sufficient to make a wine bottle full of Ink.

Sold by all Stationers and Dealers in Metallic Pens, and at the Manufactory, 37, Red Lion square, London.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"SIR,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filling of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I had you are the Proprietor; after using it two days, I could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended this SOLVENT to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

D. EVANS, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely ineffectual but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d., and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

FURTHER CONFIRMATION OF THE UNFAILING VIRTUES OF

OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA.

January 25th 1836.

GENTLEMEN,—I regret that I have not earlier acknowledged to you the great benefit which I have derived from the use of your Balm of Columbia, which, in my own case, I have happily found to possess all the virtues you ascribe to it; I at first, and by mere accident, purchased a Bottle from one of your Agents merely as a trial; and until lately, was unaware of its justly famed and great celebrity, or of your being resident, and having a principal establishment in England, otherwise I should have felt pleasure, and a sense of duty to you and the public in making this acknowledgment before. About four years ago, I found my hair rapidly falling off, not occasioned by any bodily illness, and to such an extent was my head really bald that I was compelled to wear a wig; about three afterwards I began to use your Balm, and after the lapse of nine months, and the application of only three 3s. 6d bottles, I was enabled to leave off the wig, finding my hair quite restored to its pristine strength, which it has retained ever since.

I am, Gentlemen, yours very obliged,

To Messrs. C. & A. OLDRIDGE, Balm of Columbia Establishment, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London.

BENJAMIN BRIDGER, 31, Little Newport Street, Leicester Square.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM causes Whiskers and Eyebrows to grow, prevents the hair from turning grey, and on the first application produces a beautiful curl, frees the hair from scurf, and stops it from falling off. Abundance of certificates from gentlemen of the first respectability are shown by the Proprietors, C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London, where the Balm is sold.—Sizes 3s. 6d., &c., and 11s. per bottle.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 64, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three reniuces, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as in duty in some instances, that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will co-produce the hair where nature retained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye the hair red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby. Thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair, and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, a operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 7s. 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. VAN BUTCHELL, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints, without cutting, caustic, or confinement to the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Craddock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 5, Store-street, Bedford-square.

32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, and No. 10, Ludgate hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH, INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1835, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Roasts, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Hunt, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Valle, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by all respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c. &c. is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

THE EDINBURGH JOURNAL OF NATURAL HISTORY; with the ANIMAL KINGDOM.
By BARON CUVIER.
Conducted by Captain THOMAS BROWN, F.L.S., &c. &c.
Assisted by eminent Scientific and Literary Men.
"We assure our readers that we do not employ the least exaggeration when we say, that this appears to us the very cheapest, and the most splendid work published in Numbers, that even this age can boast of. The strictly Linnean parts are introduced to the reader by several well-written essays, connected with the subject of Natural History, which require for their own merits, as well as for a preparation for what follows, to be carefully studied. We prognosticate that when this undertaking shall be completed, it will form the best book upon Natural History in the English Language."—Metrop. Mag.
"This promises well, the descriptions are written in a clear and unaffected, yet sufficiently learned style, it may be received by the scientific, and instruct and gratify the general reader. A number of illustrative anecdotes follow each chapter, the production is therefore rendered highly amusing. we recommend its introduction into schools and families where Knowledge is sought, but where employment is also essential".—New Monthly Mag.
"This is the very first work of the kind, both in its composition and leading features, as well as in the universality of its details, which has yet appeared before the public. Each number appears to be an improvement on its predecessor, and the entire series is managed with admirable skill and taste. Admirable as the plates are, however, the letter-press continues to interest as still more. The translation of Cuvier, with the illustrative notes, appears to us a masterly work. It is of itself worth more than the price of each number."—Edinburgh Evening Post.

By HENRY STRAITH, Captain H. P., Professor of Fortification and Artillery at the Hon. East India Company's Military Seminary, Addiscombe. With an Atlas of Plans, Sections, &c.
"The author has availed himself largely of the labours of preceding writers—English as well as French—he has done so with a degree of discrimination and judgment, which none but a person thoroughly conversant with those scientific principles on which the art of Fortification depends, and practically familiar with all its details, could have been able to exercise. We may safely say, therefore, that whether we regard the matter or the manner of Capt. Straith's work, the art of Fortification has never been made so plain to English students before."—MacAnnie's Magazine, No. 512, June 1st, 1833.
"We must call attention to the very valuable Practical Treatise on Fortification, by Captain Straith, of the Hon. Company's Military Seminary at Addiscombe."—United Service Journal, No. 56, July, 1833.
"We cordially recommend Captain Straith's perspicuous work to every officer in the service, &c."—Naval and Military Gazette, Dec. 28th, 1833.
"The volume is copious, and every thing that is necessary to be known is amply considered and clearly explained, &c."—Metropolitan, February, 1834.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—INJUNCTIONS.
CAUTION.—It having been represented to Messrs. DELCROIX and Co. Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, that frequent disappointments were occurring to the Nobility and Gentry, in purchasing from shops having the appearance of respectability, counterfeit articles bearing not only similar labels to their own, but even their name and address, Messrs. Delcroix and Co. have taken necessary steps to enable them to expose the parties so acting, and they have the pleasure of informing their patrons and friends that Injunctions have been granted by the above Court, against Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL & Co. (late Price and Gosnell), of Regent street, and 3 Kings' Court, Lombard-street,
Mr. JOHN COLLEY, Perfumer, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Mr. ROBERT HOVENDEN, wholesale Perfumer, Crown-street, Finsbury-square; restraining them from vending imitations of Messrs. Delcroix and Co.'s much esteemed Esprit de Lavande aux Mille fleurs. And the trade and others are hereby cautioned against similar practices, as Messrs. Delcroix and Co. are determined to proceed against all parties resorting to any means of injuring the great reputation their perfumes have acquired, not only in this country, but in every part of Europe, India, and all parts of the Continent.
Purchasers are requested to be careful to notice that their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, will in future bear the signature of J. Delcroix on the labels, and the name and address "Delcroix, 158, New Bond-street," on the back of the Bottles.

Persons assuring with this Company, after they have made three annual payments, will be entitled to three-fourths of the profits which will be divided annually, and may be applied to the reduction of the premiums or the augmentation of the sum assured.
An annual division distributes the profit with more regularity and justice than any other; and it is particularly advantageous to persons of advanced years, who cannot expect to participate in many septennial or decennial divisions.
Tables of rates, which are very moderate, being calculated from the most recent and accurate observations of the duration of human life, may be obtained at the office, as above, with every other information respecting the Society.
INDIAN BRANCH.
A branch of the Universal has been formed in India, where an improved system of Life Assurance is much required; and Messrs. Bagshaw and Co., of Calcutta, have been appointed agents, who with a Committee of Management, conduct the affairs of the Society in that metropolis. ROBERT CHRISTIE, Actuary.

BILLS DISCOUNTED.—A Gentleman who has the means, offers ACCOMMODATION to those whose pretensions are well founded, and assures them that they will not have to encounter delay or disappointment, provided the securities are valid. The amounts, however large, will be no objection where the parties are approved of. Apply (personally or by letter post paid) to Mr. S., 23, Oxendon-street, Leicester-square, Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

DECASTRO'S BRILLIANT JET POLISH.—Patronised by H. R. H. the Duchess of Kent, &c. &c.—The superiority of this preparation over every other kind has been decidedly acknowledged by all who have tried it. The advantages are in its PRESERVING the leather and rendering it SOFT and PLIABLE. It requires no labour, and produces the appearance the most beautiful and elegant that can be imagined. The Proprietor confidently recommends it for Officer's and Gentlemen's Dress Boots, &c.; and to Ladies and Children, for the summer season, it will be found most valuable and pleasant.
Prepared and Sold by DECASTRO, Chemist, Wilton-place, Belgrave-square, and may be procured of his Agents, Mr. Orpet, Bond-street; Hurd, Piccadilly; Gage, Cheapside; Brougher, Threadneedle-street; and Sully, Fenchurch-street.

PIANO-FORTES BY BROADWOOD.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS.—The superiority of this Patent over all other inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers and Gentlemen of the Civil Service. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or settee-cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter-street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED, and where all other descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied on the lowest Terms.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. the East India Company.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 40 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

MILITARY and Naval Gentlemen, Writers, Cadets, Midshipmen, and Families, are respectfully invited to Messrs. W. H. ALLEN and CO.'s, 37, Cornhill, Outfitters and General Outfitters, where every article is charged at the wholesale price, for Cash only.—Calico shirts, 6s. per dozen; ditto, 12s. and 14s. per dozen; good ditto, 18s., 21s., 24s., and 30s. per dozen; ditto, with linen collars, wristbands, and lawn fronts, from 30s. per dozen for the finest quality; a large assortment of long cloth and Irish linen ditto; striped sea shirts, 18s. per dozen; printed ditto, 24s. per dozen and upwards; cotton half-hose, 3s. 6d. per dozen; handkerchiefs, 4s. 6d. per dozen; silk ditto, 6s. per dozen; dress collars, 4s. 6d. per dozen; cotton caps, 2s. per dozen; a great variety of boys' and girls' under linen; ladies' chemises 9s. per dozen; ditto, 12s. and 18s.; good ditto, 21s. and 24s. per dozen; ladies' night caps, 6s. per dozen; night gowns, 18s.; long ditto, 24s., 30s., and 36s. per dozen; shirts, 7s. per pair; pillow cases, linen towels, 6s. per dozen; cloth pea jackets and trowsers, from 7s. 6d. per suit; regimental ditto, made to measure, 1l. 1s. and 20s. per suit; duck ditto, kerseymere &c., ditto, in great variety, bedding, from 3s. 6d. each; cots, hammocks, hiankets, counterpanes, trunks, sea chests, and all kinds of cabin furniture, &c.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

ISAAC LEVY, Successor to S. LEVY, No. 2, Hemming's row, St. Martin's lane.

Begs to call the attention of Officers in the Navy and Army, &c., to his Old-Established DEPOT where they will find ready every article of Naval and Military Equipment, Camp Furniture, Bedding, Bedsteads, Canteens, Portable Drawers, &c. &c. Officers and others attending Levees and Drawing Rooms supplied with every article required.

DISTRESSING CASE.—The Widow of JOHN CARUEN STRONGE, of No. 64, Commercial Road, Waterford Bridge, late Captain in the 35th Regiment of Foot, is left with Four Young Children in the deepest distress and implores the assistance of the benevolent to re-establish her in a small business. On her husband's dying in embarrassed circumstances, his Widow petitioned His Majesty's Council for some pension, but was informed that, as Captain Strunge had taken the regulation difference when he retired on half-pay, she was ineligible. In this state of destitution, a few friends came forward and contributed sufficient to set her up in a small shop, by which she obtained her support, until she met with an accident which was nearly proving fatal, and confined her to a bed of sickness so long, that she was obliged to sell her little stock to procure immediate necessaries. On her case being represented lately to the Secretary at War, he has been pleased to order a donation of £20 to be paid her from The Compassionate Fund; but this, as well as the donations of a few private individuals, has been expended in discharging her arrears of rent, and redeeming the necessary articles she was obliged to pledge during her long illness. She is now out of debt; but relies only on a generous public to relieve her from the horrifying alternative of an application to the parish, and enable her once more to maintain her family. Mr. Rule, No. 5, Guildford-street, or at the Judges' Chambers, Serjeants' Inn, will give every information respecting the affecting circumstances of her case, and will receive any contributions on her behalf.

Subscriptions will be received by the following Bankers:—Messrs. Hoare, Fleet-street; by Messrs. Gosling, Fleet-street; by Messrs Willis, Percival, and Co., Lombard-street; at the Office of the Record, Red Lion Court, Fleet-street, by Messrs. Rivingtons, Waterloo Place; and by Messrs. Lawries, Army Agents, No. 10, Charles street, St. James's-square, who are personally acquainted with the case.

TO INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

E. JOHNSON invites the attention of Naval and Military Officers, Cadets, Surgeons, Writers, and Passengers, proceeding to India or the Colonies, to his improved PATENT METALLIC EXPANDING BEDSTEADS, forming Ship Sofas and Swing Cots, which for Cleanliness, Economy, Lightness, and Convenience are unequalled. CAVALRY.

1st Dragoons—are under orders for Dublin.

3d Drag. Gds.—The troop at Gort, and the detachment at Roscommon, arrived at Castlebar on 30th ult. The detachment at Shrakestown arrived at Castlebar on 29th.

5th Drag. Gds.—from Peershill to Leeds.

7th Drag. Gds.—Head-qrs. and 3 troops embarked at Dublin for Liverpool on 3rd inst., on board the Dublin and Erin the steamers which will take over the Royal Scots Greys.

8th Hussars.—Tuesday this Regiment was inspected on Hounslow Heath, previous to their departure for Ireland. The inspection was attended by a large number of persons, among whom were several General Officers, who expressed to the Lieut.-Colonel (Lord Molyneux) their admiration of the fine appearance of the corps.

15th Hussars—for Dublin, where there will be three regts. of Cavalry this summer.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 1st Bn.—1 comp. arrived from Templemore on 3d, to arrive at Killenaule on 4th inst.

1st Foot, 2d Bn.—2 cos. and head-qrs. removed from Enniskillen on the 5th, to arrive at Dublin en route to Cork on the 12th; remaining 2 S. cos., to arrive on 19th.

7th Foot.—The Reg. under the orders of Lieut.-Col. Farquharson was inspected yesterday on Southsea Common, by Sir T. M'Mahon. In the morning the men were paraded in heavy marching order, and each man's kit inspected by the Major-General. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon they assembled again on the Common in light marching order, and executed a variety of manœuvres, principally light Infantry movements, which called forth the approbation of Sir Thomas, and excited the admiration of a great number of Military and Naval Officers collected to witness the inspection. The regiment mustered nearly 500 muskets on the field; they are in remarkable fine order and excellent appearance. The Lieut.-Col. and Officers afterwards entertained the Maj.-Gen. and Staff Officers at dinner.

22nd—G. O.—"Head-quarters, 3rd March, 1836.—The Maj.-Gen. has great pleasure in communicating his Excellency the Governor's thanks to Lieut. Archibald Campbell and the detachment of the 22nd reg., for their exertions at the recent fire in Kingston.

(Signed) "Mc Leod, D. A. G."

"To Lieut. Archibald Campbell, 22nd Reg.

"City and Parish of Kingston, 1st March, 1836.

"Sir,—At a meeting of the Fire Wardens held this day, for the purpose of inquiring into the causes of, and other circumstances connected with, the late fire, it was unanimously agreed, that the thanks of the community are especially due to yourself and the men under your command, for the prompt assistance afforded on the occasion. I beg to assure you that it affords me great pleasure to be the organ by which this vote of thanks is to be conveyed to you, and the Fire Wardens will be obliged by your communicating their sentiments to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of your company. I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, (Signed) "Thomas Blagas,

"President Fire Wardens."

25th—The Forbes transport arrived at Cork on 27th ult., with hd.-qrs. and remaining 3 cos. from Barbadoes. 3 cos. moved from Cork on 27th ult. and 3 cos. on 28th, to arrive at Templamore on 5th and 6th inst.; hd.-qrs. and 3 cos. moved from Fermoy on 3rd, to arrive at Templemore on 10th.

27th depot—under command of Major Maclean, have marched from Nenagh for Kinsale, having been replaced at Nenagh by the 88th depot.

29th depot—arrived at Plymouth from Cork on Saturday.

39th. We are informed that there is no mention, in letters recently received from this gallant corps, of the circumstance of the Privates having interfered in regard to a Corporal Punishment in the 13th Dragoons. The report which appeared in the "Atlas," we therefore hope, is without foundation, though it cannot be disguised that the General Order of Lord William Bentinck must be productive of most disastrous consequences. The 39th has always been distinguished for good conduct in the field and in quarters.

46th—2 strong cos. and Field Off. marched from Belfast on 5th, to arrive at Enniskillen on 11th, detaching 2 off., 2 serjts., and 40 r. and f. to Caran, and 1 off., 2 serj., and 30 r. and f. to Ballyshannon.

47th depot—The comp. at Westport moved on 27th for Castlebar. Head-quarters and 3 cos. to remain at Castlebar until termination of the election.

58th depot—embarked at Plymouth on Saturday for Portsmouth.

60th (2d batt.) depot—proceeded on route to Cork, instead of Fermoy, on 5th and 6th, to embark for Jersey on 9th.

71st—from Edinburgh to Glasgow, to embark for Dublin.

72d depot—1 comp. 2 officers, 2 Sergeants, and 40 r. and f. moved from Derry to Lifford on 3d inst.; 1 comp. to arrive at Omagh on 6th, and remaining 2 cos. and head-quarters on 7th. 2 officers, 1 Serjt., and 30 r. and f., moved from Derry on 5th, to arrive at Belfast on 10th.

74th—2 cos. moved from Omagh on 3d, to arrive at Derry on 5th; remaining cos. and head-quarters to arrive on 7th. The comp. from Lifford arrived on 3d.

78th—Ens. Cahlwell and party left Limerick on Monday morning for Galway, to join the depot, after leaving the draft for head-qrs. at Cork.

81st—The four newly formed depot cos., under command of Maj. Willcocks, marched into Limerick on Thursday week, en route to Clare Castle. The officers as yet attached to the depot are Maj. Willcocks, Captains Jeffery, Boyd, and Gilby; Lieuts. Howe (Acting Paymaster), Hale (Acting Adjutant), and Mouns; Ensigns Faulconer and Keane. Assist.-Surg. Bell (temp.) The depot moved on Friday to Sixmile Bridge, and relieved the 60th Rifle depot at Clare Castle. Capt. Jeffery's comp., with Ens. Faulconer, have proceeded by steamer for Kilrush, to relieve Capt. Bulman's comp. of the 60th.

90th depot—under Maj. Nicolls, arrived at Tralee on Wednesday week, to replace 29th.

94th—Lieut.-Col. Paty has resumed the command from leave.

95th—The troop at Killenaule moved on the 4th, to arrive at Birr on 7th.

Royal Artillery, Woolwich.—The following list of Serjeants, at present serving in the Corps at Head Quarters, is unprecedented in the annals of any regiment, each of them averaging 36 years, making a period in the whole of 401 years.—Serj. Gray, 44 years; Quar. master Serj. Power, 33, Quarter-master Serj. Aiken, 35; Serj.-Maj. Bayfield, 33, Sergeant-Major Fleming, 31; Band Master M'Kenzie, 40, Quarter-master Sergeant Bowman, 41; Serjeant-Major Alexander, 40; Serjeant-Major Rudd, 36; Serjeant-Major Knight, 39; Serjeant Major Shepherd, 29. Col. Peterson commanding the Plymouth station of Royal Artillery, was placed in Orders on Tuesday last, to fill the important post of Superintendant of the Repository at Woolwich, an appointment which the talent of this skilful officer will ably sustain, and evinces the Master General's judgment in the selection. By the death of Col. Williamson, C. B., the following officers get promotion:—Lieut.-Col. Crawford, Maj. Bastard, Capt. Lawlor, Lieuts. Fraser and Cocks.

Yeomanry.—The Surrey was on Wednesday reviewed in Botwell Park, about a mile from Chertsey, in which village they had been rendezvoused for some days.

The Sovereign transport is to convey the detachment of the 83d, Kns. Derinrey, under orders for Nova Scotia, and those of the 34th and 43d Regs. for Halifax, to be embarked at Cork.

The Courlar freight ship, 262 tons, has been engaged to convey the detachments of the 27th, 72nd, and 75th, to the Cape of Good Hope next month.

Newbridge is to be a Cavalry depôt for regiments of Dragoons in Ireland.

Maj.-Gen. Lord Fitzroy Somerset, as Military Secretary to the Com.-in-Chief, held a levee at the Horse Guards, on Tuesday.

About two years ago a Fancy Fair was held in the vicinity of Woolwich, on some Rural Roughs belonging to the late Lieut. Tanswell, R. H. A. for the purpose of promoting a charitable fund by subscription for an allowance to the soldier's wives, who are dependant on parochial aid during the period of the embarkation of their husbands, and until their arrival is officially reported from any Foreign station to which they are destined, their portion of the soldiers pay being stopped and they left totally destitute. Upon the last occasion upwards of forty pounds were collected in aid of this fund, which already amounts to near 300*l.*, by the benevolant exertions of Mrs. Dickson (daughter of the late General Dickson) and Mrs. Tanswell, the widow of the above named officer. The officers wives and daughters are busily employed in preparing articles of fancy work for a similar fair, to be held the commencement of the ensuing month.

Resignations and Retirements during the last month.—Captains—Bulkeley, 2 Life Gds.; Whitsker, 1 Dr. Gds.; Wood, 15 Dr.; Hawkins, 89 F.; Huson, h.-p. Malta regt. Lieutenants—Holdsworth, 4 Dr. Gds.; Waldegrave, Scots Fus. Gds.; Peel, 3 F.; Hassard, 89 F.; Eversley, 60 F.; Day, 62 F.; Peck, 71 F.; Belton, 2 W. I regt. Cornets—Ricketts, 2 Dr. Gds. Ensign Napier, 41 F. Medical Department—Assist.-Surg. J. F. Murray, M. D., Staff Assist.-Surg. Laing, Staff.

Portsmouth, May 6.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Swift packet, Lieut. Welch, arrived from Sheerness on Saturday, and sailed for Falmouth on Tuesday, to be employed on post-office service. Vanguard and Bellerophon have been hauled out of the basin, and the Buffalo taken in. The Pembroke is getting on rapidly, and will move into harbour next week. Capt. Lyon's schooner yacht Mischief has been taken in dock for repair. Quail will aid off on Monday or Tuesday. Lieut. Bisson, her Commander, is appointed to the Bonetta at Sheerness, and the survivors of the Quail have volunteered with him. Emerald, tender to Royal George yt., is ordered to Killybegs for new raised men. The Moira transport, when refitted, is to proceed to Cork to embark the 1st Royals for a passage to North America. Ships in port—Britannia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, Buffalo, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Pantaloon. Quail, Moira transport, in harbour.

Milford Haven, May 5th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Devon lighter arrived at this port on the 18th ult. with seamen from Liverpool, just at the moment Diligence naval transport was under weigh for Plymouth. The volunteers were consequently transhipped, and left in her at once for that place. The Devon having obtained a supply of water up at the dockyard, sailed the following day for Swansea and the adjacent ports, in search of further supplies of sailors. Capt. Superintendent Sir C. Bullen, is gone on public leave from Pembroke yard for the purpose of attending court at the ensuing birth-day. Four of the elder brethren of the Trinity Board arrived here last Thursday, in their yacht the Vestal, on a tour of inspection. The Small's Light, hitherto the property of private individuals, has been lately purchased by the Board. Lieut. Mott, R.N., Agent to this light, and resident at Solva, a little fishing town in this county, from which place the said light is supplied with stores, provisions, &c., has been continued by the Brethren in that capacity. Such arrangements are being made by the post-office authorities connected with this county, that the packet establishment will be removed from hence up to the new pier at Hobb's Point on the 6th of July next. The mail will arrive there at 12 o'clock, p.m., on that day, and the steam-packet at once leave for Waterford. The coach will return again at 2 o'clock for London, thus bringing Milford and the metropolis nearer by 20 hours. A branch of railroad is in prospect from Gloucester to Pembroke, which as being a continuation of the grand line, cannot fail of proving not only highly useful but lucrative, particularly when appearances at present seem so favourable to the establishment of a foreign packet station in the south-west of Ireland. The Dido corvette is all ready for launching at Pembroke yard, and only awaits orders from the Admiralty to be sent off the stocks at a day's notice. Great accommodations have lately been afforded this unrivalled port in the establishment of steam-vessels, the property of private companies. Every Tuesday one calls here on her passage from Swansea to Liverpool, and again on her return to the former port. Every Wednesday one arrives here from Bristol, and returns there on Fridays, calling on her voyage at Tenby, a fashionable watering place on the coast, and daily do the government steamers ply between this and Waterford. These events cannot but improve both the neighbourhood and county generally.

Woolwich Dock-Yard, May 6th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—Fairy, surveying sloop, Com. Hewett, sailed from here on Saturday last, although still short of hands. Confiance st.-v., Lieut. J. M. Waugh, arrived here on Monday last from the Mediterranean. Hermes, st.-v., Lieut. Blount (Mr. Roffy, Mid. in charge), having shipped her wheels, has left the dry dock, and is lying in the river. Pluto, st.-v., has been hauled out of the basin, and has been dry docked. She has taken her guns on board, so there is no doubt she is intended for the coast of Spain. Investigator, brig, was this morning towed up to Deptford from her moorings here by the Confiance, steam-vessel. Ships in commission in the port—William and Mary yacht, Hermes st.-v., and Firebrand st.-v. In the basin—Lightning.

Plymouth, May 5th.—Magpie cutter was docked on Wednesday, to be fitted for surveying. Stokesby transport arrived here on Saturday with depot of 29th regt. from Cork. After disembarking them, she took on board the depot of 58th, to convey them to Portsmouth. Confiance st.-v. started on Friday for Woolwich. Swale lighter sailed on Friday for Falmouth, with stores for the ships on the north coast of Spain. Cornwallis, 74, and Talavera, 74, sailed into the Sound on Thursday; the former in the morning at low water. She slightly touched near "Battleness Point;" the latter at noon at nearly high water. Comet st. was in attendance, but was not wanted. The str. started in the evening with marines for Spain. Arethusa and Lovinia are being prepared with jury gear for proceeding to Liverpool; the former has been to dock, the latter was docked on Thursday. All the Lazarettos at Liverpool are to be surveyed, report says, by the Master Shipwright of Pembroke-Yard. Royal Adelaide, 110, was paid off on Saturday, and re-commissioned by Capt. Sykes; she is to have a complement of 260 men. Lord A. Beauclerk hoisted his flag (blue at the main) as Com.-in-Chief, on Tuesday morning, which received the customary salutes. Firebrand, Admiralty steamer yacht, arrived here on Wednesday, on her passage to Dublin. She was detained a short time to take in coals, and was to have proceeded this morning to Kingston, to be at the disposal of the Lord Lieutenant. Arethusa will go out of Dock at the end of this week, and the yacht of the Earl of Wilton will take her place for a short time only. Gossamer, tender to the Britannia, arrived here on Sunday, and sailed yesterday. Messenger st. arrived on Monday from Sheerness and Chatham, with marines for Spain. She sustained a little damage, owing to the boisterous state of the weather; her defects are making good, and she will start again in a few days. In Hamoaze—Royal Adelaide, Minden, Star packet, Firebrand steamer, Diligence navy transport, and Transit freight ship. In the Sound—Cornwallis and Talavera.

A highly respectable party of the gentlemen of the neighbourhood of Umfreville, where Admiral Sir P. Durham lately resided, assembled last week at a public dinner, in honour of the gallant Admiral's assuming the command at Portsmouth, and expressed themselves warmly as to the estimation in which that officer and his amiable family were held in the neighbourhood, with the earnest hope that he would again return to their society when the tour of his command was expired. It is gratifying to find this distinguished officer has already created that kind feeling amongst the departments at Portsmouth, which his presence never fails to inspire.

Cornwallis and Talavera went out of Plymouth harbour into the Sound on the 28th ult. The Minden will shortly follow.

The Endymion, Tweed, and Viper, have sailed from the Tagus, for the North Coast of Spain, to join Commodore Lord John Hay. The only ships left in the Tagus on the 19th ult. were the Hastings (flag ship) and the Pearl, refitting.

Malta, April 6th, 1836.—We are looking hourly for the Hind from Constantinople, on whose appearance the fleet will sail on a cruise; it consists of the Caledonia (with the flag of Sir J. Rowley), Canopus, Thunderer, Revenge, Edinburgh, Barham, Vernon, and Favourite: the Columbine is ordered to England; the Portland and Medea are at Athens. Rodney, Tyne, Childers, Clio, and Orestes, are on the South Coast of Spain, and Jaseur at Gibraltar. Eclipse packet arrived here on the 30th ult. from England, and sailed on the following day for Corfu; African st. sailed on same day for Alexandria. Eclipse on her return from Corfu will proceed to England with the mail and that from Alexandria. The American squadron, which was said to have quitted the Mediterranean for the United States, is still at Cadiz, Commodore Elliott waiting there the arrival of the North Carolina, in which ship he will hoist his flag. Essex st. sailed for Constantinople on Monday last. This is the first of a number of tug-steamers intended to be employed in towing vessels through the Dardanelles and Bosphorus. It is not uncommon for vessels to be detained six weeks, and even two months, at the mouth of these straits, by contrary winds, and the current, an impediment to commerce, which the march of invention and science will at length effectually remedy.

Intelligence from Constantinople represents great activity to be still observable in the arsenal. The number of men burning the crews of the Ottoman fleet was calculated at 15,000*l.*, and recruits were daily arriving. The Capudan Pacha, it was said, would be ready immediately to put to sea after the marriage of the Sultan's second daughter, should circumstances require it.

Quail, cutter, Lieut. Bisson, is ordered to be paid off at Portsmouth, but for the present not to be repaired, the Admiralty wishing, it is said, to make personal inspection of the wrecked state in which she courageously reached England. The Com.-in-Chief, Sir P. Durham, accompanied by Sir F. Maitland and the Hon. Capt. Bouverie, visited the Quail last week, when Sir Philip read a letter from the Lords of the Admiralty, expressing their highest approbation of the conduct of the officers and seamen. The second officer in command is a son of our much respected townsman C. W. Hoffmeister, Esq., Collector of Customs at Wisbeach; and it will afford us much pleasure to hear that this excellent young officer has met with his just reward by promotion. Both officers and seamen lost every article of clothing, &c., either washed overboard or destroyed.

The Pantaloon, 10, Lieut.-Com. Curry, is ordered to the Gambia, with presents to some of the Chiefs there, who have recently evinced a friendly disposition towards this country, in the matter of the gum trade.

Intelligence has been received of the Meteor st.-v. having sustained such injury by fire, on her passage from Kingston to the north part of the island of Jamaica, as to render her incapable of being repaired.

The crew of the Royal George yt. is be increased in number, and the Partridge, 10 gun brig, is attached to her, as is the Pantaloon for the present.

Buffalo, Capt. Hoodmarsh, lying at Portsmouth for South Australia, of which the gallant Capt. is appointed Governor, will take out to that settlement, besides the Governor and family, 30 ladies and gentlemen, including the officers of the new colony, and 160 agriculturists and mechanics. There are already six ships attached to the colony—three belonging to the company, and one chartered by them; and one belonging to, and one chartered by government. The following compose the salaried officers of the colony:—The Governor, 800*l.* per ann.; Colonial Commissioner, Judge, Surveyor-General, Colonial Secretary, each 400*l.* per ann.; Chaplain and Emigration Agent, each at 250*l.*; Clerk of Council and Private Secretary, at 200*l.*; Second Surveyor, 200*l.*; and eight Junior Surveyors, and a Surgeon, each 100*l.* per ann.; and an Adjt. of Militia. Three vessels with settlers, have already proceeded to the new colony, having been previously arranged that the settlers, on their arrival, should locate themselves at Kangaroo Island, being at present considered the most favourable spot.

Lieut. Edward Goodlad, 1814, is appointed agent of the Barossa transport, fitting at Deptford, and she will shortly proceed to Cork to take troops for the Mediterranean, Corfu, &c.

The Alonzo, transport, Lieut. Spencer, agent, has taken in arms and ammunition at Woolwich for the coast of Spain; the utmost expedition was used in this shipment.

The Sovereign, transport, Lieut. Brady, agent, has sailed this week from Deptford to embark troops for Halifax.

The Lady Kinneway for male, and Elizabeth for female convicts, are fitting at Deptford. Sailed, the Waterloo, to embark convicts for New South Wales. The Heywood, Liverpool is taking in stores for Sierra Leone at Deptford.

The Investigator is to be a hulk at Deptford for the Lascars who brought home the Liverpool, new Imaum, and will attend the fitting of the Prince Regent yatch for the Imaum of Muscat, at Deptford, and return either in her or some vessel accompanying her; her repairs are found to be far more extensive than at first imagined, but it is expected she will be able to proceed about July next.

The Mastiff, surveying vessel, Mr. Thomas, master, has sailed from Sheerness to Harwich, and thence to resume her survey of Shetland and other parts of the Scotch coast.

Lieut. Lester has been appointed an agent for transports.

We have heard that in consequence of the slightness of the Inconstant's upper works, it has been represented that guns of the same weight as those carried by Castor and Pique will be too heavy for her. We do not believe this because as she has been constructed for the purpose of competing with ships of her class, she must of course, carry the same armament. She will have the advantage of lighting in the hull, as her timbers are said to be further apart, whether this will be beneficial as regards strength and durability, remains to be seen. It is worthy of remark that this ship differs very materially for the proportions of breadth to length laid down by Professor Inman, and adopted in the Sapphire and Actæon; in fact, in this respect, she approaches nearly to Capt. Symonds' proportions. We look to the trial of these vessels with great interest. We understand the lines of Inconstant and the Duchess of Brogan, which ship was repaired in Portsmouth dockyard about two years and a half since, are very similar.

Thos. Williams, Esq., has been appointed Secretary to Adm. the Right Hon. Lord Amelius Beauclerk, Com.-in-Chief at Plymouth.

We are gratified in announcing the promotion of the deserving Mates to the rank of Lieutenants, Mr. Cheek, who has passed ten years, and Mr. Bowen, who has passed five years. This invariable selection of meritorious officers to fill the few vacancies that fall in, is highly creditable to the impartiality and discrimination of the Earl of Minto, and with his Lordship's evident disregard of patronage will be properly appreciated by the Navy.

In consequence of the number of men required for the increase of the navy being nearly completed, the establishment on board the Perseus receiving ship off the Tower has been broken up. The rendezvous on Tower Hill will be kept open a short time longer for the reception of Petty Officers and able seamen only.

The expected Order of Council adding 1*s.* per day to the half-pay of Pursers in the Royal Navy, was issued last Saturday, and bears date 13th April.

East India Intelligence.

East India House.—A special general Court was held at the East India House yesterday, for the purpose of petitioning the legislature for an equalisation of sugar duties. The petition was agreed to.

Lieut.-Gen. the Hon. Sir R. O'Callaghan, Com.-in-Chief at Madras, is to return home on the arrival of Sir P. Maitland. Maj.-Gen. Watson, one of the General Officers on the station, has been appointed Colonel of the 86th, in the room of Sir F. Ponsonby, appointed to the 1st Dragoons.

A new corps of local cavalry is about to be raised at Ajmere, the expenses of which are to be defrayed by Mound Sing, of Jundpore, in lieu of the contingent which he has hitherto furnished according to the treaty with has proved itself more than useless, and almost openly hostile to our welfare. Capt. Downing, of the 3rd N.I., it is said, will have the command of it, though others are of opinion that that officer's services are placed at the disposal of Major Alves, in order to his employment as political agent at Sheknwattee. Capt. Thoreshy, we hear will remain at Jeypore.—Delhi Gaz., Dec. 2.

The Coolies are disaffected to the northward, and it seems very probable that a strong force will be soon required to put them down. The troops in Guzerat have suffered so severely from sickness this year, that at present no addition could be easily made to the force which marched from Baroda last September, under command of Capt. Store, 24th, and which now garrisons Ahmedaugger. A party of the Auxiliary Horse, under Lieut. Skinner, 9th regt., have been ordered up by forced marches to assist in quelling the disturbance here, arising from the clamorous demands made by a large body of Pattans, enlisted in the Joudpoor country by the emissaries of the Rajah, for arrears of pay. There are native reports of a bloody battle having been fought near Panora, in the hills, by the mercenaries employed by the Panora and Gorawa thakoors; about 50 of the Panora man's Mukrauees were left dead in the valley, and the rest fled. Mr. Erskine has taken up his appointment as resident at Baroda.—Bombay Gazette, Dec. 2.

Neemuch.—An incident lately occurred in the neighbourhood, which is neither rare nor surprising now. An officer of the 46th N.I., while out in the district, was seized by some insignificant Zumeindar, and forced, at the point of a spear, to enter a house, where he was confined for more than an hour. During his imprisonment, a mob of all the disorderly ruffians around collected, insulted and threatened him in every possible way, pointing to a Siklee gar, or needy knife grinder, sharpening swords, making fires at, and addressing him with every epithet their simple vocabulary afforded. The particulars of his release have not transpired.—Agra Ukhbar, Dec. 5.

The Commanding Officer at Peshawur lately wrote to Runjeet Sing that the Zemindar of that place had said that Peshawur had never hitherto been properly settled, and that Dost Muhammed's son, in command of 15,000 horsemen, had reached Jelallabad. Runjeet, on learning this, ordered Sirdar Tuiz Sing, with 10 regiments of infantry, two of cavalry, and 30 guns, to march upon Peshawur forthwith.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 21.

Loodianah.—A correspondent writes that the restoration of the pay havildar of Captain Johnson's troop has excited a very favourable feeling towards the new Commander-in-Chief, among both the native and European community.—Ibid. Nov. 26.

The Lord Bishop of Madras has brought out the new patents. The Bishop of Calcutta is to be Metropolitan, with the same authority over the other Bishops as an Archbishop in England. New South Wales is withdrawn from the see of Calcutta, and is to constitute a separate see; Ceylon is joined to Madras. The arrangements for the new bishopric of Bombay not being completed, the Archdeacon there is still subject to the Bishop of Calcutta. The nomination of Archdeacon of Calcutta rests with the Bishop of Calcutta as before.

The Hurkaru of Dec. 8 stated, as a report resting upon authority to be relied on, that Sir Charles Metcalfe intended to embark for England, without even waiting for his successor. We understand there is no foundation for the report.—Calcutta Courier, Dec. 10.

DEPOT APPOINTMENTS.

[The following letter appears in our excellent monthly contemporary, The United Service Journal—Ed.]

Sir,—The injustice of a practice prevalent in the Army—of giving depot appointments (such as those of Paymaster and Adjutant) exclusively to officers serving with the reserve companies—as it is fraught with evils prejudicial to the interests of officers in general, and the source of much patronage of an unfair complexion, I trust the following brief and humble attempt at an exposure of such a system will be considered worthy of a corner in your Journal.

We will suppose, for instance, the case of a Lieutenant embarking with his regiment for Canada, the Cape of Good Hope, or elsewhere; he is the senior of his rank. At the expiration of his sixth year of foreign service, he receives private letters from home, requiring his immediate presence in England on affairs of urgency. Leave of absence is applied for, and obtained; but imaginary Subaltern arrives in Britain, and, shortly after he has once more touched his native soil, the depot Paymastership of his corps becomes vacant; he loses no time in applying for the situation, and his wishes are backed by the Colonel of the regiment. Our hero now begins to make sure of success; but what is his astonishment and disappointment when he receives a cold repulsive communication from the Adjutant-General to the following effect:—"That it is contrary to the existing regulations to give the appointment to officers serving with the headquarters of a regiment, but that, had he belonged to the depot, it would have afforded him (the Adjutant-General) much pleasure to have assisted his election to office."

How very consolatory! Can any thing well be more absurd, more unjust, and more disheartening than such a state of things? All the Lieutenant's endeavours to get appointed to the depot having proved ineffectual, he now has the mortification of seeing a Subaltern, probably of a few months' standing in the regiment, growing fat upon the addition of 4*s.* per diem to his pay, while he, poor d—l, must felicitate himself upon the prospect of a return, at his own expense, to some snow-bound region of Canada, or to becoming a houseless wanderer Caffraria, from one of which he has only had a f months to thank God, and bless the stars of his nativ for a deliverance.

I believe, in most of the services, on the continent, is usual to relieve troops after a certain period of forei service; but, thanks to the "calkilating" goose of M dlesex, "cum aliis," the British officer who goes with his regiment is doomed to almost perpetual banis ment, while the Government, with the most reckl prodigality in expenditure of the public money, advan stores to the amount of nearly 400,000*l.* for the servi of Her Most Catholic Majesty,—all of which will eve tually fall into the hands of Don Carlos. I am, Sir, March 4th, 1836. Uncle Tony.

MAJOR PRINGLE TAYLOR.

We gave in our last number a letter from Major Pring Taylor, having reference to a case cited by the Duke Wellington in his evidence before the Military Co mission, and implicating the former officer. We rec to the subject to notice a pamphlet put forward in h own vindication by Major Taylor. It will be rec lected that, in 1827, the depot of the 95th Regiment, newly raised corps, incited by the rabble of Sunderlan broke out into acts of insubordination and mutiny, havi actually fired buttons and pebbles at their commandi officer, Major Taylor, and the Adjutant. In consequen of those occurrences, "His Grace (then Commander-i in-Chief) circulated to all commanding officers copies a letter he had addressed to Major Taylor, reprehendi the latter for having had recourse to a system of mino punishments, which he characterised as being obvious erroneous." This led to other steps, terminating in t voluntary retirement of Major Taylor upon half-pay, a the obstruction, if not extinction, of his profession prospects.

Major Taylor's statement is clear, temperate, and pr rise; and we confess that a perusal of its details creat an impression of harsh treatment, almost amounting persecution. We are persuaded that his habitual sen of justice, and concern for the interests of the Servic alone guided, in his conduct towards Major Taylor, t illustrious officer who is taxed with mistaken rigour in this instance; and while it is not denied that Maj Taylor was actuated by zeal for the good of the Servi generally, and anxiety for the due discharge of his ve responsible and difficult duties, the picture drawn in th narrative of the painful and ruinous consequences of t official disapprobation of his mode of carrying on t discipline of a turbulent depot, at a moment of vitiatio between severity and relaxation on the part of the a thorities, cannot fail to appeal forcibly for redress an reparation. There does not appear to be the slighte imputation on the personal character of Major Taylo upon whom the Third Class of the Guelphic Order h been since conferred by his Majesty; and certainl while we now and then see a low-lived officer, brande and despised by his peers, succeed for the moment, b vulgar impudence and fraud, in blinding the highe powers, it is to be the more regretted that a deafne should exist in the same quarter towards the unvarnish tale and crying grievance of one whose reputation otherwise unsullied.—United Service Journal.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

PETITION OF THE LIEUTENANTS OF THE ROYAL NAVY.

Sir,—The undersigned officers forming a sub-committe for conducting the Lieutenants' Petition, presented in Jan ary last to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, co sider themselves called on to address you on the subject o an article which appeared in your valuable and interestin publication of the 23 ult., wherein a reflection is, by a co respondent, unjustly cast upon the conduct of Mr. Wood, th Secretary of the Admiralty, for the reported "unourteous manner in which that gentleman communicated their Lord ships' answer upon the Petition laid before them. We ac knowledge gratefully that the article in question was s good, more particularly when coupled with the one whic preceded it on the subject of Honorary Distinctions, Pa &c., that we should not have troubled you on the presen occasion but to render an act of justice to Mr. Wood, whic we cannot do more effectually than by stating what too place at a General Meeting of Lieutenants, assembled fo the purpose of hearing the official letter read (addressed t our Chairman, Lieut. G. Lawrence), conveying the reply o the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to their Petitio which reply we declare so far from being considered "un courteous" by any officer present, was on the contrary thoug to be quite the reverse, and although the whole meetin undoubtedly felt disappointed at being refused the boo solicited, still they fully appreciated the condescensio evinced in the expression of "regret" which accompanie the reason assigned for their Lordships' refusal. The wor gret did, in our humble opinion, give a tone and character the letter which induced the meeting to arrive at and to at upon the conclusion (and we hope nor erroneously) that eir Lordships were not displeased with the Petition, and st they admitted the justice of an application.

We will forbear entering into the many arguments in vour of the object of our Petition which might be adduced, ost of them having been already so ably discussed at ritous times in your impartial Journal, but content ourlves with transmitting for your information a Copy of the etition (and their Lordships' answer) signed by 608 eutenants, comprising one-fifth of the whole list, which nsidering that our class of officers are distributed over the obe, and the difficulty the Committee have experienced in certaining the residence of their scattered brethren in order obtain signatures, may be fairly presumed to have been menously signed; at the same time we cannot omit castg a glance at another article in the same paper, which so lly, freely, and impartially, draws a comparison between e two services with the view of pointing out the inequality present existing between them, and urging their being sed on the same footing in every respect. Assenting as do in the justice of every observation contained in that icle, we think it right to say that we were only restrained om taking up the subject in all its bearings, as regarded r own class of officers in the Petition referred to, by the nsideration that as such a boon would naturally involve a rge expense, we were deterred from asking so great a vour by the probability of its not proving successful; herens, in the application for the removal of the Retired ommanders from the List of Lieutenants (their continuce on which List you so justly designated an anomaly), e thought that as the expense was not great, and, as will be own in a short and simple calculation which we have the nour to transmit herewith, even that expense would be vered by the saving to the country arising from reductions deaths in little more than twelve months, according to the esent regulations; we did entertain the sanguine hope at the boon solicited would have been granted. In addition the documents already mentioned, we have also forwarded extract from the Order in Council of November, 1834, lative to the increase of Half-pay of Captains in the Army, attached and Majors by Brevet, which will shew that e were silent until a case was thus brought under our tice that, in our opinion, is completely analogous to the e we have so humbly represented, and proves, that whener a hardship is experienced in the Sister Service, our eloved Sovereign and the Nation at large were ready and illing to remove it, and to reward the merit of brave men ho had fought and bled in the service of their country.

And here it may not be unnecessary to refer to the Petion itself, to show that we deprecate in the most emphatical rms the imputation of any base or unworthy feeling of vy or jealousy existing in our minds, at the superior adntages enjoyed by our gallant brethren in arms, but hope at our motive in refering to the relative advantages of the n Services will be ascribed to the right cause, that of oing justice to our representations, and as you, Sir, have berally remarked, to the article already alluded to, not at we wish to reduce the emoluments of the Army, but at those of the Navy may be raised to a perfect equality ith it.

And now, Sir, in conclusion, it becomes us, and we gerly avail ourselves of the opportunity of expressing at we believe to be an universal feeling among our ther officers, our warmest thanks for the able advocacy of e object we have in view, and which you have taken up nd so perspicuously shewn to be based upon the principle right and justice; but it is not only on this occasion that e experience a grateful sense of your exertions in our ehalf, but also for the talent and zeal with which you have lways advocated the general interests and prosperity of the rofession to which we have the honour to belong.

We are, Sir, your most Obedient Servants,

Geo. Lawrence, Lieut. of 1795, very recently promoted to Commander,
G. F. Somerville, Lieut of 1805.
James Sedgwick Lean, Lieut. of 1810.
Robert Holman, Lieut of 1810.

Devonport, 3d May, 1836.

The humble petition of the undersigned Lieutenants of the Royal Navy humbly showeth,—That your petitioners approach your Lordships with sentiments of the most profound respect, in the hope and confidence that your Lordships will be pleased to lend a favourable ear to the humble prayer herein set forth.

Your petitioners beg most humbly, in the first place, to bring under your Lordships' notice the very peculiar state of the list of Lieutenants, as far as it affects their seniority, relative to half-pay, and consequently to the increase of it; but, to make their statement more clear, your petitioners consider it necessary to briefly advert to the regulations for the payment of the three classes. The first 300 have 7s. per diem, the next 700 have 6s., and the remainder have 5s. When this scale was established, at the conclusion of the war in 1814, officers who then came within the first number had not more than 20 years' rank, and those who came within the second number had not more than 10 years' rank; since that period, every year has shown a considerable disparity between the number of years' service in the relative classes, which (they humbly conclude) was then taken as a criterion for forming the present scale; that disparity has gone on increasing, until that now an officer must have held his rank 32 years to be placed on the 7s. list, and 23 years to be placed on the 6s. list, the latter being some years senior to those who were originally placed on the 7s. list; and a large proportion of officers of 20 years' rank can have little hope of even reaching the 6s. list in a less period of time as Lieutenant than the officer who filled the last vacancy on the 7s. list, namely, 32 years, consequently the great majority of this class of your petitioners must despair of ever living to attain the 7s. list. In soliciting your Lordships' notice to the working of the scale of half-pay, your petitioners have done so with the view of facilitating the object of their present petition, which is to implore your Lordships to grant them relief, by removing from the half-pay list of Lieutenants those officers who, from having been promoted to a superior rank as retired Commanders, under his Majesty's Order in Council of the 1st Nov. 1830, no longer belong to their body, are nominally on a separate list, but are notwithstanding still included in the number of 300 Lieutenants entitled to 7s. per diem. Your petitioners beg to observe that this retired rank they believe to be the only one in his Majesty's Service not placed on a separate list for half-pay; and your petitioners would also respectfully call your Lordships' attention to a circumstance that has taken place in the sister service, which they humbly conceive bears some analogy to the subject of the present petition, at the same time disclaiming the slightest invidious feeling at any favour granted to their brethren in arms, but, on the contrary, rejoicing in any act of his Majesty's bounty bestowed upon them. The circumstance to which your petitioners have alluded is the fact that a number of old Subalterns in the Army were some few years since promoted to the unattached rank of Captain, having only 5s. per diem half-pay, and were in consequence removed from the list of Lieutenants; but, within the last twelve months, his Majesty was graciously pleased to raise their half-pay to the same amount as their brother officers, namely, 7s. per diem, the relative rank of the whole of your petitioners and this class of officers being the same; and also, with the greatest possible deference and respect, your petitioners would entreat your Lordships' further attention to the boon lately granted to their brethren of the Royal Marines, a number of old Captains having been privileged to retire on full-pay, and a number of First Lieutenants having been promoted to the unattached rank of Captain, but who were taken off the list of Lieutenants and put on a separate list; these several facts of his Majesty's gracious and paternal feeling for old and faithful servants has emboldened your petitioners now to address your Lordships, sensible that they need not point out that a large proportion of themselves and brother officers have large families to support on their half-pay alone, and that in a period of profound peace they have but little prospect of improving their straightened means, and therefore the increase of 1s. per diem is to them a subject of deep interest and anxious expectation, which the granting of the prayer of this petition will be the means of giving immediately to many, and accelerate the prospect of the increase to all, inspiring in them for such a favour the most sincere and lively gratitude. In conclusion, your petitioners rely with perfect confidence on your Lordships' giving their case a kind, and they hope, a favourable consideration. And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

Signed by 608 Lieutenants.

Admiralty, 18th Jan. 1836.

Sir,—Having laid before my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty your letter of the 16th inst., enclosing a petition signed by several Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, praying that the Retired Commanders may be removed from the half-pay list of Lieutenants in order to give the additional increase to others, I am commanded by their Lordships to acquaint you that my Lords regret that they should not feel themselves justified in proposing the increased expense which a compliance with their request would render necessary. I am, Sir, your very humble servant,

Lieut. G. Lawrence, R.N. C. Wood.

The following is an extract of an Order in Council, dated Nov. 1834:—"It is our further will and pleasure that the half-pay of those officers who accepted unattached companies under the General Order of Nov. 1826, be advanced from the 1st of April last from 6s. to 7s. a day each, and the Brevet Majors to have 1s a day additional to the half-pay."

At the time the Admiralty received our petition there was then on the Navy List 3050 Lieuts. with the following scale of half-pay:—

|---|---|---|---|
| 115 at 7s. | per diem | £ 40 | 0 per diem |
| 700 at 6s. | do. | 210 | 0 do. |
| 2235 at 5s. | do. | 558 | 15 do. |
| Total | | £809 | 15 Average only 5s. 3¼d. per diem each. |

The boon solicited would have made the following alteration:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| 300 at 7s. | per diem | £105 | 0 per diem |
| 700 at 6s. | do. | 210 | 0 do. |
| 2050 at 5s. | do. | 512 | 10 do. |
| | | £827 | 10 Average only 5s. 5d. per diem, each. |

In examining this expense it will be perceived that the average of the increase sought for, as it effects the whole body, only amounts to the sum of three half-pence per diem! although the aggregate of this 1½d. will amount to the sum of 6752*l.* 10*s.* Yet even this will be covered by the saving to the country arising from reductions by deaths, in about 12 months, on the present regulations, at 3 per cent. for the whole number of Lieutenants. And both lists of retired Commanders, amounting to 3335, will give about 100 deaths, from which subtract 33, or one-third promotions of Mids., will show a saving of the remaining 67, which, at 5s. per diem, amounts to 6113*l.* 15*s.*

LORD WILLIAM BENTINCK AND THE INDIAN ARMY.

Sir,—Your observations on the rash and dangerous order of Lord W. Bentinck, in removing corporal punishment from the native soldiers in India, while he suffered its continuance among the Europeans, must fill every man interested in the fate of our Indian empire with consternation. I understand that this order has caused a most astounding sensation amongst the Court of Directors and Board of Control. There is a saying no less old than true, "let well alone," Would to heaven that his lordship had listened to its dictates. Did the natives murmur under the Articles of War as they once stood, as long as they have been in our service? did they petition for their abolition? No; they never dreamed of it. What, then, was the urgent necessity for such an order? Was Lord W. Bentinck forced into this measure by any pressing cause? If not, how dared he to assume such an unenquired assumption of power upon so important a matter, until he had consulted the authorities at home; especially when he must have known that the question concerning corporal punishment was then before Parliament? The result would have, perhaps, furnished him, as far as he was competent to judge, with the power of bestowing a boon equally on the European and Native soldier at the same time; by waiting his Lordship lost nothing. Whereas now the most invidious comparison must occur to our European troops between their degraded situation in respect to punishment for crime and that of the Native soldier. Alas that vanity should so get the better of common prudence. But, Sir, as you have treated this part of the subject with your usual judgment and amply commented upon the predicament in which such misrule has left our Indian army, I shall say no more on that point. God send that the next ship may not bring us accounts of a general mutiny amongst our European troops in India. I proceed now to make some observations on Lord W. Bentinck's substitute amongst the Natives, namely, dismissal from the service, for corporal punishment. Mr. Editor, I have served twenty-seven years in India, in the Madras army, and if I have learned anything by experience during that period, I take the liberty to tell Lord W. Bentinck that dismissal will not prove a sufficient substitute for corporal punishment. It will prove a very weak remedy, if any, and I will again tell my Lord W. Bentinck, that, in many instances, dismissal will highly convenience, and, therefore, oblige the Native soldier. We all know how far local attachment prevails amongst the natives of India. Suppose a man born at Madura, which is in the southern district, finds himself in the course of service at Ganjam, high up to the northward. He wishes to get back to his country and connexions. What is more easy than for him to kneel down his Havildar (Serjeant), and thus ensure dismissal? He can then walk coolly down to his country, and enlist in some other corps stationed in his favourite district, and so on "toties quoties," as often as it suits his convenience and inclination. Should the corps be ordered on any service where the men may expect to be subject to much hardship and deprivation, a sufficiency of crime will always ensure his release, and the idle and discontented man will still be able to remain amongst the troops who must be left behind, by a fresh enlistment. I question if our Native army would have mustered so strong, for instance, previously to taking the field against the Burmese, when the certainty of rain, bad roads, starvation, and sickness stared them in the face, if any sufficient act of indiscipline would have relieved many of the sepoys from encountering the certain evils which threatened them. Fidelity and attachment are very good things, but we must not rely on them altogether to prevent desertion, much less when desertion may not be necessary and the idle and discontented soldier may accomplish his purpose by dismissal. But we are to have better men, and by doing away with corporal punishments we are to have many more Rajahpoots. We had a sufficient number of them before for our purposes; I have even known them to be punished. The Rajahpoot may act under the circumstances above mentioned, exactly as a Pariah. A few Rajahpoots more or less, I contend, will not make up for evil which in this letter I have endeavoured to shew, be the result of Lord W. Bentinck's order. The hpoint is one of the most difficult to be pleased, and, in ct to caste, the most bigotted of all the other natives of ; a sprinkling of them may be very well in a corps, should not envy the Commanding Officer who had to with a battalion of them. INCOGNITUS.

COAST GUARD SERVICE.—(LETTER X.)

r,—The pay, 59*l.* 15*s.* a-year, for a boatman, may look und very well in the gross, and it is natural that many ns should think the appointment an eligible one for ving men-of-war's men. But let us see how this sum tracted from, and how little care there is taken of a Guardsman, and then we may judge of the amount which l accrue to poor Jack. Immediately one goes on the st, however bad his complaint, and that absolutely con- d in the execution of his duty, one shilling a-day is away from him, and he is then left to pay his doctor's Should he want a day or two's leave of absence, gh it be to pay the last sad office of respect to the st friend on earth, he cannot have it unless he loses whole of his day-pay. He is subject to mulcts and even for shutting his eyes one hour out of the sixteen required to be on the beach; and in most instances is ed to pay the Government a rent of 5*l.* for a cottage, not worth three. Occasionally he is ordered to re- to a distant station at his own cost (at times, perhaps, vedly, but sometimes capriciously so), and thus is he verished, and compelled to dispose of all his little s to get himself and family to their destination.

ave already shown that his right to seizure rewards is very scrupulously preserved to him; that he is at the y of others without the means of appeal; and, as re- the Board of Customs, I declare they do him wrong, ng from the Act of Parliament for the prevention of ggling, 3 and 4 Wil. IV., cap. 53, dated 28th August, , supplied to the officers of the Coast Guard, and which e quoted before, when they direct any part of seizure rds to be shared by the flank stations, in conjunction the station absolutely making the seizure, unless it effected "through the information or means" of the stations. The 70th section of the aforesaid act plainly s out a certain covenant on the part of other persons n they become entitled. The law of the land always ires the most decided proof in all instances touching viduals' rights in ordinary cases, but in respect of Coast rdmen, the Board of Customs appear to assume the l, and violate the law with impunity. Jack is better ected on board a ship-of-war, where neither the Captain, Admiral, Commander-in-Chief, nor the Admiralty f, can tamper with his rights, nor alter the law one iota spect of them. That it may be understood what is nt by flank-sharing, I must describe that all seizures e upon a station, and the means of conveyance not cap- d, whether men, horses, carts, boats, &c. that seizure is ally ordered by the Board of Customs to be shared by flank stations, although they know nothing of its having effected.

his creates much quarrelling and ill-will amongst the es concerned, and is evidently an infringement upon ights of individuals. I ask you, Sir, how you would under the consciousness of being robbed? Your ation and your better judgment would, of course, in particular instance, induce you to place the fault with Directors of the service; but it is difficult for ignorant educated persons to go beyond the party who also- y receive that which is not their own, they in their nance not knowing that it is the Commissioners of Cus- , and the Commissioners of Customs alone, who are to e for this infraction of the laws of the land in this ; not can they readily restrain those feelings of iguity and spite which too often arise in all our breasts, which with them have the effect of destroying all har- y and cordial co-operation.

But bad as this system of flank sharing may be, there are r instances of injustice yet worse, which affect the men eir rights. They have no protection against scoundrels nformers, however vague and useless their information; a great many officers, I am sorry to say, in the service, w themselves to be duped by informers, by which the ence suffers, and the fellows are encouraged. It is no rominoo thing for the smugglers themselves to give such rmation as this:—"A lugger, smack, or other vessel, s at a Foreign port at such a time, bound for the Coast Essex." Now, supposing either of this description of sels to be taken six months after (not at all the one de- ned), this scoundrel would share to the tune of one- rd of the seizure reward, and consequently to the preju- e of the poor Coast Guardman who had been tugging for nths. Other informations are given, ostensibly to de- ve and draw away the Force from particular points, in ch cases, perhaps, one hundred pounds worth of contra- nd goods are taken, whilst one thousand pounds worth are off elsewhere. The Board of Customs ought, for the od of the service, and especially for the interests of those whose rights they are bound to protect, reject every species of information tendered by such treacherous scoundrels, unless specific as to name, time, place, and circumstances, and even then they ought to receive it with caution.

There are, certainly, two districts (in Kent and Essex), but only throughout the whole United Kingdom, in which a oo such is allowed, on account of the prevalence of ague.

These are not, however, all the grievences of the Coast Guardmen, for it is a notorious fact that, where they act with the regular officers of Customs, whatever be their exertions, an unequal decision is generally given in favour of the latter, provided, their joint services involve any case of personal interest.

I have before me an instance of an officer of Customs, who was merely the medium of an information that proved partially correct, and for forwarding which, in the execution of his duty, for which duty he is liberally paid, he claimed for the seizure effected thereby, and absolutely had a sum of money awarded to him. But be it remembered by "all our loving cousins," that the said officer had influence in a subordinate office in the London Custom House, to which he knew his claim would be referred: as well might such Clerk in the Coast Guard office claim for every letter of information he forwards thence to the outports. Had they similar influence to my friend, they would, probably, get their claim allowed, and with equal right, too. But, to resume. In the interim the money had been paid to the parties, and spent, and what was to be done? The rapacity of my friend was not to be so easily appeased, and the amount was absolutely illegally deducted from the growing pay of the poor Coast Guardmen, and they were compelled to give receipts in full, and not for the sums actually paid to them, when their monthly stipends became due.

What might have been the feelings of this gentleman on receiving the amount in question I will not pretend to say; but I do not envy him them if he could, without emotion, first behold the joy and delight of the Coast Guardmen's wives and families on receiving some little addition to their comforts in the shape of respectable and comfortable clothing, and then again to see them obliged to pinch in food, to shift and contrive every expedient in their power to make up the sum ordered to be paid to him for doing that which was simply his duty, and for which duty he was in the receipt of a good salary. I could go on with acts of injustice to these ill-protected men, but having now said so much on the injustice practised towards the unprotected Coast Guardman, let me suggest another serious objection to bringing men-of-war's-men into this service, as now constituted, namely, that it is, generally speaking, a service of bad discipline, and one likely to induce insubordination. Seamen are discerning men, and pray what respect can they have for the Civilian chief officer I have described? I know one instance where an Inspecting Commander ordered A DEBOCHED DEAL PUBLICAN Sitter, on peril of being tried by a Court of Inquiry, never to attempt to take command of the boat of the station when she went afloat. The hero of pewter pots understood heavy wet, no doubt, but nothing of ocean's briny wave, or how to steer a boat thereon. Again, Sir, the Lieutenant "Sitters" do not all observe the same discipline at all stations: some degenerate into an unfortunate familiarity with their respective crews, from the service being so imperfectly defined, and allow them to do nearly as they like, seldom or never exacting those proper outward marks of respect to themselves, so essential to discipline, and thinking it unnecessary they should pay them to other officers under whose immediate orders they are not. In fact some of them have gone further, inasmuch that they have actually entertained the complaints of their own men against chief officers of the adjoining stations, who have, probably, in the course of their duty, touched upon the guard of those men, and had occasion to speak to them for some flagrant breach of orders. These remarks are applicable to cruisers as well as to stations. I am happy, however, for the credit of the Naval part of the service, to be enabled to say that exceptions do exist to the too general rule, for there are some officers in command of stations and cruisers, who, by perseverance and going the right way to work, eradicate the evils arising out of such a loose system of discipline. At first they are set down as martinets by those under them; but ere long they, by proper example, officer-like conduct, and gentlemanly bearing towards them, are sure to gain their respect and esteem, and their orders are cheerfully and promptly obeyed; for well-disposed men are shrewd enough to observe that a different line of conduct on their parts will not be tolerated by him; and what most materially tends to keep up his well-directed regulations, both officers and men soon see and feel the benefits arising to themselves from them: the consequence is, everything goes on smoothly and properly, and the machine is not retarded in its working by drones, skulkers, or grumblers. With these exceptions, however, the service is divided, incongruous and ill-defined in all its parts, and how long such things will continue I know not; but never, oh! never let us have those men England owes such a debt of gratitude to employed in it, as of present constituted. Could we invoke the spirit of Nelson to come down to our mother earth, and see the elite of our Fleet reduced to the posts of low Custom-house officers, despised, neglected, and oppressed, in every shape, would it not exclaim—"England has, indeed, not done her duty!"

THE HORSE GUARDS SCREENING SYSTEM.

SIR,—Having seen a statement respecting the 4th Dragoons going the rounds of the newspapers that "the intention on the part of the officers and non-commissioned officers to erect, as a tribute of their affection and regard, a tablet to the memory of the late Col. Ross, who so long and so zealously served in the regiment, has, much to their regret been necessarily relinquished in consequence of an intimation from the proper authority that any regimental subscription for such an object, however laudable, or however justly merited, would be an infringement of the principle of the orders of the army, issued so far back as 1810;" and not having seen it contradicted, I suppose it must be considered correct, and that it is another exemplification of the adage "of straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel," for whoever has had the curiosity to inspect the monuments in the churches of the garrison towns either at home or abroad, will be satisfied that the custom of paying this last tribute of respect to the memory of a departed comrade, has not only been common, but also one of long standing, nor do I think it was ever before attempted to prevent it. Why the present instance has been selected to revive an old but neglected order of 1810, is a mystery which the army cannot comprehend, for admitting the one in question embraced in its spirit the dead as well as the living, it nevertheless argues strongly, that a degree of pusillanimous feeling dictated the selection of the case of Col. Ross to enforce an order which, at best, must have been until recently considered as obsolete, or notice would have been taken (if not of one of the many instances which are constantly appearing in the newspapers of pieces of plate being given to a brother officer on quitting his corps), at least of that which not long ago occurred, of an officer who (having been cashiered) had a present made to him by the officers of the corps he was removed from in disgrace.

It cannot be too much regretted that orders should be thus allowed to slumber in one instance, only to be brought forward after the lapse of years, to suit some particular purpose, whilst in others they are enforced, unless when transgressed by the pet of some of the people at the Horse Guards, when the screening system is adopted. Having seen by the foregoing the working of the slumbering system, it may be as well to give an instance of that of the screening, for the information of the ignorant, the incredulous, or the inexperienced in such matters, as from it they may learn a useful lesson, and know, if they have a friend amongst "the authorities," how far they may be guilty with impunity.

The instances about to be recited were comprised in a string of accusations, which were not long since forwarded to the Horse Guards, principally with the view of exposing the real character of a certain individual who had been acting a most infamous and oppressive part, whilst in the temporary command of a regiment in one of the colonies, hoping thereby to deprive the viper of its sting, and take from the effect of any clandestine and false accusations he might in future make against those who have the misfortune of serving under him; to do which they were selected so as to show his system of command in every point of view. But as these latter matters have (with others which preceded them) been allowed to drop, I do not intend to bring them forward personally, therefore, to avoid lifting the veil too high, I shall take the precaution of omitting all names, simply pledging myself for the truth of the charges they contain, which it is evident in most cases could have been shown without the assistance of parole evidence, viz.—

In having in the month of Nov., 1831, taken away the rations from several wives of soldiers, who had obtained the permission of the General Commanding-in-Chief to accompany their husbands on foreign service with the draft which left England for ———, under command of Capt. ———, which act of disregard to the General Com.-in-Chief's orders, was done to continue a similar number of Sergeant's wives then with the regiment in the receipt of rations, although by so doing, he disobeyed the instructions laid down at pages 573 and 574 of his Majesty's regulations.

In having on the 6th Feb., 1832, issued a regimental order that Private ———, of the —— comp. —— reg., should pay twelve pence British, to be credited to the hospital account, because he was drunk when for divine service, such power not being vested in him (Major ———), as Commanding Officer, by the Articles of War, which merely say, "all officers and soldiers who not having just impediment shall not regularly attend divine service and sermon, or wilfully absent himself, or being present behave indecently or irreverently," none of which crimes were charged against Private ———.

In having ordered Private ———, of the —— comp. —— reg., to receive an extra judicial punishment of seven days defaulter's drill, in heavy marching order, for being drunk when for divine service, on Sunday the 5th Feb., 1832, although he (Major ———) had already punished him, the said Private ———, by ordering him to pay welve pence British for the same offence; thus punishing the aforesaid Private ——— twice for the same offence.

In having permitted and sanctioned the charge of four pence sterling a month, being made against soldiers at the head-quarters of the —— reg., whilst in ———, under the name of trucksge for the carriage of rations, although it was reported to Major ———, in the month of Jan., 1832, that the soldiers objected to it, and more particularly at that time, as the Commissariat stores were then actually under the same roof as the barracks, and no carriage (however short) being necessary; which objection Major ——— in the first instance admitted, and caused the sum to be repaid, but afterwards cancelled such decision, when the charge was not only renewed, but continued as long as the reg. remained in ——, and the original sum which had been paid back was refunded, as can be proved by reference to the ledger of the 5th company.

In conduct both tyrannical and unconstitutional in having ordered on the 2nd Oct., 1832, that Acting Serjeant —— should be struck off the list of Acting Serjeants for having married without permission, Major ——— well knowing that Acting Serjeant —— was restrained from applying to him for permission to marry, in obedience to a regimental order issued by Major ——, at ——, 19th Sept., 1831, such act on the part of Major —— being a direct infringement of the universally admitted constitutional right of every British subject, military as well as civil, to marry when they please. And there could be no objection to the marriage of the said Acting Serjeant ——, as both he and the woman he married, bore excellent characters, and during the time the —— reg. was in ——, Acting Serjeant ——— had the charge of a signal post.

In having permitted (either by orders direct from himself or from his Adj. Lieut. ——, of the —— reg.), during the month of July, 1833, a fatigue party to be sent from the town ——, to the island of ——, to the —— village, a distance of at least four miles, to carry a pianoforte from the said village to ——, the residence of ———, being also a distance of about four miles, by which unwarrantable use of his Majesty's troops in the employment of a private individual, Private ——, of the —— comp. —— reg. lost his life, he being one of the said fatigue party, and who died immediately after his return to quarters, from over exertion under a noon-day sun at Midsummer in a hot climate.

In having signed the confidential report at the half-yearly inspection of the —— reg., made by Sir —— ——, on the 20th May, 1834, wherein it is stated "that the mess of the —— reg. was conducted on so economical a plan, that all the officers (especially the juniors) were enabled to live at it, Major —— well knowing at the time he did so, he had granted permission to two junior officers to retire from it, on account of the expense, to enable them to save money to pay their wine and mess bills, and that they were bona fide living away from the mess at the very time Major —— made the above report; and they continued to do so, as long as the regiment remained in ——.

In having neglected, as Commanding Officer of the —— reg., to cause an investigation to be made into a report made to him by Capt. —— in the month of Jan., 1834, that the soldiers of the reg. were charged by the Pay Serjeants considerably too much for their flannel shirts; that flannel had been purchased by the said Pay Serjeants in the town of ——, at a rate that admitted of their being issued to the men at 7s. 6d. sterling each, instead of 9s. 1d., and Capt. —— could produce proof to that fact, if Major —— required it; notwithstanding which statement to Major ——, Capt. —— never heard anything further on the business.

In having further neglected his duty as Commanding Officer, in not having attended to another representation made to him by Capt. ——, in the month of Feb., 1834, which stated that, in consequence of the scarcity of silver in the United States, the merchants in —— were giving 4s. 2d., 4s. 3d., and sometimes even 4s. 4d. a dollar, which were issued to the troops from the Commissariat at the rate of 4s. 4d., but only received from the soldier at 4s., which increase of value on the dollar ought to go to the benefit of the soldier (who was so great a loser), and not to the Pay Serjeants who sold the dollars.

In having acted in disregard to, and disobedience of, H.M.'s warrant regarding the supply of regimental necessaries to the troops on foreign stations, which directs (as a saving to the soldier) that the price of necessaries sent from England shall be deducted (in proportion to the consumption) from the Paymaster's monthly estimates, and remitted home through the Commissariat of Accounts, thus saving the soldier any risk of loss on the value of the money in which they are paid. Instead of which the pay of the soldiers was drawn from the Commissariat as usual, and the necessaries charged in the companies' ledgers as formerly, and the money paid into the Quartermaster's hands, at the rate of 4s. a dollar, by which the soldier lost fourpence British on every dollar, more than he would have done had Major —— conformed to H.M.'s warrant.

In having acted highly improperly, and prejudicially to the best interest of the soldier, by having, when the exchange on England fell from 500 dollars the 100*l.* sterling to 475 or 480 dollars (or from 4 to 5 per cent.) the 100*l.* sterling, taken the money mentioned in the tenth instance (as being paid to the Quartermaster on account of regimental necessaries), and given a bill on England for the same, but receiving at the rate of 500 dollars to the 100*l.* sterling; thereby reaping a direct pecuniary advantage, both from his disregard of H.M.'s warrant, and the soldiers' interest, as mentioned above, and by depriving the soldier of the advantage arising to him from the change in the rate of exchange in his favour, which ought to have been placed to his credit and advantage, instead of that of the Major ——.

In having wilfully omitted his duty, and disobeyed H.M.'s regulations, by omitting regularly to enter in the regimental Court-Martial book the proceedings of a regimental Court-Martial held at ———, on the 27th March, 1833, for the trial of Private ——, of the —— reg., which omission was discovered to have been made in the course of the trial of Ensign ——, of the —— reg., in the month of Feb., 1834.

In having acted contrary to all orders and the Articles of War, by signing a requisition to draw coals for the use of the regimental orderly room during the winter months: the fact being notorious that neither the regimental orderly room at ——, nor at ——, had a fire-place in it; what became of those coals will appear if inquiry is made.

In having permitted the system of not issuing to the soldiers the whole of the coals drawn from the coal wharf on their account, but of selling them at ——, and at ——, which proceeding led to great discontent amongst the men, as they never received any payment for such savings, although once, on a complaint being made by a man of the name of ——, of the ——, or Brevet Major's company, a quarter of a bushel extra was issued to each company to stop further inquiry, instead of thoroughly investigating the business.

In having in the early part of the year 1834, taken the Schoolmaster Serjeant away so much from the regimental school to attend his own children, that the regimental school was greatly, if not wholly neglected, as Major —— arranged it so that there should be no regimental school between the hours of 9 o'clock, A. M., and 3 o'clock, P. M., each, during which hours the Schoolmaster was with his (Major ——'s) children; thus entirely defeating the laudable intentions of his Majesty on this head.

In having also, in the early part of the year 1834, allowed the Schoolmaster Serjeant, who was in the regimental hospital, to receive the pay and allowances of coals and candles as Schoolmaster, although he never attended the school nor left the hospital, except to teach Major ——'s children.

In having been guilty of the most notorious and undisguised partiality during his command of the —— reg., in visiting one officer (———) with the greatest severity and persecution, because he would not fall into Major ———'s scheme of forcing —— from the regiment, by dropping his acquaintance, whilst he, at the same time, overlooked the conduct of another officer, which was disgraceful and ungentlemanly in the highest degree, he having, whilst the regiment was stationed in ——, in the spring of 1834, entered the house of a gentleman in —— and created a great disturbance there, and afterwards, when forced from the house, gone up to the barracks to get his sword, with which he returned, and having drawn it, would have assaulted the said gentleman (who was unarmed), had not the gentleman fortunately succeeded in making his escape; all of which outrageous proceedings Major —— did his utmost to conceal, instead of supporting discipline and decorum by bringing the affair before a proper tribunal.

It is surely unnecessary to write a comment to make the above charges stronger, and yet that regarding the Major's taking the dollars from the Quartermaster, when the exchange on England fell, requires explanation to make it clear.

It was the custom in the colony where these scenes were enacted, for the officers to draw bills upon their regimental agents for their pay; but as the merchants only required bills at particular periods, the officers used to keep a running account with one or other of them, borrowing so many dollars from time to time as they required them, on the understanding that they were to give a bill on England whenever it was wanted, and at whatever the rate of exchange might then be. So it was in this instance, and when the merchant sent to him for a bill, instead of letting him have it at the reduced rate of exchange, he got the dollars from the Quartermaster (to whom he gave the bill at the rate specified in the charge), which he returned to the merchant, thus contriving to disappoint him as well as derive no advantage from the soldier. But this plan was felt severely by some of the Subalterns, who had all along got their bills cashed by the Quartermaster, for the Major, to secure money enough for himself, gave directions to the Quartermaster that he was not to let any of the officers have any more money, although I have been informed by one of the sufferers under this arrangement, that he offered to take the dollars at the lower rate of exchange, but the Quartermaster durst not let him have them.

After perusing the whole of the above, and being told that no notice was taken of it, that the accuser was never called upon to substantiate his charges, and that the accused still struts about in the plenitude of his power, a proof of what may be done in the service, I imagine you and the public will agree with me that "There's something rotten in the state of Denmark."

[We wish our correspondent had compressed his statement; but the "Screening System" is so injurious to the British Army that we have felt ourselves compelled to find room for this long letter, and further to offer to publish all other cases duly authenticated. Lord Hill is one of the best friends the Army ever had in power, and we are satisfied that the publicity of a few grievances will satisfy his Lordship of the necessity of looking to some other quarter than the "Screening Department" for information.—Ed.]

The Prince of Orange.—The manners and unpretending demeanour of the Prince of Orange has certainly not only gained him the hearts of his soldiery, but even the people of Holland and Belgium generally. Had his father allowed him to have assumed the government of Belgium as a distinct kingdom, Leopold would assuredly never have been king. A very general feeling is manifested in the Dutch army, and among the people, by the often-repeated expression, "Houd vol Prius, wig Zuilen Oak Volhouden"—(Hold on well, Prince, and we will never abandon you). There is a curious truth in the following quotation from Simeon's Letters to his kinsfolk: "Mr. Galt, in his novel of 'Bogle Corbet,' introduces a character, whose appearance is always the omen of evil to the hero of the romance. The apparition of Leopold has been equally ominous to the Prince of Orange. The Prince of Orange, with what you call in England far greater pretensions, wooed the Princess of Wales, and was rejected to make place for him that was to have 'fortune thrust upon him.' The Prince of Orange was heir-apparent to the Crown of Belgium, and universally loved by the people, who revolt against his father, and declare themselves independent almost for no other end save that destiny had willed a kingdom to him who was doomed to have 'fortune thrust upon him.' Well might the Prince of Orange say to Leopold, 'In love, in ambition, in the paths of interest, you have crossed and blighted me at every turn. My very patrimony has become yours.'"

Baron Chassé.—The insults which the Belgians shewered on Chassé and his troops, as they were conveyed prisoners to Dunkirk, reflects much disgrace on the people and the magistracy. No one ever accused the 'braves Belges' of good breeding, until their conduct to Chassé roused the spirit of savages in their bearing to their fallen enemies. Chassé, it is now evident, knew more of what was passing in Antwerp than all the authorities in the city. He had spies in all parts of the town, most of whom consisted of ladies of the first rank, among whom he had always been an especial favourite. The charming wife of one of his Aides-de-Camp and his own daughter, a lovely girl of eighteen, resided with him in the Citadel during the early part of the siege, and studied all their arts to delight him. Music and conversation pleased him most. His life had been much diversified; he was once in the British service, and has certainly acted some not easily defended parts. He married a rich English lady, by whom he had two children. He is said frequently to have beaten her, and that she put up with the flagellation on account of her offspring, until their death when she sued for a divorce. During the process he married, under the pretence that his first union was illegal. This step cost him 15,000 florins. He is very affable and fascinating in conversation: always found in the society of ladies; universally courted by them; and has generally been in the habit of returning home with the ladies to whom he gave suppers, leaving his wife to pine side at the table.—Macgregor's Note Book.

General La Romiere had been for a short time Commander of the Cavalry Model School at St. Germain, when he heard that two scholars, fifteen years of age, had just had a dispute, and that one of them had received a box on the ear. He sent for them, and said, "Gentlemen, you have had an angry quarrel, one of you has even received a blow. You will be one day officers; but you would be unworthy to bear an epaulette if you did not settle this affair with arms. You will each take a pistol, place yourselves at fifteen paces, and at each miss advance a step." At the eighth fire the two youths had each a ball in the belly.

Ancient Oaths.—All nations have adopted oaths: the Hebrews by putting their hand below the thigh of the person to whom they swore; the Pagans by taking hold of the altar, and both holding up their hands to heaven, in which last they have been followed by most Christian nations.

During the reign of Henry the Second, when the English first engaged in the Holy Wars, not less than [illegible] abbeys, nunneries, and religious houses, were built throughout England; during the reign of Richard the First, 18, and during that of Henry the Third, 40.

*We again thank "T. We know neither Inspector Commander Moore nor Lieut. # Naval and Military Gazette.

At length the case of Lord Brudenell is, we hope, finally settled; and we have the satisfaction to congratulate that gallant and talented Nobleman having passed through the ordeal without the slightest taint attaching to his character as an officer and a Gentleman. His Lordship's explanations in the House of Commons on Tuesday last carried conviction to all unprejudiced minds, and the sentence of the Court-Martial was almost execrated by every speaker. On many occasions we have expressed ourselves very strongly on this point,—indeed we have never hesitated to say that the extra judicial censure was unwarranted and it is no small gratification to find, even at this distance of time, that our opinions are re-echoed in Parliament by men of all parties.

As a matter of military history, it is essential that we should record some material points of the case and the opinions thereon. It is first and principally to be borne in mind that Lord Brudenell acted entirely under the orders of Sir Thomas Arbuthnot, the Major-General commanding the district in which his regiment was serving; and that discretionary, from the nature of the charge, the evidence that could be brought to sustain it, and the conduct which he himself had witnessed in the Officer in question was the object of the Court-Martial, represented that he should recommend, and he, Sir Willoughby Gordon, did recommend, in a special report, the Commander-in-Chief to remove that Officer (Captain Wathen) from the regiment, "as it was inexpedient he should remain therein." And yet, contrary to all precedent, Lord Brudenell was removed from the command of the 15th Hussars. The ill-digested opinions of the Court who had to try Captain Wathen were the pretext for this proceeding; but in point of fact, Lord Brudenell was sacrificed to party, and to "an attempt to wound a system through the sides of an individual." That there was no precedent for the removal of his Lordship from the regiment, the following cases and facts will be adduced. The first document shows that, by the General Orders of the Army, Lord Brudenell was bound to consult the General of the District.

"REPORT OF A COURT OF INQUIRY.

That —— acted injudiciously in not suspending all proceedings against —— in relation to the military offence with he was charged, and laying before the General of the district a full statement of the case of ——, and of the opinions so expressed by him, in order to obtain from the General commanding the district instructions applicable to the occasion.

And this officer was in consequence reprimanded in the General Order issued from the Horse Guards in 1832, for want of efficiency in care, discretion, and judgment."

The following letter was written in answer to a memorial which Lord Brudenell sent in, praying that he might be tried by a General Court-Martial, composed of officers competent to try him:—

"Horse Guards, Feb. 22d, 1834.—The King is graciously pleased to signify his satisfaction at the temperate and judicious manner in which your Lordship has, in that memorial, entered into the explanations which appeared to you requisite, in consequence of the animadversions made on your conduct by the General Court-Martial lately held at Cork. His Majesty is further pleased to observe that those explanations have tended to confirm the opinion which his Majesty has already expressed through the medium of the General Order of the 1st inst., namely, that some parts of the evidence adduced before the Court-Martial in question might reasonably bear a construction less unfavourable to your Lordship than that which the Court have thought it their duty to place upon them. It was on this mitigated view of the case that his Majesty acted when he directed the removal of your Lordship from the command of the 15th Hussars, without proceeding to any measure which could affect your Lordship's place and rank in his Majesty's Service."

Extract from General Orders from the Horse Guards, respecting the Court Martial held at Cork in Dec, 1833.

"His Majesty has been pleased to approve and confirm the finding of the Court. Although it would appear, upon an attentive perusal of the whole of the proceedings, that some parts of the evidence might reasonably bear a construction less unfavourable to the prosecutor than that which the Court have thought it their duty to place upon them, yet, upon a full consideration of all the circumstances of the case, his Majesty has been pleased to order that Lieut.-Col. Lord Brudenell, shall be removed from the command of the 15th Hussars."

In defending himself in Parliament, Lord Brudenell referred to the following cases of Courts-Martial, for the purpose of showing that there were instances of Officers having been placed, by the finding of the Court, in circumstances similar to his own, upon whom similar animadversions had been made, and who, notwithstanding, were not removed from command. The first case occurred in the East Indies, in the same year, and in the same month of the year, in which that took place which concerned Lord Brudenell:—

"It appears by the proceedings of a General Court-Martial held in 1833, that Lieut. , of the reg. of Infantry, was tried on the following charge, viz.—

"For conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, and unbecoming, contemptuous, and insubordinate towards Lieut.-Col. in the following instances, &c.

"The following is the sentence, viz.:—

"The Court having found the prisoner, Lieut. , of H.M reg., Not Guilty of any criminal acts set forth in the foregoing instances, doth therefore acquit him of the charge.

"The Court, in closing their proceedings, feel themselves imperatively called upon to record that the foregoing charge, originally preferred and subsequently persisted in, arose from private feelings, and had not for its object the well-being of the Service."

This sentence was approved and confirmed as far as relates to the acquittal of the Lieutenant, but the animadversion upon the Commanding Officer was disapproved of by the Lieut.-General commanding the Presidency.

The Lieutenant-Colonel referred to was, a few months after, tried upon the following charges:—

"Head-Quarters, East Indies, 1834.

"At a General Court-Martial holden at in the 1834, Lieut.-Col. , of H.M. reg., was arraigned on the undermentioned charge:—

"For disobedience of orders, and highly insubordinate and general disrespectful conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, towards me when in command of the , in the following instances, &c.

(Signed by the senior Lieut.-Col.)

"The Court finds the prisoner Guilty of 'disobedience of orders,' and of 'disrespectful conduct,' but acquits him of all other charges.

The following is the sentence:—"The Court having found him, Lieut.-Col. , guilty to the extent above stated, doth sentence him to be reprimanded in such a manner as the officer to whom these proceedings are to be submitted may think fit; and further, specially to be more circumspect in future in his conduct towards his superior officers."

The Court then proceeded to animadvert upon the conduct of the prosecutor in strong terms, and the proceedings are approved by the Com.-in-Chief of the Forces in the East Indies.

This officer still retains his command.

In the annexed case, the Major brought to trial was an officer of twenty-four years' standing, and he is still doing duty in the regiment with the same Lieutenant-Colonel.

"East Indies.

"At a General Court-Martial, held at , on 1832, &c., Maj. , of H.M. reg. of Foot, was arraigned upon the following charges, viz.:—

"1st. For highly unofficerlike and disrespectful conduct, in having suspended, and thus rendered ineffectual, a standing order of the reg., &c. 2d. For conduct highly unbecoming the character of an officer, in having wilfully and knowingly made a false report, &c. 3d. For conduct subversive of good order and military discipline, in having, on or about the last, ordered the officer of the Main Guard to leave his guard, &c.

The Court acquitted the officer brought to trial of all these charges, and animadverted upon the conduct of the Com. Officer in the following terms:—"The Court cannot conclude these proceedings without expressing their regret that the prosecutor did not adopt the measures which he had at his command to ascertain how far the charges now investigated were susceptible of proof before he resorted to the extreme measure of bringing an officer of Major ——'s standing and high character before a Court-Martial."

The above proceedings were confirmed, but disapproved by the Lieut.-General commanding the Presidency.

The following is a copy of a reprimand promulgated in a General Order, dated Horse Guards, , 1819, upon Lieutenant-Colonel , commanding the regt.:—

"The Prince Regent considers such inattention and negligence in a Commanding Officer to be highly reprehensible and deserving his marked disapprobation, which his Royal Highness has been accordingly pleased to command shall be communicated to Lieut.-Col.

"The Commander-in-Chief directs that the foregoing charges preferred against Lieut.-Col. , of the , together with the finding of the Court, and the Prince Regent's pleasure thereon, shall be entered into the General Order Book, and read at the head of every regiment of his Majesty's Service.

"By command of his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief. "HARRY CALVERT, Adj.-Gen."

Now in three out of the four cases here mentioned, the officers, notwithstanding the animadversions, were left in command of their respective regiments; and the fourth was was only removed in consequence of his regiment being disbanded.

The next documents we submit are testimonials from some of the most distinguished General Officers of our Army:—

London, November 9, 1835.

"I cannot hesitate to commit to writing what I said to you, if Lord Hill (who must be the most competent judge) should think fit to reappoint you to a regiment, I should be ready to defend such reappointment either in Parliament or in private society. "STRATFORD, Lieut-General.

Letter from Major-General the Hon. Sir Frederick Ponsonby.

"March 20, 1836.

"My dear Lord,—I have given every consideration in my power to your case, and I must say that, in my humble opinion, you have been treated with great severity; and, if you are not permitted to effect the exchange into the 11th Dragoons, you will be treated with positive injustice.

"I gave you this opinion in December last, and I am strengthened in the belief that it is correct, from having conversed with many officers of all classes in the army, and I have found scarcely any one who has differed in opinion with me. "Believe me, very sincerely yours,

"FREDERICK PONSONBY."

Major-General Sir E. Blakeney to Lord Brudenell.

"Dublin, April 28, 1836.

"My dear Lord,—I have had great pleasure in seeing that the General Com. in Chief has recommended you to his Majesty for restoration to full pay, and your consequent appointment to a Lieutenant-Colonelcy to the 11th Light Dragoons. In field movements, and the ready application of cavalry, I consider you one of the most intelligent officers that served under my orders, and I confidently anticipate, from your experience of the past, and the judicious application of your zeal for the service in future, you will prove to the army at large that you are deserving of the act of justice Lord Hill has performed in recommending your restoration to full pay. With wishing you, my dear Lord, every success, believe me always very faithfully yours,

"EDWARD BLAKENEY."

From Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. Vivian to Sir Henry Hardinge.

"O. O., Nov. 4, 1831.

"My dear Hardinge,—I know not how I can assist Lord Brudenell farther than I have done, and that was by stating ord Melbourne that as the circumstances that occasioned removal from the 15th took place whilst he was serving der my command, I was quite prepared to say, and would , were I in the House of Commons, that I should be very d to see him replaced in a regiment of cavalry. I told d Melbourne, as I at the time stated to the Horse ards, that I never saw a regiment in finer order than the h, or an officer more zealous in the discharge of his duty n Lord Brudenell; that he had faults, no doubt; for se he has suffered very severely, and is still suffering, and would give me great pleasure to assist in restoring him to service; and seeing no reason whatever why he should not urn to the service, on the contrary, being of opinion that case was, upon the whole, a hard one. I can have no ob- tion to this, my opinion, being made known. Of all men, haps, I have the greatest right to give an opinion, from circumstance, as I began by stating, of my having com- ndad in Ireland when the General Court-Martial took ee. Ever very sincerely yours. "H. VIVIAN."

Major-Gen. Sir Henry Bouverie to Lord Brudenell.

"Leilstone Hall, Pontefract, April 15, 1834.

'My Lord.—Your Lordship's letter of the 11th reached here yesterday. I can have no hesitation in declaring t, with the exception of one occurrence, I had every son to be satisfied with the conduct of the 15th Hussars, der your Lordship's command, during the period which y passed in this district, and that occurrence, which it is dless to say more about, was not, in my opinion, to be ributed in the slightest degree to your Lordship. With pect to the discipline of the regiment in quarters, and ts efficiency and appearance in the field, the riding, and precision and quiet with which the movements were exe- ed when I reviewed the regiment, I cannot speak too hly, and if my testimony on these points, as well to your l and unwearied attention to all parts of your duty as ommanding officer, is acceptable to you, I beg that you l do me the favour to accept it.—I have, &c.

"H. BOUVERIE, Major-General.

Lieut.-Colonel the Lord Brudenell, &c."

The last of the above most gratifying testimo- ials is from an officer who commanded the orthern District, in which the 15th Hussars were tioned, under the command of Lord Brudenell, wards of a twelvemonth.

We next come to the opinions of Members of rliament. Lord G. Lennox stated, That the Court-Martial which had condemned Lord Bru nell had come to an incorrect decision, that the imputa- n which it threw out against the Noble Lord was unsup- ted by any evidence, and was at variance with the mitted facts.

Major-General Sir Henry Hardinge certainly thought that Court-Martial had gone too far. Their duty was to try ptain Wathen and not the Noble Lord, and, when they d gone so far as to attack the Noble Lord, he (Sir H. rdinge) thought that it would not be too much to say that y might have come to a mistaken and an erroneous deci- n. In fact, he did think that in this instance the urt-Martial had acted on a mistaken view of the Noble rd's conduct. They stated that they could not ascribe conduct on the occasion in question solely to wish to ntect the honour of the army. Now, there was not to be nd throughout the whole of the evidence a tittle of proof support of this statement; so that it was rather a suspi- n than anything capable of proof. He thought that the storation of Lord Brudenell had been done for the good the service, and was only an act of justice as well to the ny as to the individual. He sincerely congratulated Lord udenell on his restoration to the service, and he agreed h many officers of the army of elder standing than him- f, that after the conduct of the Noble Lord, it was only t and proper to place him in the situation he was ap- inted to.

Mr. Edward Ellice (late Secretary at War) admitted t the Court-Martial had exceeded its duty, and when they d visited the conduct of the Noble Lord (Brudenell) so rshly, it was impossible that he could accede to their tion unless all the qualifying passages in the evidence re allowed to have their full effect. He remembered that rd Hill, having doubts upon the subject, called for the sistance of the Judge-Advocate, and the memorial to his jesty was agreed to by their advice. He thought the Court- rtial acted wrong in stating their opinion so strongly, ough he at the same time agreed with Lord Fitzroy merset, who stated in his letter that it was his Majesty's inion that the granting of the Court-Martial at the request Lord Brudenell would be attended with great inconveni- ce as a precedent. Whatever might be the opinion of the ouse upon the question before it, sure he was that all uld sympathise with him in admiring the conduct of the ble Lord (Brudenell) from the period of the sentence of Court-Martial down to the time of his explanation in the use that night.

Mr. Daniel O'Connell said, it was his deep conviction that Lord Brudenell was a much injured man. The Court-Martial—he did not intend to accuse them of intentional error—but they had acted grossly wrong in sentencing a men who had not been heard on the point in which censure had been passed on him, and censuring him without allowing him to bring up evidence, and then to refuse him a Court-Martial to ascertain whether that censure was deserved. He had asked a trial, and he had been refused it. Lord Brudenell had not been as fully acquitted as he ought. He had been convicted without a trial, and punished without a charge made against him. He was glad, however, that the injustice with which the present system of Courts-Martial was too frequently chargeable, had come before the public; for he hoped it would lead to the removal of the evil."

Lord Brudenell stated, in his address to the House of Commons, that the measure upon which the Court-Martial had passed such a severe animadversion, was not unprecedented in the service; that he had adopted it upon very few occasions, and those under peculiar circumstances, always on points of duty, and that no secrecy had been desired by him; in proof of which he declared that he was the first himself to tell an officer under his command that he had adopted the measure. But having since been informed by the highest military authorities that the measure was an erroneous one, and that the adoption of it was an error in judgment, he was bound to believe that this was the case, but that he would admit nothing further; on the contrary, that he positively denied before the House, and before the public, that he had ever committed any act during the time which he had served in the army, which could reflect the slightest discredit upon his character. His Lordship further stated that the good feeling and good opinion of all ranks in the army, not excepting the great majority of the officers who served under him in the 15th Hussars, had been manifested towards him in a variety of ways, of which the above letters, which he read, are the most satisfactory proof.

It was very evident that the intent of the motion of Sir William Molesworth was not to impugn the appointment of Lord Brudenell to the 11th Dragoons, for he had the good sense and feeling to acknowledge that his Lordship had been most outrageously punished, and without trial; but the Baronet's object was to assail Lord Hill and the military system of the Horse Guards. In common fairness, therefore, he ought to have brought the question specifically before the House, instead of putting forth the individual case of Lord Brudenell as a cloak to his real intentions.

We are prepared for the question submitted by Mr. Ellice that the Army suffers very much from not having a sufficient protection from high quarters, and from not having a high responsible authority to represent them in his Majesty's Councils; but these are matters wholly unconnected with Lord Brudenell, and may therefore be reserved for a future occasion.

CONVINCED as we are, that, even in these days of overstrained economy, a liberal Government can never desire to add, even the sum of a thousand or two a-year, to the revenue of the state, when it is taken in the shape of fees from those few old and distinguished officers who may have received civil appointments for the term of six years only, as the reward of their gallant and meritorious services in their profession, we are induced to call attention to this subject, in the sanguine hope that the heads of the Departments, in which those fees are continued to be exacted, will at once cause the unworthy system to be put an end to. We allude more particularly to the fees demanded of the Governors and Lieutenant-Governors of our Colonies, which, in some cases, are said to amount to several hundred pounds; indeed, we recollect to have seen it stated in a Portsmouth paper, as well as in other journals, about a year and a half ago, when a most deserving officer was appointed Governor of Newfoundland, that the fee, or fees, which he had to pay, amounted to six hundred pounds! At the period when the Governors of our Colonies had these situations for life, and when the salaries arising from them were double what they now are, there was not so much to complain of in the payment of those heavy demands, but when these appointments are now only held, by each officer, for six years, and the incomes arising from them are not half the amount that they formerly were, we think, and we are sure every liberal minded man will think, that this tax ought to be discontinued, or at all events that it ought to be so when the situation of Governor, or Lieutenant-Governor, is bestowed on an old and distinguished officer of the Army, or Navy, and we look with confidence to see this carried into effect. A return, showing the exact amount of those fees, will, we are told, be moved for at an early date.

WITH reference to the statement published in our last Gazette, respecting the case of Brigadier-General Evans and Captain Lothian Dickson, we have received the following letter from the Brigadier-General:—

'SIR,—With reference to Capt. Lothian Dickson, several letters, &c., published in your last week's Gazette, I beg leave to state that I am now preparing a statement in reply, which I trust will not only refute the several mis-statements therein mentioned, but will be perfectly satisfactory to both my friends and the public. R. DE LACY EVANS, Brig.-Gen. B. A. Legion.

Hales's Hotel, Duke-street, 4th May, 1836.

Since the above was written, the Committee of the Junior United Service Club have called on the General for his Statement, and which we now give; but we forbear offering any further comment than that a court of inquiry would be the most satisfactory tribunal to investigate and report on this disagreeable business.

Junior United Service Club, May 4.

"Sir,—The committee having had before them a letter addressed by you to W. B. Cooke, Esq., dated 26th April in which it is stated that 'you cannot notice Captain Dickson as a man of honour until he has wiped off the stain you conceive he has incurred,' I am directed by the committee to acquaint you that they feel themselves called upon, under the 33d rule of the Club, to request your statement connected with the subject to which your letter refers. The committee beg at the same time to observe that they have received a statement from Captain Dickson,' which they have perused.—I have, &c. THOMAS HAYES, Secretary.

Lieut.-Col. R. L. Evans, C.B.

Statement.—While quartered at Vittoria, I think in Jan. last, Capt. Byrne, paym. 7th reg. of the British Legion, came to me and reported that Maj. Long, then commanding that reg., had struck Capt. Dickson a blow on the face with his hand. Capt. Byrne said he was present, and gave me the following account, viz.:—Capt. Dickson went to Major Long's quarters, and on asking if the inquiry into the state of the books of the 7th reg. was terminated, and receiving a reply from Maj. Long in the negative, said, with much warmth, that he had been detained by this inquiry, that it was ordered in consequence of his (Maj. Long's) having made an unfavourable report of the state of the books, and that he (Maj. Long) had made a false report. Maj. Long seemed much excited, and remonstrated strongly against the impropriety of such language—particularly, he said, in his own house; and three different times pledged his word of honour that he had made no report on the state of the books; on which Capt. Dickson positively asserted that he had made an unfavourable report of the books, and again, with much warmth, repeated that he (Maj. Long) had made a false report; on which Maj. Long struck Capt. Dickson a blow on the face. This is, I think, as nearly as possible an exact account of what Capt. Byrne told me.

This report being made to me by an officer of my brigade whom I considered a friend of Capt. Dickson's, and who, I think, also said he had been desired by Maj. Long to tell me what had taken place, I felt in a manner compromised if I did not place Maj. Long in arrest; but as Capt. Dickson was in the habit of thinking those who found fault with him on duty his enemies, I thought he would represent it as an intentional injury to him if I did so, and I, therefore, ran off, without a moment's delay, to head-quarters, where to my inexpressible surprise, the first person I saw was Capt. Dickson, pressing with great eagerness (as I then understood, and have since learnt to be the fact) against the advice, and I believe earnest entreaties of Col. Considine the secretary, to make a complaint of Maj. Long to the Lieut.-Gen. commanding the Legion. Nothing, I understand, could dissuade him from making this complaint, and Maj. Long was placed in arrest in consequence. Capt

Dickson was afterwards, I understood, persuaded to take the usual course on such occasions—and be called Maj. Long out. After, I believe, three days of deliberation or delay, they went to the ground, when Capt. Dickson refused to fight the officer he had called out. There appeared to me at the time to be such a cloud about this affair, and such a sense of shame and feeling of regret at its mode of termination, on the part of every officer, particularly every field officer of the Legion who spoke to me of it, that having had an unpleasant transaction with Capt. Dickson shortly before, I avoided all inquiry about it, or allusion to it in conversation, and I did not learn some of the particulars or know, till after I returned to this country, who was really Capt. Dickson's friend, but I understood generally that Capt. Dickson refused to fight Maj. Long after calling him out, because some officers rode up to the ground and objected to his doing so, in consideration of the unprovoked and ungentlemanly violence of Maj. Long's conduct in giving the blow.

This opinion of those officers, it appears, satisfied Capt. Dickson and his second, and Capt. Dickson's friends think it should satisfy society. I do not think so. In the first place, those officers were but a party of individuals—not a corps assembled to hear, to deliberate, and decide. I consider that they formed their opinions hastily, not only on an ex parte statement, but on an incorrect account of the transaction, and which incorrect account, I believe, was given to them, by Capt. Dickson himself; and, further, had Capt. Dickson acted as men of honour usually do on first receiving such an insult, such an opinion could not have influenced his conduct. It is my firm belief, that had the officers who formed such an opinion known the true story, they would not have given the advice they gave. The opinion, therefore, which I formed on seeing Capt. Dickson urging his complaint to the Lieut.-Gen. commanding the Legion a few minutes after he had received a blow, has not been since altered.

I beg further to add, that the paper Capt. Dickson has referred to, as signed by 16 Field Officers, and which he has quoted in justification of his conduct, was, I have been told, signed in error, which those officers regretted. I have also been told that Capt. Dickson pledged his word of honour to destroy that paper at Vittoria, and to make no mention of it. Mr. Cooke stated in a note to me, that Capt. Dickson placed that paper, or a copy of it, in his hands, and that unless I retracted my opinion of his conduct he would publish it. Col. Kirby, in consequence of meeting this, went, or wrote, to Capt. Dickson, charging him, as I understand, with the solemn pledge he had made of his word of honour, and made him destroy that paper, in his presence. Capt. Dickson has since published the purport of that paper in his justification.

It is not correct, as some, I understand, suppose, that Capt. Dickson ever called me out. A communication was demanded from me on his part respecting a paper he was about publishing. I had heard enough of that paper to know that I could not see it without charging its author with unfounded statements respecting me, and demanding satisfaction; but as I did not conceive I could do the latter with a man already stained, in my opinion, by a blow, I refused all communication with him. But it was pressed upon me, and I regret to say, that in a feeling of irritation, and contrary to my previous determination of confining myself to the disproof by evidence of his statements against me, I gave my reasons for refusing all communication with him to his friend.

Maj. Long having informed me that the proceedings of the Court-Martial which tried him for giving the blow were to be immediately published, I have delayed my reply to Capt. Dickson's statement in the United Service Journal till they appear.

R. L. EVANS, Brig.-Gen.,
April 5th. B. A. Legion.

The Brigadier-General, we understand, is preparing a more full and complete statement for publication, previous to his return to Spain.

We have further to notice that a meeting took place yesterday morning at Chalk Farm, between Col. Kirby and Capt. Dickson. After an exchange of shots, Col. Kirby's pistol missed fire, upon which the seconds interfered, and the parties were removed from the ground. The Colonel was attended by Mr. R. Dades, and Capt. D. by Mr. H. S. Cooke.

It is unquestionable that some jealousy exists respecting the privileges of the Guards, but perhaps it is equally great throughout the Line, with regard to the favours lavished upon certain Fusilier, Light Infantry, and Rifle corps. These good but spoiled pets of the Army seem destined to change round from one good station to another better, and scarcely ever undergo, like the other infantry, the ordinary toils of the East or West Indies. On what principle the roster for foreign service is kept could hardly be stated without casting a stone at the present Quartermaster-General, who may not merit all the opprobrium. It is not our part to affix on whom the fault should be placed, but simply to state the fact, that there are certain favoured regiments, ex. gr. the 7th, 23rd, 44rd, 52nd, 60th, 85th, and Rifle Brigade, which seldom or never are sent to a tropical climate in their turn. There are also certain regiments which seem, like the Guards, and without any peculiar claim for former services, like the regiments before named, or from their constitution, to have taken a lease of the barracks in the Mediterranean and at the Cape. We need only name in proof the 10th, 11th, and 72d. While these and a few other corps are thus favoured, not only with the best stations abroad but with four companies out of ten at home, we see that some of the finest regiments of the line are, by the unequal system still pursued, doomed to a hopeless banishment in India for more than twenty years. But, independent of the length of service for regiments in India, we complain that all other regiments which serve abroad, nominally ten or eleven years only, have four companies at home, while the regiments on the continent of India have but one, and that a skeleton company, at home, under one officer, forming the one-twenty-sixth of a provisional battalion for recruits, destined yearly to embark for India. These are simple facts, and the table annexed will prove the rate of Indian reliefs.

Infantry Regiments in India.

| Regiment. | Stations. | Year of Head-Quarters leaving home. | Rate of Reliefs for 3 Regiments from New South Wales and one from home every four years. | Year of Returning to England. | Whence proceeded to India. | Foreign Service up to the present year. | Foreign Service at probable time of Relief. |

| 9 | Bengal. | 1832 | " | 1856 | Mauritius. | 4 | 21 |

By the above table it will appear that, unless some better arrangement be made, the regiments now in India must remain unrelieved for a considerable period longer than was stated to have been fixed, namely, fifteen years. We hope that, by making known the position in which the Indian Army of His Majesty is placed, its claim to a more equitable system of relief, will be considered at head-quarters; indeed, until this grievance is redressed, we shall feel it our duty to keep it by repeated statements before the eyes of the public. In concluding for the present our remarks on this subject, we cannot but direct attention to a letter on the absurd Depot System, inserted in our columns, and for which we are indebted to our monthly contemporary.

THE letter addressed to ourselves from the Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, accompanying the Petition to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and which will be found in this day's Gazette, is another of the many strong and voluntary evidences of the influence of this Professional Organ as regards the Navy, the Army, and the East India Company's Service;—that our exertions are appreciated by officers of every grade;—and our respectful suggestions for the remedy of any grievance or abuse duly considered by those in authority.

Each succeeding week brings to us additional support, and we now look forward to the moment when the removal of a portion of the Stamp Duty will enable us, by a reduction of price, to render this source for original and authentic professional information available to every Officer in the Service.

Colonel Napier's History of the Peninsular War.—The John Bull of Sunday last pronounces the critique on Colonel Napier's History, in the Quarterly, "a master-piece of the science of reviewing. In the most gentlemanly tone, and in language utterly inoffensive, it conveys the most cutting, because perfectly unanswerable censure," quoth our disinterested contemporary; with which opinion, however, we beg leave to differ. If the science of reviewing be synonymous with sophistry, we freely admit that, in this respect (with, however, a few remarkable exceptions), it displays considerable ability, though it also shews how little of moment can be proved against the historian by one of the ablest of the tribe (perhaps by many), after eight years of preparation,—for no one can read the article and believe it written off hand. Respecting its gentlemanly and inoffensive tone there may be different opinions, though doubtless the writer had no intention of involving himself in a quarrel with the historian. But so far from its censure being "unanswerable," we think that last week we succeeded in answering some of its charges, and shewing that others were self-answered; and we imagine it not impossible that Colonel N. himself may yet dispose of a few more. That Sir George Murray, whose name appears frequently in the article, if be be not indeed the writer, has furnished much of the facts and opinions, such as they are, we suspect strongly. If this be so, it would redound more to his honour to enter the lists fairly, and try to write a better history of the war than Napier, than to count on mere anonymous criticisms, calculated to deter from the task men well qualified for historians, unless possessed (as Col. N. fortunately is) of great moral as well as physical courage. There will never be a want of pretenders, thanks to the march of intellect, though scarcely more qualified to wield the pen than the sword. That Mr. Lockhart, if not (as we suspect he is) the writer, or rather compiler of the article, is answerable for its tone, is certain: and we regret his want of candour, chiefly because it will tend to throw a shade of doubt over any praise he may bestow on the respected name of Sir Walter Scott, who, Quarterly Reviewer as he was, would not, we suspect, have written or sanctioned this article.

How different from the Quarterly, too, is the equally high Tory Blackwood, which has never mentioned Colonel Napier's work without praise. But our opinion is, that amidst the infinity of writers and critics, our literature will be destroyed and frittered away, unless some limit be fixed to their number,—as, for instance, the prohibition of all anonymous writing. Men with their names and address affixed to their lucubrations, will think twice before they commit to paper all the falsehood, trash, and libellous matter which now passes current, and the world will then have an opportunity of judging of the motive and means of acquiring information of those who pretend to instruct them. In a great majority of cases, when a well-known and an anonymous writer are opposed upon matter of fact, or opinions depending on facts, belief is due to the former.

The Quarterly takes great credit to itself for having delayed reviewing Napier's work, and says, "to have measured by its first specimens a work which promised to be of very considerable extent, and to have recorded opinions respecting it which, in its more advanced state we might find grounds for altering, would neither have been fair towards its author, just to the public, nor judicious with respect to our own character." This appears very candid; but would it not have been as well to have carried it a little farther, and have waited a few years till the history was complete. There can be little doubt that the review has been a very long time in preparation, for indeed it has not been kept back for some time to be published at a period when Col. Napier, having been much engaged with legal affairs, may be supposed less prepared to answer it. The writer says elsewhere, "We have not room, in our present number, to carry further r remarks upon Colonel Napier's work, but we propose ourselves to continue them in a future publication, hich, though not in accordance with our custom, we link justified in a case of this grave description." This intentionally conveys a higher compliment to the hisrian than could possibly have been intentionally paid m by a hireling critic. It proves that he is the most ngerous opponent to the principles which the review vocates that has ever appeared since its existence; and et his exposure of the misdeeds of the English Minisy, and the absurd claims and boasting of the Spaniards ring that war, and last, though perhaps not least, the glect into which Southey's history of it has been thrown nce the publication of his first volume, are, in the eyes tho Quarterly, sins not to be forgiven.

The critic asks why Col. N. has not "shown the conexion between the thousand currents of Spanish war-re," with "the mighty English stream of battle," &c. We answer, he has done so, although he ventures to doubt e great importence of their aid. It asks, "why does olonel Napier stigmatise the Spaniards as a vindictive ce?" and we are reminded, by way of palliation of their peated murders and mutilations of their own Generals, at other nations in similar circumstances have committed milar atrocities, as the Dutch, in the case of De Witt, c. Yes; but what other nations have done occasionally, d at periods far apart, the Spaniards have done conantly and uniformly. Their history, both in the Old d New World, proves this; as well as their struggles this moment. Neither can this be imputed to want of vilisation. The English, in the first great civil war at ast, were assuredly not more civilised than the Spands now, yet compamtively few acts of barbarity are ecorded of them, though a thousand times more inences of sterling valour. Col. N. is censured for comring Buonaparte to Hannibal, and Cæsar to Wellingn, because all the circumstances of their histories do t agree! though he has obviously only alluded to their lents as Generals; yet "his disposition to distort facts" animadverted upon!

It escaped us on first perusal that "the magnificent mpters of Southey on the siege of Saragossa" are parcularly referred to, and of Sir Charles Vaughan, who sided with Palafox after the first siege, and one or o French writers (rejected for reasons assigned in his story, by Napier), It is said that there are "no sources greater information." For another military authority specting this siege and the character of Palafox, we fer our readers to the review of Col. Napier's second lume in our admirable monthly contemporary the itted Service Journal for 1829, a work which contains sufficient answer in itself to the general charges brought inst him by the Quarterly, and which, however differg from him in politics, has always done justice to his nius, his knowledge, and his impartiality.

General Foy is an excellent authority with the Quarly, when he praises the Spaniards; otherwise, "grossly isinformed." He extols the talents of General Dupont, d it suits the critic's purpose to agree with him, though e author of the "Annals of the Peninsular War" work much puffed at the time, and apparently got up a hurry, purposely to injure the sale of Napier's*), party and personal friend of the reviewer, calls him Foy) a fool. Does the critic or the historian most disy a propensity "to accommodate everything to the as of his own opinions, and the bent of his own prejuces?" Napier justly censures the absurd confidence of e Spaniards in promising to escort the English through rance to Calais, without giving them the trouble of ghting the French, &c. This, the Quarterly says, is an attempted sarcasm against the Spaniards," and that ose expressions were "evidently employed more in ke than in earnest, if employed at all," and "have likewise had their accomplishment in the end," for the British cavalry did march through France to Calais! But is Napier does not deny. The point is, did the Spaiards escort them? Were the British idle spectators of eir victories? Was there ever anything so weak as is? Can these and similar charges, really amounting stupidity, be admitted into a critique, the labour of rt, doubtless by one of the most skilful of the craft? oes not the fact alone speak volumes in favour of Col. apier?

As to the mental energy of the Spaniards, let us inire if, during the whole war, they produced one man f commanding genius or talents? The reviewer says, Buonaparte had been accustomed to one people who ere feeble and voluptuous, and to another who were rivolous and vainglorious; and he had not, therefore, ken into his calculation that he was now about to have deal with a nation which was manly and uncorrupted." e quarrel not with the epithets here applied to the talians and French, but we suspect that the extraordinary superiority over them claimed for the Spaniards is scarcely orne out by facts. The charge brought by Coleridge gainst Napier, and quoted by his critic, that he had "not a thought for the justice of the war," does little honour to that distinguished writer; for in one at least of the very passages transcribed in the review, he pronounces the cause of the French "manifestly unjust," which is as conclusive of his opinion as if he had written whole folios on the subject, though the reviewer, according to his custom, endeavours to prove it not sufficient. The censor of the Quarterly, like the Pharisees in their prayers, seems to think he shall be heard for his much speaking; he therefore carps at every passage which he can disfigure at very great length, and may thus doubtless succeed in persuading those who are willing, viz. antinational partisans, and those who are too indolent to examine his arguments, that he has completely demolished Colonel Napier. Time will show. We are, however, inclined to believe that the veteran soldier and "honest chronicler" who, in his noble character of Moore, has drawn his own, will yet triumph over the "vile sophist" with his "talents for misrepresentation."

It always affords us satisfaction when we have it in our power to announce any liberal act of the Government; it is, then, with great pleasure we are enabled to state that a comfortable situation, in the Ordnance Department at Halifax, has been graciously bestowed on the younger son of the late Major Watson, who lost his life in the Citadel of Plymouth in the month of March last. We hope and believe that this is but the prelude to a similar act of favour being extended to the second son of this unfortunate officer, who is at this time a Mate on board of one of his Majesty's ships on the West India station, having passed his examination for a Lieutenant several years; and we are the more sanguine in this hope, whilst we recollect to have seen a gallant young man, Mr. Booth, late of the Challenger, most deservedly promoted to the rank of Lieutenant by Lord Minto a week or two ago, for having performed almost precisely the same important service, in South America, that Mr. Watson did when the Cruizer, to which he belonged, got on shore a year or two since in the West Indies.

A LETTER from Mr. Waghorn, dated Alexandria, March 1st, appeared in some of the daily papers. This gentleman has proceeded to Egypt for a very laudable object, namely the expediting our correspondence with our East India possessions, and we are sure that his countrymen hail with great pleasure the success which he informs us he has already experienced. Now it would be downright insanity on his part were he, in his situation, depending entirely upon the protection afforded him by Mehemet Ali and his minister Boghoss Bey, to make either of them the subject of vituperation, however much they may merit the abuse they have met with from other visiters. But Mr. Waghorn, in his ardour to fulfil his mission with advantage to those whom we will call his clients, has drawn a picture of the present state of Egypt which is more than highly coloured. It is, in many instances, devoid of truth, and is not certainly calculated to impress the British public with a high opinion of his political knowledge. He commences by telling us "that the Sheriff of Mecca who has been at Cairo, will leave as warm and effective a partizan of the Pacha as he has hitherto professed himself an inveterate though impotent foe." This is about as true as if he had told us, six and thirty years ago, that the unfortunate Pope of Pius had become a stanch friend to the Emperor of the French. Mehemet Ali and his son Ibrahim being as reckless, nay as tyrannical, in matters of religion, as ever was Napoleon Bonaparte. "The troops which have been recalled from the Hedjas are on their way to Syria, while about 3000 Syrian recruits are now being disciplined in Cairo by the Pacha's officers." Perhaps a few hundred men may have been recalled, but nine tenths of that army have been completely destroyed by the Arabs, jungle fevers, and the plague. The 3,000 recruits are youths who have been dragged from their homes, and will most certainly desert upon the first opportunity, unless, indeed, (a very probable circumstance,) they perish by the plague, which, notwithstanding Mr. Waghorn's assertion, is still raging.

"Mehemet Ali is a man whom it is too much the interest of the British government to protect, and of the whole British community to think well of, to do all they can to further his interest, consolidate his power, and secure the uninterrupted succession of his family." Mr. Waghorn seems to have forgotten the celebrated axiom of "Fiat justitia ruat cælum." Why, Egypt and Syria belong in right, and the British government acknowledge the fact, to the Sublime Porte, and this is really a new doctrine in politics to advise England to protect an individual, and consolidate a power, which every one must admit is an usurped one. "To those initiated in the Egyptian trade, the importance attached by the European journals to the Sultan's late Firman appears truly ridiculous; according to these, British merchants have only to come to Egypt to buy from the Fellahs the produce of that soil which has since 1814 belonged exclusively to the Pacha, the cultivators and original possessors being reduced to the condition of hired labourers, without any control over the produce." And is Mr. Waghorn, who passes so strong an eulogy upon the Pacha of Egypt, an advocate for a man who has reduced nearly all his subjects to the state of hired labourers, having seized upon all their property? "In Syria the case may be different, there the Pacha had abandoned his monopolies before the Firman above alluded to had appeared; but certainly no power upon earth has any right to interfere with the internal taxation of Mehemet Ali's dominions, and consequently the idea of the freedom of trade, which they are pleased to represent as enforced upon Mehemet Ali, must prejudice his revenue, is too shallow an assertion to deserve comment. How limited must be their power of calculation, when they suppose it can matter one iota to the revenue of the Pacha whether he monopolises silk and then offers it for sale at his own price, or whether he leaves the trade open to all, first exacting from the cultivators an ad valorem duty on its growth, which of course the producer must consider in estimating the prices at which he can afford to sell it. Thus it will be with all other Syrian exports, and so it would be with the produce of Egypt, were any power so mad as to interfere with the internal arrangements of this country." So then the Firman granted to Lord Ponsonby by the Sultan is to be set at defiance, and a measure so advantageous to British commerce is to be eluded, and this by a Pacha who still pretends to acknowledge the Sublime Porte! There is a treaty existing between this country and the Sublime Porte which limits all duty of export or import at three per cent. Does Mr. Waghorn suppose that our government, during the existence of such a treaty, will submit to the impost of twenty per cent. ad valorem duty now laid on by the Pacha? Mr. Waghorn continues thus:—"Now the power of Mehemet Ali is felt in Syria, the same personal security and excellent police which so long existed in Egypt is extended to the former country, where the christian and the stranger enjoy a protection fully equal, and in many instances superior, to that a foreigner unacquainted with the country, and unknown to the natives, will find in the most civilised states of Europe. Many and loud have been the complaints against Mehemet Ali; much has been said of the abject subjection to which he has reduced his Egyptian subjects, and the harshness of the measures he has adopted with those of Syria. The little experience I have had, corroborates the opinion I have elicited from the oldest residents here, by so doing he has availed himself of the only means of maintaining his power." Tranquillity reigns not in Syria: and if it did, it would be of the kind mentioned by the Roman historian,—"He makes a desert and then calls it peace." And as to the protection and security afforded to foreigners, it was only a few months ago, in January last, that Mehemet Ali published an ordinance, by which it became compulsory on any stranger landing in Egypt, to obtain security for his residence, and in the event of his not being able to procure it, the Captain who brought him over to be punished by a severe fine. And Mr. Waghorn ventures to apologise for the abject condition to which Mehemet Ali has reduced his miscalled subjects by a measure of expediency, that is, in order to maintain his usurped authority. There can be no doubt that Mehemet Ali and his minister, Boghoss Bey, will be much pleased with the following lines by Mr. Waghorn; but we are sorry that we are under the necessity, having not a little, but a great deal of knowledge of Egyptian affairs, to give a direct contradiction to the whole assertion, namely, that "The Pacha's finances were never yet in so brilliant a position as they are now; his resources are immense; his revenues increasing, and his expenses daily diminishing." In corroboration of a part of our statement, we need only refer you to the Mercure de Souabe, which has come to hand this morning: in a letter from Smyrna, of the 3d of April, it is affirmed that the English, Austrian, French, and Russian Consuls have taken their departure for Syria, having received orders from their respective governments—in consequence of the complaints of the Syrians with regard to the oppression of commerce—to concert measures, and obtain an alteration of the ruinous system pursued by the agents of Ibrahim.

We have great pleasure in directing the attention of our readers to an advertisement in the last page of our present number. At the period of the recovery of the treasure and stores sunk in the Thetis, we felt great interest in that highly meritorious undertaking, as being one particularly exhibiting the characteristic intrepidity of the right arm of our strength, the Navy; and we have looked forward to much gratification in the perusal of Capt. Dickinson's long promised narrative of his important operations on that occasion, and which is now in course of publication. We have had the favour of reading some sheets of the work, which will be embellished with five highly interesting plates. The [illegible]

The work will be an xpensive one to the gallant author, and we hope that he ill receive that encouragement which it deserves; in rtherance of which we shall be happy to receive sub-riptions to it, which also may be paid to Joseph Wood-ead, Esq., No. 1, James-street, Adelphi.

THE leading paper in the United Service Journal for is month, detailing a colloquy between two supposed aptains, upon that never-failing topic, Naval Architec-re, is truly amusing. One thing is assumed, however, om misinformation we suppose, which should be set ght; namely, the dimensions of the old Victory. Bow-is makes this out to be, according to the old saw, one-ird of her length. But it is not so; her breadth, if we collect rightly, is nearer one-fourth than one-third. As is is evidently put forth to detract from Capt. Sy-onds's merit in the bold step which he adopted of creasing the breadth beyond all former precedent, we ink it but right to expose any attempt to deprive him the credit of the improvement now that it is univer-lly acknowledged by practical sea-going men. If eatherly qualities, as well as speed, can be insured, en is the wide ship to be infinitely preferred to the rrow one, on account of possessing more room and ability, besides various other advantages.

The number of persons emigrating from Ireland to merica this year, is said to exceed that of former years the proportion of three to one. There are many causes signed for this unprecedented movement, of which the incipal one is, that during the last two years, owing to e prevalence of cholera, or the dread of it, multitudes o had designed to emigrate postponed their intention a more auspicious season. All these are now on the ng, and their number, added to what may be called the gular shoal of the year, swells the amount far beyond e customary average.

King William.—Scaffolding was on Mon-round the pedestal in College-green, Dublin, ing of a new statue of King William upon to be proceeded with as rapidly as possible.

Kinloch, of the Spanish Auxiliaries, has arrived in England on sick leave; and Lieut.-Col. Gre-ville has been pronounced by a Medical Board incapaci-tated for active service in consequence of ill-health.

In the Court of Faculties of Doctors' Commons, on the application of Prince Charles of Capua, the brother of the King of the Two Sicilies, for a license of marriage with an English lady, Dr. Nicholl, the Master of the Faculties, after hearing the objections made by the Nea-politan Minister, Count Ludolf, on the part of his So-vereign, said, "I have come to the clear conclusion that the Court does possess the discretion of refusing a li-cense—although there might be no impediment to the mar-riage!" The license is accordingly refused upon this wise interpretation of the law. An appeal to the Chan-cellor, in the shape of an injunction against Dr. Nicholl, is spoken of.

Within a few minutes of the rising of the House this morning, Mr. Talbot moved for a new writ for Kilkenny, in the place of Mr. Sullivan, who has accepted the Chil-tern Hundreds, a fact from which the curious in politics may possibly form some anticipations as to the probable result of the Dublin election committee.

The Court.

Kerr, Priestley, Faulkner, C. A. T. Lynch.

The King, taking into consideration the highly-distin-guished and meritorious services of the late Lieut.-Gen Sir John Hamilton, during a period of 64 years, has granted to his son, Major Sir James Hamilton, permission to bear and use supporters to his armorial ensigns.

The Lord Steward of his Majesty's Household has appointed Mr. Shiffner Paymaster of the Household, in the room of Mr. Talbot, deceased. Mr. Shiffner is a general favourite throughout the Household.

Their Majesties returned to Windsor Castle yesterday afternoon from St. James's Palace, in the enjoyment of perfect health. The King will give a grand dinner to-day in St. George's Hall to the Knights of St. Patrick and the Knights of the Thistle, at which the Prince of Orange will be present.

Her Majesty's first grand state ball at St. James's, being fixed for Friday the 13th inst., the parties fixed to that day have been postponed. The second state ball will be given to the juvenile branches of the nobility and gentry in honour of the Princess Victoria's birthday, the last fete of that description which will probably be given in celebration of that event by the King and Queen, as the Princess, we believe, will be declared of age next year, when she will attain her eighteenth year.

The Duchess of Kent was prevented by indisposition from attending the Queen's drawing-room on Thursday.

Three Royal birthdays will be celebrated this month. The King's will be kept the 28th, the Princess Vic-toria's the 24th, and that of Prince George of Cam-bridge the 27th.

The Prince of Orange, accompanied by his two sons, the young Princes William and Alexander, arrived at Mivart's Hotel on Thursday, from Rotterdam.

The King has appointed James Brant, Esq., some time British Vice-Consul at Trebizonde, to be his Ma-jesty's Consul at Erzeroom.

THE LADIES VICTORIOUS.

Mr. Grantley Berkeley has led on the ladies to vic-tory, and the Exclusives have been defeated with great slaughter. The citadel of the Commons has indeed been taken by storm. The gallery is to be opened to the fair; and where fools have hitherto rushed in, angels will not henceforth be afraid to tread. An hon. member whose name is a profound secret to the reporters, "hoped that every gentleman who was blessed with daughters would give his negative to the motion." Daughters however, seem to be scarce, for only ninety voted with the nameless member, and a hundred and thirty-two with the champion of the privileges of woman. The argu-ments against the motion were exquisitely weak. "He would not enquire where it was proposed to end"—that is the ladies would press forward in overwhelming array and take possession of the Treasury benches. No! Well, then, they would bribe the door-keeper to admit more than the legal number, and the time of the House would be taken up in perpetually counting four-and-twenty ladies all of a row. Besides (so the argument ran) there was a lobby, there was a library—and "might not some gentlemen wish to push the matter further? How? By pushing the ladies through the lobby into the library! The gallantry of this would be as equivocal as shutting the door in their faces. But the motion, ac-cording to Mr. Villiers, was unnecessary, because "he was not aware that any excitement existed out of the House upon the subject—he was not aware that any peti-tions had been presented!" To be sure not. What should the ladies have to do with the "pressure from without?" Petitions! Only imagine the ladies of England upon their knees, beseeching and praying for admission, as if they must necessarily "stoop" in order to conquer! Rather would we have them excluded than see them supplicate for entrance. But how strong were the arguments on the other side. In the Chamber of Deputies, at Paris, said Mr. Potter, seats were reserved for the ladies; and he would take upon himself to say that he had never seen the slightest appearance of levity on their part. At Washington, in the United States, ladies were also admitted. Surely with such example before them, hon. members could not think of acting upon an exclusive and oriental practice. In Belgium urged Dr. Bowring, and in many of the German States ladies were admitted into the great Council of the nation and their presence had in no respect impeded the progress of public business. And in the Irish Parliament, tri-umphantly remarked Mr. O'Connell, where it was found that a number of members came drunk into the House the remedy proposed was that ladies should be admitted and from that moment "not a single drunkard was seen." Nor a married one either, he might have added. What gentleman would risk being "oh! oh'd!" in the pre-nre of bis wife? What member would open the preninaries of a challenge in the presence of his daughter?

What orator would venture upon a superfluous speech at e in the morning, when both were waiting to accomuy him home? The boldest of them all would shrink om the responsibility of suffering his lady to fall fast leep at such an hour of the morning. What must be e feelings of a father on seeing his dear girl come down breakfast with a distressing head-ache, brought on by e loud coughing at her papa's speech the night before!
n every way the argument is in favour of the admission f the ladies. Their presence will have a most salutary ffect upon the temper, the manners, the habits, and proeedings of our legislators. One adverse point alone is o be detected—it has escaped observation, yet it is all mportant—the ladies may not attend! It is far easier to rovide seats—than seraphs!—Court Journal.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 2nd May.—The Stafford Disfranchisement (Witnesses Indemnity) Bill was read a second time, both the Duke of Wellington and Lord Melbourne having previously expressed an opinion that some understanding should be come to with the other House in regard to this Bill.—Lord DUNCANNON moved the order of the day for the House going into committee on the Irish Constabulary Force Bill. The Earl of ROMNEY considered the measure as most unconstitutional in its principles, and dangerous in its enactments. Lord MELBOURNE defended the Bill. The Duke of WELLINGTON objected to the power given to the Lord Lieutenant of raising an unlimited number of policemen. After some discussion, in which Lord Hatherton, the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Marquis of Lansdowne, and Lord Glenelg, supported the Bill, and the Marquis of Londonderry, the Earl of Haddington, and Lord Gort, opposed it, the House went into committee.—On clause 4, which enables the Lord Lieutenant to make rules and regulations for the government of the police force, being read, Lord ELLENBOROUGH moved the omission of the words "the extent and limit of their respective duties, and their conduct and proceedings in the performance thereof, or of any duties imposed upon them by law." Lord DUNCANNON considered the words important, and objected to their being omitted. A considerable discussion ensued, after which the amendment was agreed to without a division. The rest of the clauses were agreed to, with a few unimportant amendments.

TUESDAY, 3d May.—The Stafford Disfranchisement Bill was committed, and several slight amendments, moved by Lord Ashburton, were agreed to.

FRIDAY, 6th May.—On the motion of Lord DUNCANNON, the report on the Irish Constabulary Bill was brought up. The Duke of RICHMOND objected to the clause which obliged a constable or sub-constable to swear that he did not belong to a secret society, because it would operate against the society of Freemasons. The Earl of Radnor, the Duke of Leinster, and Earl Harrowby opposed the clause. The Marquis of LONDONDERRY thought there should be no exception in favour of Freemasons. The Duke of LEINSTER moved as an amendment that Freemasons be excepted. Their lordships then divided—for the original clause, 44; against, 41; majority against the amendment, 3.—All the other clauses, as amended, were then agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 2d May.—Several petitions were presented by Mr. O'Connell, praying for an inquiry into the case of Col. Bradley.—The Glasgow and Falkirk Railway Bill was read a second time.—The Edinburgh Four-per-cent Bill was read a third time and passed.—Lord J. RUSSELL stated that it was his intention to introduce a measure in regard to Church-rates in the course of the present session.—The House having gone into committee on the Tithes Commutation Bill, clauses 1 to 33 were agreed to.—The Dublin Police Bill went through a committee.—Lord J. RUSSELL said he intended to introduce a Bill with reference to the University of Durham, but he could not exactly say at what time.

TUESDAY, 3d May.—The Heriot's Hospital Bill, the Southampton Docks Bill, and the Tollcross Gas and Waterworks Bill were severally advanced a stage.—The Crediton Improvements Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. GOULBURN presented a petition from the proprietors of four of the daily papers, complaining of that part of the plan proposed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer for regulating the stamp duties, which imposes an increased duty upon what is called a "double paper."—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER defended himself against the charge which had been brought against him of partiality to The Morning Chronicle. He had fixed on the proposed duty simply in reference to conveyance by post, and he thought it but fair that a double newspaper should pay increased postage as well as a double letter. The petition was laid on the table.—On the motion "That the order of the day for the further consideration of the Report on the Midland Counties' Railway Bill be read," Sir R. FERGUSON moved, "That the Bill be re-committed." After a short conversation the House divided, when the amendment was carried by a majority of 153.—Mr. G. BERKELEY then moved, "That it is the opinion of this House, that the recommendation of the select committee appointed in the session of 1835, with respect to the admission of ladies into a portion of the strangers' gallery be adopted, together with the plan for the purpose of Sir Robert Smirke; and that directions be given to that architect to proceed as speedily as possible in the execution of his plan, at such hours as may not interfere with the business of the House." After some discussion the motion was carried by a large majority.—Sir W. MOLESWORTH brought forward his motion for a committee to inquire into the conduct of the Commander of the Forces in appointing Lieut.-Col. Lord Brudenell to be Lieut.-Col. of the 11th Dragoons. A debate ensued, which we have noticed in a separate article. Lord BRUDENELL defended himself in a manner, the impression of which upon the House may best be estimated by the division which concluded the debate. Lord HOWICK opposed the motion. Lord G. LENNOX spoke in support of Lord Brudenell, and Mr. HUME began with condoling with Lord Brudenell, and concluded by a violent attack on Lord Hill. Sir H. HARDINGE expressed his satisfaction at the restoration of the Noble Lord to active service, as did Mr. E. ELLICE, who entered into a detail of the circumstances that had come under his knowledge, as connected with the case, during the time he held the office of Secretary-at-War. Mr. O'CONNELL spoke in high terms of Lord Brudenell, and recommended Sir W. Molesworth to withdraw his motion—a recommendation with which Sir William immediately expressed his wish to comply. The House, however, insisted on a division; for the motion, 42; against it, 822.

WEDNESDAY, 4th May.—On the presentation of a petition against the Midland Counties Railway Bill, Sir S. WHALLEY took the opportunity of stating, in reference to a resolution that no Member should vote on a question in which he was pecuniarily or personally interested, that he was not the only Member who had given such a vote. A few nights previously, two Directors of the Dublin Steam Packet Company had voted upon that Bill, and an Hon. Member, who was a subscriber of 15,000*l.* in the Kingston Branch Railway Company, had decided a very important question connected with that railway by his vote.—Mr. P. SCRROPE brought forward a series of resolutions to the effect that no time should be lost in taking such steps as might tend to relieve the poor of Ireland from their calamitous condition. Mr. W. S. O'BRIEN seconded the resolutions. Lord MORPETH said that Government were taking the necessary steps to remedy the evils, and as soon as they could prepare such a general measure as they could recommend for the adoption of Parliament it would be brought forward, and that with as little delay as circumstances would admit. The Noble Lord moved the previous question, and the original motion was withdrawn. The Poor-rate Bill was read a second time, after some unsuccessful opposition on the part of Mr. Wakley, Mr. Wason, and Mr. T. Duncombe.—Mr. BUCKINGHAM brought forward the Public Walks Bill, but after some discussion Mr. H. Hughes moved that the House be counted, and as only thirty-eight Members were present, an adjournment took place.

THURSDAY, 25th May.—The House sat but a short time, and was entirely occupied with private business.

FRIDAY, 6th May.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER submitted his financial statement in a Committee of Ways and Means. The available surplus is 662,330*l.*; and with this it is proposed to take off half the duty on paper of the two descriptions manufactured; the whole of the duty on stained paper; the South Sea duties; part of the duty on marine insurances and insurance of farm buildings; the additional 50 per cent. on spirit licenses; and the duty on taxed flys and carts. In addition to these, the stamp duty on newspapers will, as already announced, be reduced from 4*d.* to 1*d.* This diminution to apply to Ireland as well as England, but a reduction of the advertisement duty to be extended to the Irish papers. And lastly, the probate duty is only to be payable on the actual balance of the property of the deceased, after deduction of all debts. A good deal of incidental discussion of course took place.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence

FRANCE.—The Dukes of Orleans and Nemours left Paris for Berlin in the afternoon of Monday, as had been previously announced.

SPAIN.—It is understood that the Ministry is at length formed, and on the eve of official promulgation. The following is the list:—M. Mendizabel, President; Count Almodovar, Foreign Affairs; General Rodil, War; Miguelos Heros, Justice; Senor Ferrer, Interior.

Cordova is said to have made a reconnoissance on the Biscay road, which, like most of that General's achievements, led to no result. It was reported at Vittoria that his resignation of the command had been transmitted to Madrid and refused by the Queen.

PORTUGAL.—The new Cabinet is composed under the influence of the Prince. The Duke of Palmella has no office, but is charged with the negotiations of treaties, and other acts relative to foreign affairs, of which, nevertheless, Count Villareal is nominal Minister. The Duke of Terreira, War Minister; Gonsalez de Miranda, Marine; Silva Carvalho, Finance; Jose Freire, Home Department; Ant. de Aguiar, Justice. The Prince has expressed his resolution to take and keep command of the Army.

HOLLAND.—The Queen of the Netherlands set out on Sunday for Berlin. Her Majesty, who travels under the name of Countess of Kameotz, is expected to stay two months at Berlin.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—On Thursday the Queen honoured the theatre with her presence, to witness La Gazza Ladra, and the new ballet of Benyowski, or the Exiles of Kamtschatka. The basis of the story is the same as that upon which Kotzebue constructed his well-known play of that name. The King's Theatre has seldom produced a finer and better-designed spectacle in all its parts. The music is by Borbsa. The dancing and acting of Romani, who sustained the principal character, were admirable. Carlotta Grisi, who danced with Perrot in the first act, also distinguished herself highly. The ballet was in every respect most successful. Nothing can exceed the brilliancy of the ball-room scene; it is the most superb and gorgeous we ever recollect at this or any theatre.

LYCEUM.—A new piece, entitled The Witch's Son, was produced on Monday at this delightful theatre, and proved tolerably successful. This drama is not deficient in interest, both comic and serious, but the great drawback is the tedious length to which it has been spun out; at least half an hour may be taken from this piece with very great advantage. The plot has nothing of novelty to recommend it—it is carefully, and, at times, humoorously written; we like the comic portion of it the best. The performers, one and all, did their utmost for the success of the Witch's Son. Serle played the part of Michael extremely well, and Mrs. Keeley imparted a considerable share of truth and feeling to the part of Rose Ardeley. The comic parts were well filled by Oxberry, Bennatt, and Salter; the manner in which the latter announced that "We have ducked the Doctor," was extremely ludicrous. The piece is, we are informed, from the pen of Mr. Serle. Another new piece was produced on Thursday evening, called The Man about Town; it is from the pen of Mr. Bernard, and is likely to have a successful run. The acting of Mr. Wrench in this piece was admirable. We have not space to say more in its praise this week.

STRAND.—This snug little theatre is now open under the immediate sanction of the Lord Chamberlain, and we trust with every prospect of answering well. The new proprietors are both men of considerable theatrical experience in their different ways: Hammond is a capital manager, and an excellent comedian; and Jerrold, as a dramatic writer, has very few equals; these are real advantages to commence theatrical business with. The chief attraction, as yet, has been the appearance of Mr. Jerrold, who has entered upon a new line, and is now striving as > Author and actor, by his blended skill,

> To mould our passions to his instant will.

We wish him every success in his new and arduous undertaking, for we are his debtor for many an intellectual and well-spent hour; and if he proves by practice but half as good an actor as he is an author, he will soon make some of our little stars hide their diminished heads. There are few persons who can form the slightest notion of the difficulties which beset the path of the aspirant for histrionic fame, except, indeed, those who have ventured before a public tribunal, though most men fancy themselves actors until they have made a trial of their skill. Mr. Jerrold in person is below the middle stature, his features are regular, his countenance intelligent (particularly so) while in repose, and capable of considerable expression. His voice is of good quality, clear, sonorous and musical (we did not think so on the night of his debut), but he has improved greatly since then. Of acting Jerrold as yet knows nothing, but he is a clever man and may learn anything. Of his performance of the part of Roderick, in The Painter of Ghent, we can truly say, that it was delivered with good taste and discretion; in short, it was the reading of a scholar and well informed man. This little part in the piece actor like Macready would have made a great impression; it is beautifully written, and will add greatly to Mr. Jerrold's fame as a dramatic writer. A Miss Beresford sustained the female character in this little sketch, and acquitted herself well. Doves in a Cage has been played this week, in which Miss Daly sustained the part of Mabella extremely well. The Carbuncle of Mr. Benson Hill is a clever performance; he was admirably made up for the part, which is not one of much importance, therefore the actor is entitled to the greater praise for the pains he bestowed on it.

ASTLEY'S.—This popular theatre continues to be crowded every evening. The Great Plague and the Great Fire, with all their horrors, and the May Day revels, prove most attractive. The scenes in the circle are as admirable as ever.

Mr. Charles Kemble and Mr. Sheridan Knowles have in the kindest manner offered their valuable services to perform in The Wife, for Mr. Notter's benefit.—We know of no person connected with Covent Garden Theatre more deserving of patronage than the attentive box-book keeper, whose politeness to the ladies who were present at the recent Conservative dinner, has won him a host of patrons. We wish him a bumper, for he is an old and valuable servant of the establishment. The new opera to be produced at Covent Garden Theatre next week, is from the pen of Capt. Polhill, late lessee of Drury Lane Theatre.

CONCERTS.—Madame Dulcken's morning concert on Monday, under the patronage of the Duchess of Kent, proved the richest musical treat of the season. The King's concert room was crowded to overflowing, with all the rank, beauty, and fashion in the metropolis. We never remember to have witnessed a more imposing sight, for nearly the entire of the audience consisted of lovely and elegantly attired females. The principal vocal performers were Madlle. G. Grisi, Madlle. Ostergaard, Mrs. Bishop, Miss C. Novello, Signors Rubini, Lablache, and Tamburini. The polacca and quartetto from Puritani was most delightfully given—Grisi was indeed herself; it met with a most rapturous encore. The same compliment ought to have been paid to the duet from Paccini's Gli Arabi nelle Gallie, which was one of the gems of the concert. Mons. de Beriot's concerto on the violin was a most perfect performance, and loudly and deservedly applauded. Madame Dulcken performed three very elaborate pieces on the pianoforte; the first, the celebrated concert Stück, by C. M. von Weber, the second a difficult quintetto by Spohr, and the third a grand fantasia by Kalkbrenner on the admired air of "The Last Rose of Summer." To attempt a description of this accomplished artiste's matchless skill as a pianiste, would occupy a space far greater than our limits allow. We cannot, however, say more in her praise than has been said by a morning contemporary, that she has no equal as a pianiste;" in this we quite agree, for there is in Madame Dulcken's performance not only brilliancy of execution, rapidity of fingering, delicacy of touch, but evidence of a mind illumined by genius, and strengthened by a careful and attentive study of her art. The wonderful Norwegian violinist, O. B. Bull, made his debut at the King's theatre on Thursday morning. He is allowed on all hands to surpass the great Paganini. We never heard such tones from the instrument before, nor is it possible to suppose the violin could ever produce such soul-stirring tones. His execution on four strings at once positively electrified the audience.

WITHOUT A TUNNEL.
Offices, No. 31, New Broad-street.

A report being sedulously circulated that Mr. Canty has sold his line to certain interested parties (who doubtless would be but too happy to purchase), the Provisional Committee of this undertaking only notice the report for the purpose of informing the Shareholders, that, upon application at the Offices, ample proof will be readily afforded them that their interests have been legally secured in the most complete manner.
By Order of the Provisional Committee,
J. C. FOURDRINIER,
Secretary.

FAMILIES of DISTINCTION and others, who may be about to make extensive Purchases, will find important advantages in the present improved style of FURNISHING at HENRY L. COOPER'S Manufactory for Rich Upholstery, Chairs, Cabinet Work, and Looking Glasses of a quality and price that fears no competition.—93, Bishopsgate-street Within, and 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street, left-hand side.
H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to this Address.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.
Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.
Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler; E. Edwards; J. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by Nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.
Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

RELIEF FROM PAIN.
IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—This extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloreux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained the high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheumatism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.
Sold, by the appointment of Jean Lefay, the Inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 98, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries (if by letter, post paid) respecting it, and also show letters received from numerous patients who have benefitted by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London carriage free. Sold in Pots at 4s. 6d. each.
NOTICE.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Government Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it cannot be genuine.

FOR THE SKIN AND COMPLEXION.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, prepared from the most beautiful exotics, and warranted perfectly innocent, yet possessing properties of surprising energy. It eradicates all cutaneous eruptions, pimples, spots, redness, &c. transforms even the most sallow complexion into radiant whiteness, realising delicate white Face, Neck, Hands, and Arms, and imparting a beautiful juvenile bloom to the Complexion; and speedily renders Harsh and Rough Skin beautifully soft, smooth and even.
Gentlemen after Shaving will find it allay the irritating and smarting pain, and render the skin smooth and pleasant after Travelling. Price 1s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included.
Observe—As a protection from Fraud, the Name and Address of the Proprietors,
A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton Garden, London, is engraved on the Government Stamp, pasted on the cork; also printed in red, on the outside Wrapper.
Sold by all respectable Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA,
A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.
"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 18, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.
"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.
"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 18, 1835."

From WILLIAM HANSON, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville-street, Hatton Garden.
"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "WILLIAM HANSON.

THE Company to be established under a Deed of Settlement, limiting the liability of each Shareholder to the amount of his subscription; and also under the sanction of an Act of Parliament or Royal Charter of Incorporation.

The Capital to be £60,000*l.*, in 6000 Shares of 10*l.* each, upon which a deposit of 4*l.* per Share is to be paid to the Bankers. Subsequent calls are not anticipated, but if required, are not to exceed 2*l.* per Share each call, nor to be made at intervals of less than three months.

In the event of any call on any Share or Shares remaining unpaid after the expiration of twenty-one days from the day appointed for such payment by advertisement in the London Gazette and two London Daily Newspapers, at the least, such Shares to be forfeited.

When 4000 Shares shall be taken, and the deposits paid on them, the Company to be considered as formed, and a General Meeting of the Shareholders shall be forthwith convened, at which Meeting the Directors shall be elected.

It is a well-known fact that many of the most ingenious and scientific men have for centuries directed their attention to the important object of obtaining from the ocean a palatable and wholesome Water for the use of Mariners at sea. A vast number of experiments have been made, and several Machines invented for this purpose, but which have only succeeded to the extent of obtaining a very small quantity of pure Water by distillation, in a still and Worm devoted wholly to that purpose, so that, in consequence of the first cost, the space occupied, and fuel consumed, the result has been so unsatisfactory that the Machines never could be brought into general use.

It has been reserved for the present era, when the various applications of Steam have been so fully developed, that its advantages should be extended, not only to the Sailor's Kitchen, but made a prime agent in providing at all times one of the elements of existence. This has been accomplished by a very simple and commodious Machine, which will roast, bake, and boil well; from which the surplus Steam passes off through a condenser, and produces excellent Water for the use of the crew, at the rate of one gallon for every 1 lb. of Coals consumed after the Steam is up.

The Water thus obtained is perfectly pure and wholesome. It has been analysed by Professor Faraday of the Royal Institution, by the Professor of Chemistry at Apothecaries' Hall, by the Lecturer on Chemistry at the Gallery of Practical Science, and by several other eminent Chemists and Medical Gentlemen, whose written opinions and certificates may be seen at the Offices of the Company. The Apparatus has been repeatedly worked in the presence of many distinguished nautical and scientific Gentlemen, all of whom have expressed their decided conviction that it must be universally adopted, both in the British Navy and Merchant Service.

It has been tried at sea, and proved to be perfect in a sea-going vessel.

The Lords of the Admiralty have already given orders for a machine to be placed on board one of the King's Ships, and there are several orders received for large Merchant Ships.

 All Applications for Shares and Prospectuses to be addressed (free of postage) to the Committee, at the Company's Offices, on or before Saturday, the 21st of May.

Orders for the apparatus may be addressed (if by letter, post paid), to the Committee; and any gentleman may inspect the machine at work, at the Company's Warehouses, No. 121, High-street, Wapping, on Tuesday and Wednesday in each week, between the hours of 12 and 4. The purified Sea Water may be tasted, and the Prospectuses obtained, there, and at the Offices, 26, Lombard Street.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.—INFALLIBLE HAIR DYE.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HARMAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between the two, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots or discolouring the skin or linen. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and Gentlemen of the turf in removing "white conditions," and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, William Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 21, Gracechurch-street; Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; and by all the principal Chemists, Perfumers, and Booksellers, in town and country, in bottles, at 3s., 5s., and 10s. each, having directions for use, with a fac-simile of the signature of Agid Harman; also that of William Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

THE KING'S OWN WHISKY, distilled expressly for the use of His Majesty, at Fraser's Royal Brackla Distillery, Inverness, is perhaps the only Malt Spirit which proves alike congenial to the palate and constitution of connoisseurs of every country. It is peat-flavoured, but far from rank; strong, but not fiery; and produces most exquisite punch or toddy. As Consignees, we offer THE KING'S OWN WHISKY to the Trade at a mere commission on the invoice price; and to enable private families to detect spurious fabrications, which may be imposed upon them, we undertake on all occasions to draw this fine spirit from the original Highland puncheons, at 32*s.* per Imperial gallon; to bottle it at 44*s.* per dozen, bottles inclusive, or (for more general accommodation) to supply single sealed bottles at 5*s.* 9*d.* each. Orders, by post or otherwise, will meet immediate attention from HENRY BRETT and CO., Wine and Brandy Merchants, No. 139, Hulborn-hill.

THE CALAMITOUS EFFECTS OF FIRE, which is become almost a daily occurrence, not only of the loss of property, but lives, induced J. READ (who had been an eye-witness to many of these dreadful calamities) again to turn his attention to some mode of relief by the construction of Machines as portable that they may be kept in a passage, staircase, closet, or bed-room, and be worked even by a female, throwing water in a dense stream a distance of forty feet. The valves are so arranged that they cannot possibly get out of repair, but are ready to act in an instant. Made to order of any dimensions, for Fire Engines, &c. &c., suitable for every purpose of horticulture, or for wetting the sails of ships, yachts, &c. &c., in tropical climates, with power equal to a fire-engine.

Manufactured only by the Patentee, 35, Regent Circus, Piccadilly, where they may be seen and proved.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

MOST IMPORTANT INFORMATION.
BY HIS MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

G. MINTER begs to inform the Nobility, Gentry, &c., that he has invented an EASY CHAIR that will recline and elevate, of itself, into an innumerable variety of positions, without the least trouble or difficulty to the occupier; and there being no machinery, rack, catch, or spring, it is only for a person sitting in the chair merely to wish to recline or elevate themselves, and the seat and back take any desired inclination, without requiring the least assistance or exertion whatever, owing to the weight on the seat acting as a counterbalance to the pressure against the back by the application of a self adjusting leverage; and for which he has obtained His Majesty's Letters Patent. G. M. particularly recommends this invention to invalids, or to those who may have lost the use of their hands or legs, as they are by it enabled to vary their position without requiring the use of either to obtain that change of position, from its endless variety, so necessary for the relief and comfort of the afflicted.

The Chair is made by the Inventor only, at his Wholesale Cabinet and Upholstery Manufactory, 33, Gerrard-street, Soho. G. M. is confident an inspection only is required to be convinced of its superiority over all others.

Merlin, Bath, Brighton, and every other description of Garden Wheel Chairs, much improved by G. Minter, with his self-acting reclining backs, so as to enable an invalid to lie at full length. Spinal Carriages, Portable Carriage Chairs, Water Beds, and every article for the comfort of the invalid.

A MOST IMPORTANT NOTICE.

G. MINTER having tried the validity of his Patent, both in the Court of Exchequer, before Baron Alderson, and in the Court of King's Bench, before Lord Denman, and Special Juries each time, he will now give a handsome Reward to any person giving him information of any Chair, where the seat and back act as a counterbalance, being sold, made, or even in use, that has not the legal stamp on the top of the legs, and the words "Patent, G. Minter, 33, Gerrard-street, Soho," &c.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of his disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unadulterated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR OILY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dew of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprives it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.*, 6*s.* 6*d.*, and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers 12*s.* each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. VAN ROTENHAM, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints, without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him, on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, and No. 10, Ludgate-hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Savage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also PASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH, INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soups, Broths, Gravies, Hashes, Fish, Game, Poultry, Vegetables, Salads, Boulli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 79, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Co., Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Wells, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c. is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

MR. BARRY'S DESIGN FOR THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT!
The ATHENÆUM of the 21st instant will contain A DESCRIPTION OF THE NEW HOUSES OF PARLIAMENT, WITH
AND A PERSPECTIVE VIEW,
Engraved on Steel, in the first style of art, by Mr. Kearman, after drawings made UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE ARCHITECT.

The anxiety of the Public to see this splendid Design, to which the Commissioners awarded the first Prize, will now be gratified. From the exquisite delicacy and beauty of the Drawing, it was found impossible to do justice to the Artist except by a STEEL EN- GRAVING; and as copies of such Engraving can only be multiplied at the rate of from 500 to 750 in twenty-four hours, and as but few days will remain after taking off a sufficient number for the supply of the regular Subscribers, before publication, the Pro- prietors propose, for the convenience of all parties, that such Booksellers and News agents as may require a number greatly exceeding their average, should at their earliest convenience, and through their London Agent, deliver a written order for such extra Numbers, and the supply shall be regulated by the receipt of such orders. Persons residing in remote places are recommended to give their orders to the nearest Bookseller as early as possible, that he may have time to communicate with his London Agent. It would be better in such situations to order the MONTHLY PART FOR MAY, inasmuch as the Engraving will be carefully attached therein, and thus secured against injury.

The ATHENÆUM is published every Saturday, price FOURPENCE. The Monthly Part contains the Four Weekly Numbers, stitched in a wrapper.

MESSRS. DELCROIX & CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, beg leave to inform the Nobility and Gentry that they have now completed their SPRING STOCK of NEW and FASHIONABLE PERFU- MERY, and have also just imported, from Paris and the South of France, a choice selection of the most approved articles of the day. They respectfully recommend the following esteemed pre- parations to the attention of their Patrons and the Public:—

Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavanda aux Millefleurs, for the pocket handkerchief.

Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.

Delcroix's Pommade Regeneratrice, for the growth and preser- vation of the hair.

Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Ve- getable Soaps.

Delcroix's much-esteemed Old Brown and White Windsor Soaps.

Delcroix's long approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and gums from decay.

Delcroix's Creme de Sultanus, for softening and beautifying the complexion.

Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bears' Grease and Huiles Antique.

Messrs. D. and C. have recently obtained Injunctions from the Court of Chancery prevenling certain parties from selling a spu- rious imitation of their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, both of which will in future bear their signa- ture on the labels, and their address, 158, New Bond-street, on the back of the bottles.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter [illegible] from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, K[illegible] the Nurse, testifies:—

Sir,—I am honoured with the King's [illegible] express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in [illegible] two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been [illegible] direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—[illegible] you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 28th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Mor- bus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysteries, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 298 other Medical men have given cer- tificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar prepara- tions. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Thilroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. London, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.
THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, in Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having ideas of their own) to attempt an Imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose!) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Her- ring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signa- ture, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, impart- ing a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use. In Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 222, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

TO INDIA, CHINA, and the COLONIES

FOR PASSAGES to, and Information connected with, the above places, apply to CAPT. JAMES BARBER (late of the ship CAMBRIDGE), No. 4, Leadenhall-street.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS.—The superiority of this Patent over all other inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers and Gentlemen in the Civil Service. It possesses the combined advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally adapted for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to and from the Colonies, as they will form a ship Cot or Sofa during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED, and where all other descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied on the lowest Terms.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. the East India Company.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 40 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

MILITARY and Naval Gentlemen, Writers, Cadets, Midshipmen, and Families, are respectfully invited to Messrs. W. H. ABLETT and CO.'s, 97, Cornhill, Clothiers and General Outfitters, where every article is charged at the wholesale price, for Cash only.—Calico shirts, 6s. per dozen; ditto, 12s. and 14s. per dozen; good ditto, 18s., 21s., 24s., and 30s. per dozen, ditto, with linen collars, wristbands, and lawn fronts, from 30s per dozen for the finest quality; a large assortment of long cloth and Irish linen ditto; striped sea shirts, 18s. per dozen; printed ditto, 24s. per dozen and upwards; cotton half-hose, 3s 6d. per dozen; handkerchiefs, 3s 6d. per dozen; silk ditto, 6s. per dozen; dress collars, 3s. 6d. per dozen; cotton caps, 2s. per dozen; a great variety of boys' and girls' under linen; ladies' chemises 9s. per dozen; ditto, 12s. and 18s.; good ditto, 21s. and 24s. per dozen; ladies' night-caps, 6s. per dozen, night-gowns, 18s.; long ditto, 24s., 30s., and 36s. per dozen; sheets, 2s. per pair; pillow-cases; linen towels, 6s. per dozen; gentlemen's wearing apparel made up in the first style; a great variety of jean jackets and trowsers, from 7s. 6d. per suit; superior ditto, made to measure, 18s; and 24s. per suit; duck, drill, kerseymere, &c., ditto, in great variety, bedding, from 3s. 6d. each; cots, hammocks, blankets, counterpanes, trunks, sea chests, and all kinds of cabin furniture, &c

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

ISAAC LEVY, Successor to S. LEVY, No. 2, Hemming's-row, St. Martin's-lane.

Begs to call the attention of Officers of the Navy and Army, &c., to his Old-Established DEPOT, where they will find ready every article of Naval and Military Equipment, Camp Furniture, Bedding, Bedsteads, Canteens, Portable Drawers, &c. &c. Officers and others attending Levees and Drawing Rooms supplied with every article required.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

E. JOHNSON invites the attention of Naval and Military Officers, Cadets, Passengers, Writers, &c. Passengers, proceeding to India or the Colonies, to his improved PATENT METALLIC EXPANDING BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and Swing Cots, which for Cleanliness, Strength, and Convenience are unequalled. Also to his Patent Sofa Bedsteads in Rosewood or Mahogany, which may be used as Sofas, Swinging Cots, or Camp Beds, forming at the same time a convenient and elegant piece of Drawing Room Furniture.

A large assortment of Brass and Iron Camp and Hospital Bedsteads, Spring, Stuffed, Recumbent, and Easy Chairs, Mattresses, Carriage Seats and Cushions, Mahogany, Camp, and Hospital Drawers, Wash Hand, and other Tables, Wardrobes, Canteens, Liqueur Cases, and every description of Portable Furniture, whether for the Camp or Cabin, all at Wholesale prices.

OFFICER'S BEDSTEAD, with Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, and Curtains complete, only £6 6s.

An inspection of the above articles is earnestly and with confidence requested at the Manufactory for every article of Travelling and Camp Equipage, 155, Leadenhall-street, only four doors from Cornhill.

NEW CAMP COUCH.—MAYNARD and Co., 27, Poultry, invite the attention of Military Officers and others proceeding to India to this important and simple Bedstead. The following is an extract from an Officer of the Madras Army, dated Coorg, April 15th, 1834.—"Again I am seated on Maynard's Travelling Bedstead, which has accompanied me thus far, and, by the by, has been extremely serviceable to me during the campaign." Extract from a letter from a Naval Officer:—"I can with justice say that there was no more convenient piece of furniture on board my ship, being, from its construction, doubly useful in a rolling or standing couch by day, and a swinging cot in bad or lurching weather; it moreover occupies less space in a cabin than the ordinary hair sofa, and, being exceedingly light and portable, is easy to be handled in shifting or taking on shore. My daughter's answered extremely well in travelling after her arrival in India: in fine, the best constructed thing of the sort I have ever met with." May be seen at MAYNARD and Co.'s Military and General Outfitting Warehouses, 27, Poultry, next the Mansion House.

INDIAN RUBBER WEB DEPOT, Regent street, adjoining the County Fire Office.

Mrs. HINRAM begs to recommend her improved ELASTIC SUPPORTING BELTS, for Ladies in the habit of taking Equestrian Exercise, or inclining to embonpoint which are also of the highest importance after accouchement, likewise Elastic Stockings, Ankle Socks, Knee Caps, &c., made to order with the greatest care and precision, and an extensive variety of Elastic Garters of a very superior quality, Indian Rubber Cords and Stay Laces with every width and description of Webs.

P S.—Mr. Higham attends separately upon Gentlemen.

LADIES' OUTFITS TO INDIA. Messrs. THRESHER and CO., 152, Strand, next door to Somerset House, respectfully acquaint those Ladies and Families who are preparing for India, that Entire Outfits, embracing every article necessary for the voyage, and for use in India, may be obtained at their establishment, all of which are so arranged as to insure every comfort during the voyage, and an ample supply on arrival. PORTSMOUTH, May 13.—(From our own Correspondent.) Monday—Pantaloon, Lieut. Cory, sailed for the Gambia, with presents and dispatches for Rear-Adm. Sir P. Campbell. She is to return to Portsmouth. Tuesday—Sylvia arrived from Sheerness with 33 volunteer seamen; 25 of whom are for the Minden. The Hercules was expected to go to the Great Nore on Thursday. The Asia is still in the basin at Sheerness. Wednesday—Salamander, Lieut. Neville, came in from the coast of Spain; last from Plymouth. The information brought by her has appeared in all the public prints, so that it is needless to repeat it here. The Salamander on Thursday took on board the remainder of the officers that came to England in the Imaum, for a passage to Woolwich; they are to be employed in fitting the Prince Regent yacht, and afterwards navigate her to his Highness at Muscat. Stakesby transport arrived on Thursday from Plymouth with the depot of the 58th, and landed them at Gosport. Vanguard and Bellerophon will bend sails tomorrow, and go to Spithead the beginning of the week. Pembroke is to go out of basin on Monday. Moira transport, when cleared of old stores, &c., is to proceed to Cork. Adm. Sir P. Durham has most kindly given 100*l.* towards the erection of a new market-house at Portsmouth. Ships in port—Britannia, Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, Buffalo, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Moira and Stakesby transports.

WOOLWICH Dock-Yard, May 13th—(From our own Correspondent).—J. B. Williams, Esq., Clerk of the Cheque, has retired upon his superannuation, much to the regret of all those connected with him in official duty, as well as private life, he being much esteemed and respected. Lieut. Waugh, returned from Deptford on Friday se'nnight, whither she had towed the Investigator brig. Rhadamanthus st.-v., Lieut. Blount, came up the river, towing the Scarborough 74, up to Deptford. The Rhadamanthus towed the Alban st.-v. down to Woolwich on Monday, which latter vessel was subsequently hauled into the basin with the Confiance. The Rhadamanthus taking up moorings off the yard. Roberts, first Engineer, has been dismissed for neglect of duty. It has attracted observation, why a Court Martial was not called upon the occasion, in consequence of the late order in Council, giving the rank of Warrant Officers to this valuable class of men; but it has escaped notice that this person, as well as other individuals who have been lately discharged, have not gone through the gradations in the King's Service, but were merely civilians employed by Government. Lieut. Blount hauled down his pennant on Wednesday last, and resumed the command of the Hermes. The Rhadamanthus brought up ninety supernumeraries, having draughted the remainder on board different vessels. Hermes st.-v. went down the river as far as Greenhithe on Thursday, to ascertain how her engines and the new paddle-wheels worked. Ships in Commission in Port—William and Mary yt, Hermes st.-v. In the Basin—Confiance.

PLYMOUTH, May 11th—Alonzo transport, Lieut. Spencer, R.N. agent, passed down Channel for Santander on Saturday. Firebrand st. arrived on Friday, and started the following day for Falmouth. Swift packet arrived on Friday from Portsmouth, and sailed the following day for Falmouth. Stakesbury tr. arrived on Friday with the depot of 20th regt. from Cork, and landed them at the Dockyard; the following day embarked the depot of 58th, and sailed the same day for Portsmouth. Lavinia was undocked on Friday morning, and is being jury rigged. Cornwallis, 74, was towed into the harbour by the Brunswick st. on Monday, to be docked, having touched the ground when going out of the harbour. In the Harbour—Royal Adelaide 110, Minden, 74, Cornwallis, 74, and the Star brig, the latter is ready for sea. In the Sound—Talavera.

ROYAL MARINES.—There was a grand muster of the Woolwich Division on Wednesday last on Woolwich Common, where they went through a field-day with much eclat, being the first of the summer drills, under the command of Col. M'Cleverty, C.B.; the whole of the Field Officers of the Division were on the ground.

RIO JANEIRO, March 3d.—The Dublin and Cleopatra had returned from a five weeks' cruize off Cape Frio, where daily opportunities occurred of trying the rate of sailing of the two ships. On every point, and on every occasion, did the Cleopatra prove decided superior, more particularly when blowing fresh, which is the more remarkable, as she is a donkey frigate, and the Dublin a sister ship to the Barham, and in every respect alike as to masts, yards, &c.

LIGHT HOUSES.—Particular attention should be paid by merchantmen bound to Liverpool, to the fact that in order to distinguish the North West Light, in Liverpool Bay, from the other Lights in the neighbourhood, it will in the night time burn a Blue Light every two hours; doubtless this will be of great use, but it would have been more useful to have burnt these lights hourly or half-hourly.

The schooner Agnes, which was run down about two months since by the Gladiator, New York packet, and which now lies sunk in 16 fathoms water, near the Edgar Buoy, at Spithead, was sold a few days since, for 600*l.*; her cargo is principally hemp, some tallow, and oil, and 25 tons of iron ballast, with smaller articles. She is to be raised with dockyard assistance which the purchaser must pay for, and will be an interesting performance. The wreck of the Eliza, stranded on Littlehampton Beach, was sold a few days since, to Mr. Isemonger, of that town, for 475*l.* The cutter, Good Intent, is sunk in the Channel, about 2½ miles from the Ower's light vessel.

ROYAL MARINES.—Colour Serj. Sumner, of the Excellent, has been presented with the medal, and a gratuity of 15*l.* for long services and good conduct.

Monday, in consequence of a resolution passed by the land-tax payers of Deptford, on Thursday last, a memorial was presented to Lord Minto, the First Lord of the Admiralty, with a view of inducing government to favourably reconsider the question of the claims to the town of Deptford to assess the Dock-yard and Victualling-yard to land-tax, and to forego proceedings for the alleged illegal distress of government stores (which, it decided against the town, will throw an excessive burden upon the rate-payers), and to endure them to submit the matter to arbitration on equitable principles.

The Quail cutter was paid off at Portsmouth on the 7th inst. In our last we announced the appointment of her gallant commander, Lieut. Hixson, to the Bonetta, a fine new brig, fitting at Sheerness for the coast of Africa. Another officer was intended for this command, but the Lords of the Admiralty, taking into consideration the praiseworthy and seamanlike conduct of Lieut. Hixson upon the late perilous occasion, when, but for his gallant and persevering exertions, the crew and vessel must have been totally lost, determined upon this mode of rewarding good conduct,—a determination highly creditable to them, and one that will not fail to produce emulation on the part of those officers employed who may have opportunities of distinguishing themselves. It is understood that the Lords of the Admiralty intend placing on board this vessel one of the Patent Purifying Sea Water Machines.

The Right Hon. Lord Glenie was last week admitted into Dr. Burney's Academy, at Gosport; and the Hon. Frederick Fitzroy has recently been appointed a Volunteer of the First Class to his Majesty's ship Hercules, from that Establishment. This school has long been celebrated for the excellent preparatory education of youths intended for the Navy, and its appliances are fully equal to the purpose. It deserved the encouragement it received even when under the disadvantage of competing with an establishment in a great measure supported at the public cost; and now, when such an unfair rivalship is about to be removed, we doubt not its various advantages of situation, as well as the excellent method of instruction employed will be duly appreciated.

The Colonial-office and the Admiralty have agreed to appoint Capt. Back to undertake a new expedition for effecting the ambitious object of discovering the North-West passage. See appointments.

The proprietor of the King's Rooms at Southsea, thought proper the other day to pale in part of the glacis; but upon a representation from the Magistrates of the Borough of Portsmouth to the Ordnance Department, he has been ordered to take it down and throw the walk open again to the public.

Mr. John James Stopford, Mid. of H. M. S. Pembroke, passed for Lieut. at the Naval College on Tuesday.

Lieut. G. B. Lawrence (1803) is placed on the list of retired Commanders.

The repairs of the Prince Regent Yacht goes on rapidly at Deptford, Commodore Corgon, who brought over the Imaum, frequently visits the yacht.

The Redoubtable, 74, at Sheerness, is appropriated to the assistant Surgeon, in lieu of the Scarborough.

It is reported various alterations are contemplated in the transport service, one of which will be, by placing an orlop deck in ships of 800 tons; they will be enabled to accommodate a whole regiment, which will not only be far more economical to the public, but more agreeable to the regiments, and prevent delay and probably separation, where a regiment is embarked in more vessels than one; the Barossa, at Deptford, is fitting on this plan, and will undergo an official inspection from the Admiralty before she sails for that place.

The Scarborough, 74, is to be broken up at Deptford yard, many others are selected for a similar fate, Admiral the Hon. C. Fleming arrived previously in the Rhadamanthus from Scotland, and re-hoisted his flag in the Medway.

The Captain Cook and Elizabeth are taken up at Deptford to take female convicts to New South Wales, and the Lady Kennaway for male do.

By a new regulation the In-pensioners of the Royal Hospital, Greenwich, will be supplied with blue trowsers in lieu of small clothes as heretofore.

Arrived at Deptford yesterday, the Salamander sl. having the Lascars on board from Portsmouth, who brought home the Imaum, they will be hulked in the Investigator, and return in the Prince Regent yacht to their own country, or in the vessel accompanying her out.

Royal Artillery.—Lieut.-Col. Gamble, who was to have assumed the command of Pigeon-house Fort, will relieve Col. Paterson on the Plymouth Station, the latter officer having been appointed to superintend the Repository at Woolwich. Qr.-Master Cates has applied for his retirement. The whole of the drills commenced this week. On Monday and Tuesday there was some excellent mortar and howitzer practice, on Woolwich Common and in Plumstead Marshes, where the rocket-troop also began their exercise this season. There was an excellent field-day in infantry evolutions on Wednesday last. The detachment at the Tower was relieved on Thursday from head-quarters. The corps are now enlisting recruits, who must be 5 feet 6½ inches,—between 18 and 22 years of age—unmarried, stout, and well-made. Young promising lads under the above standard and age, may be taken, on reference to head-quarters. Written characters required. Bounty 2*l.* 12*s.*

Royal Engineers—Capt. Wrinyate's Company embarked on board a transport on Saturday last, for Halifax, N. A. to relieve Capt. Rivers's Company, which will return to head-quarters.

Yeomanry.—The annual meeting of officers of yeomanry cavalry will be held at Willis's rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Friday, June 10. The Stewards are, the Duke of Beaufort, Colonel of the Gloucester Yeomanry, who will preside; Earl of Brecknock, Lieut.-Col., West Kent; Sir R. A. Anstruther, Capt. Fifeshire, and W. F. Campbell, esq., Capt. Isle Airdree.

A meeting of gentlemen was held last week in the Town Hall, when it was resolved to present, on his departure for Ireland, Lieut.-Col. Shaw Kennedy, inspecting officer of this district, with some token of the esteem in which he is universally held in this neighbourhood. A subscription for this purpose was forthwith opened, and is yet proceeding.—Manchester Times.

East India Intelligence.

The Madras papers contain some accounts respecting the Charles Eaton, which was supposed to have been lost on the Barrier Reef, in Torres Straits, about June 1833, in prosecution of her voyage from New South Wales to Madras. It appears from Capt. Byron, of the Premier, that Capt. Barrow, of H. M. S. Rose, had received a letter from the commander of the Mangles directed to any captain of H.M.'s Ships on the station, dated Lombock, in which it was stated that on his passage from New South Wales, through Torres Straits, he touched at Melville (Murray's) Island, where he found eight men belonging to the missing ship Charles Eaton. These men stated that the whole of the crew and passengers were slaves on the island where the Charles Eaton had been wrecked. The natives prevented the captain of the Mangles from taking the men belonging to the Charles Eaton on board.

The accounts from Calcutta state that the late season has been unusually cold, therm. standing at 40 deg. at 8 A.M., which so far from proving beneficial, has been the cause of much sickness. It is a fact that ice appeared on the ground on the morning of the 16th January.

On the 15th Jan. the Nepaul embassy landed at Calcutta. The General Mutubbar Sing, who was conveyed to Government House in Mr. Trevelyan's carriage, was dressed in an elegant uniform, with English epaulettes. The troops of the escort were also very smart looking men, small of stature, but very active.

From accounts from the Goomsur country, we learn that the Rajah's Dewan and his two sons have given themselves up. There has been some smart engagement with the rebels, but have not as yet been able to take the Rajah, for whom there has been offered a reward of 5,000 rupees.

H. M. 13th L. I. left Agra on the 29th Dec., and the European reg. entered the succeeding day.

Major C. P. Kennedy, of the artillery, retired from the service on the 26th Dec. This retirement makes Capt. Charles Hamilton Bell a Major and First Lieut. Charles Grant a Captain. Major George Gowan to succeed to Major Kennedy's appointment at Subathoo.

Accounts from Hansi mention that the station was not then suffering from illness, which unfortunately had been so prevalent during the greater portion of the past year.

The ship Herefordshire has brought home H. M. 3d reg., a greater part of which has volunteered to corps of the Bombay establishment, and embarked on board the Adelaide on 16th Jan. under command of Brev.-Capt. Turner, H. M. 44th.—Hurkaru, Jan. 19.

(Buffs) were to arrive at Allahabad 27th Nov. The 9th N.I. marched from, and the 70th N.I. arrived at Benares, on 27th Nov., in progress to Barrackpore. Intelligence has been received of the death of Lieut. Patrick Lamb, 9th N.I., on his passage to the West Indies, whither he was proceeding for the recovery of his health.

By the arrival of the Malabar, from Bombay, we have not been able to receive papers in time for press.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

Head-Quarters, Calcutta, 19th Dec. 1835.—At an European General Court-Martial, held at Kurnaul, 21st Nov. 1835, Capt. A. R. M'Naghten, 61st N.I., was arraigned on the following charge: "With scandalous conduct, in having in a note to the address of Capt. E. C. Windus, H.M. 11th Light Dragoons, made the following assertion, viz. that he, Capt. M'Naghten, and Capt. Mouke knew that Lieut. Low, 39th N.I., when a witness on the trial of Lieut. Wallace, of the same regt., had sworn to what was not the truth, such assertion being false and unwarrantable, and tending to destroy his character as an officer and a gentleman." The Court, from the evidence before them, were of opinion that Capt. M'Naghten was not guilty of the charge against him, except of writing the note set forth in the charge, and to which they attach no criminality; they therefore, fully and honourably acquitted him of the same.—Approved, H. FANE, Gen. Com.-in-Chief, E.I.

The Court felt it no more than justice to Lieut. Low to record that, in their unanimous opinion, he stands acquitted of any willful or Intentional departure from the truth, in giving his evidence on the late trial of Lieut. Wallace, 39th N.I.

Capt. M'Naghten is released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

Head-Quarters, Calcutta, 30th Nov.—At a General Court-Martial, held at Barrackpore, 18th Nov. 1835, Ens. John William Sidney Smith, H.M. 38th Foot, was arraigned on the following charge, by Capt. J. J. Lowth, of the same regiment, viz.:—"For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, and subversive of military discipline, in having endeavoured to force him to fight a duel, without any sufficient cause or provocation." Upon which charge the Court, having maturely weighed the evidence for the prosecution, and what was urged in defence, were of opinion that the prisoner was guilty of so much of the charge as extends to the simple sending of the challenge, in breach of the Articles of War, but acquitted him of the rest. The Court having thus found the prisoner guilty of so much of the charge as above-mentioned, therefore sentenced him to be reprimanded.

Approved, H. FANE, Com.-in-Chief, East Indies.

The Commander-in-Chief is of opinion that he should neglect his duty to the Army if he failed to offer some remarks, grounded upon this Court-Martial. He will candidly state to the Army that the endless numbers of Courts-Martial in India is a general topic amongst military men in England, and the subject of general condemnation amongst soldiers. Until he was placed in his present position, he was at a loss to account for this peculiar circumstance, but this Court-Martial and many similar examples have fully explained how the evil arises. In this instance, two brother officers fall out about a matter in itself trifling, which leads to a certain crisis; the affair is brought to a point which requires a decision, and Capt. Lowth forms his own judgment about what is right and necessary for the vindication of his honour. Two Captains (A. Campbell and W. Campbell, as was shown in the proceedings of the Court-Martial) were of opinion that what was offered as an apology by the offender was quite sufficient to render unnecessary any further proceedings. The Commanding Officer of the regiment was of opinion that what was offered was sufficient. The Commander-in-Chief was of the same opinion; and Major-General Watson, who commands the division, hopes "that the sentiments of the Commander-in-Chief may be respected." All this will not do. The opinions of the four superior authorities above named are not sufficient to suit Capt. Lowth's ideas, but, obstinate in his own opinion, he solicits to be permitted to appeal to the last resort, namely, a Court-Martial. He could produce many other instances of obstinate and unbending perseverance in the opinion of the correctness of the individual's own ideas, and the utter disregard of the opinion of those superiors who stand in a position to look calmly and without bias on the cases laid before them. The Commander-in-Chief submits others to reflect upon what he has said, and to aid him in getting rid of that bane to the Service, "the endless calls for Courts-Martial;" but unless he receives such aid, that blot upon our character as an Army (which he so much desires to remove) cannot but remain attached to us.

Ens. Smith is to be released from his arrest, and will return to his duty.

BATTLE OF ST. SEBASTIAN.

Head Quarters, St. Sebastian, May 6, 1836.—Yesterday was a glorious day for the Legion and the cause of the Queen; so successful and so sanguinary an action has not been fought since the commencement of the war. A triple line of formidable defences carried after an obstinate struggle—defences considered by the insurgents as perfectly impregnable; Segastibelza, Oniloyla, and a Cure, one of the most influential men in the province killed.

By three in the morning the troops were formed in three columns, near the enemy's first line, which was immediately carried. The rifle reg. now pushed back the enemy's right, while the Chapelgories, the 3rd and 6th regts., advanced against the centre of the position. But on this side no progress was made. The fire kept up by the enemy was incessant, and made fearful ravages in our ranks; it was, in fact, a complete battue. So incessant, so deadly was the fire, that it fairly beat back the head of the column, which thrice strove to penetrate the line. How the Lieut.-Gen. escaped at this moment is a miracle. He stood upon a barricade, amidst a shower of balls, urging on the troops, but all attempts to penetrate the enemy's position by that point were fruitless. In the meantime Gens. Chichester and Shaw's brigades on the right made considerable progress; they carried the works immediately above the Ajuda convent, and advanced against the last line of entrenchments. This line consisted of a strong redoubt on the extreme left, which was connected by a loop-holed wall with the fortified villages and redoubts, which extended to the right of the line nearly a league in extent. Aware that this redoubt o the left was the tactical key of the enemy's position Gens. Chichester and Shaw's brigades, supported by tw Spanish regiments, made three attempts to carry it, bu in vain. The steep ascent—the muddiness and slipper nature of the ground, nearly knee-deep from tha lat heavy rains—gave the enemy, who fought under cover o his works, a great advantage. It was now ten o'clock The Phœnix and Salamander steamers, which had com into harbour a few moments after the action commenced and which brought round 1,300 men of the 4th and 8t regts. opened their fire on the enemy's works. Such wa the precision of the vertical firing, such the effect of th shells thrown at a distance of 1,500 yards, that they tor down an epaulement of the enemy's works, and effecte a breach, through which our men entered. In the mean time the 4th and 8th regts. had arrived on the ground They were immediately formed in columns of attack b the Lieut.-Gen. in person, when they advanced and ca ried the redoubt at the point of the bayonet. At thi moment the Lieut.-Gen. with his Staff, as he gallopa up the steep ascent, was loudly cheered—tha redoub carried—the columns rushed down the road, carryin everything before them; while the 3rd, 6th, and Rifle advanced from the right and centre, and menaced th works in their front, upon one of which the Carlista ha hung out a red flag. Just as the last charge was mad the sun burst through the clouds, and the whole popula tion of St. Sebastian was seen congregated on tha Castle hill, from whence they could behold every movement o the affair with as much facility as a looker-on does th moves of a game of chess. When they saw the effects o the vertical firing, the precision with which the shells were thrown, observed the columns of attack advancing up th height, and heard their wild hurrah flouting above the di of battle, a shout of enthusiastic admiration, I have bee told, burst from the assembled multitude. The troop behaved admirably, and the enemy, to do him justice, be haved with distinguished gallantry. The Balfries Cha pelgories (blue caps) repelled two attacks with th bayonet.

St. Sebastian, May 6.—The strength of the Carlist lines it is scarcely possible to conceive; but when you know that the site by nature could not have been more favourable to a defence, and that for five months the enemy have laboured incessantly, under the direction o skilful engineers, to do for it all that the art of defence could do, by raising parapets, cutting trenches, building or pulling down walls, and opening in every house innumerable loop-holes, you will then comprehend what kind of duty the Legion undertook yesterday when it marched out to drive a determined enemy from double lines of entrenchments, in which they were so advantageously posted. You are aware it is the only time the Legion has been in action, and an old soldier told me that yesterday's affair was the hottest one he had seen in twenty two years' service. In the beginning of the action, as the men marched up to the first lines, our loss was terrible. The enemy poured their shot through the loop-holes, and from behind the parapets, like rain. One re giment, that had made a circuitous movement to get into the flank of these lines, came into the road right in front of some fortified houses, which presented to them nothing but a wall full of loop-holes. The men faltered. The moment was most critical. The Lieut.-General himself advanced, and placing himself on a rising ground, exposing himself for about two minutes to a very heavy fire, took off his hat, and waving it, encouraged the soldiers. "Men," said he, "we must distinguish ourselves to-day, or forfeit our character as Englishmen!" It was enough: they advanced; and the enemy, afraid of being flanked, fell back on their second lines. Here they made a most resolute defence; and two attempts to carry these lines proved unsuccessful—our men were driven back. From a large house, which they had strongly fortified, they kept up a terrible fire. About this time Lord John Hay arrived with the Phœnix and Salamander steamers, with troops from Santander. The troops were immediately landed, and marched to reinforce the body attacking the large fortified house. The Phœnix threw some shells into it, which opened the breaches. A new charge was made, which is talked of as one of the most brilliant things ever witnessed. No one outdid another in this—all did as much as human strength and the coolest valour could accomplish. One of Col. Harley's soldiers told me Harley said to the soldiers, "Now, men, we'll have no nonsense, no firing at men behind walls. Fix bayonets—walk into them, and skewer the scoundrels behind their walls." Among the troops who so gallantly distinguished themselves in this charge, were many raw recruits. One of the officers who commanded them told me, they asked whether the ball or the powder should be put into the musket first? His answer was, "You've nothing to do with powder or balls; fix your bayonet, hold fast your musket, and run it through every one that stands before you." It made me remember the remark of our friend ——, that a British soldier was fit to face the enemy whenever he could bite the end of a ball-cartridge.

St. Sebastian, May 5, half-past 4.—At last we have obtained glory, and such as is not to be surpassed, even with reference to our Peninsular war. We have driven the earliest force out of the strongest fortifications ever seen by old officers. The Spaniards themselves acknowledge they could not have done the same with 20,000; our force was 4,200. Of course we suffered tremendously—600 killed and wounded, and nearly 80 officers put hors de combat. The disproportion is very great, but had it not been for the gallant conduct of the officers, all would have been lost. Men were falling like hay before the scythe, which terrified the rest, and caused great confusion. Regiments got mixed, and it was only by the officers waving their swords, and exclaiming—"Now, my brave boys, follow me!" that they were rallied; thus the exposure of the officers, and the great mortality amongst them. I regret to tell you that my poor friend Hamilton was shot dead. Only four of our officers escaped without wounds. Our regiment has distinguished itself wonderfully. The Colonel and both Majors and the Captain are only wounded. How we drove them from such strong holds is the wonder of all. It was completed in seven hours. The sortie commenced at one in the morning, and by nine we lowered the Virgin Mary banner. The first fire commenced at two—it was quite dark. The first three lines were taken without a shot being fired on our part. Their loss must have been nearly equel to ours, besides five pieces of cannon. The Spaniards here have behaved nobly to us. The landlords were out, and posted themselves at the gates, and as wounded officers were brought in, took them to their houses, and insisted upon their not being taken to the hospital.—The few women who remained in town acted so wonderfully well. They went out on the road with wine and bread, and gave it to the poor fellows as they came in. Col. Le Marchant, the Adjut.-General, was raised to the rank of Brig.-General immediately after the action, for his services. Gen. Reid, when leading his column, was severely wounded in the chest. Col. Tupper and Col. Considine are dangerously wounded. Captain Knight, A.D.C. to General Chichester, had been wounded, and was brutally massacred, after he was found lying on the ground by the Carlist troops. The 7th reg. behaved gallantly under their brave and intelligent commander, Colonel Swan. Its loss is very severe. The forbearance of the Legion was wonderful, considering the provocation; but it was impossible to save the Carlist Generals from the fury of the soldiery. The prisoners made by our troops were well treated. The 4th and 8th regiments, which arrived during the action, were engaged within ten minutes after landing, bayonets fixed, without having fired a shot. No part was taken in the action by the English marines, but the fire from Lord J. Hay's vessel made the breach by which they entered the works of the Carlists before St. Sebastian, and did therefore great service.

On the 5th, at four in the morning, notwithstanding the torrents of rain, which had never ceased falling since the evening previous, and which had greatly swelled the river. Gen. Evans determined to put his plan in execution. He ordered his force (about 4000 men) to march to the attack of the foremost Carlist positions, which extended from Antigno to the windmill and the house of M. Iturralde. This they effected without encountering more than the fire of the enemy's advanced posts. But when the British arrived at the second line of the fortifications (our correspondent says those entrenchments were beyond the shot of San Sebastian) they encountered the most determined resistance. Twice the English reached the height of Lugariz, and twice were driven back by the Chapelgories, or Carlist corps. All along the rest of the line the Queen's troops kept up a continual fire—the Carlist artillery played from Ayete and Puye, the English cannon from the windmill. But the point of Lugaris was perceived to be the key of the position, the Carlists sending all disposable forces to support it, and the English to take it. The rain never ceased to fall, and much impeded the attack. Towards eight o'clock it ceased, when Commodore Hay entered the bay with two steam-boats of the British marine, the Phœnix and Salamander. These opened their fire upon Lugariz, and one of their projectiles set fire to the fortified house defended by the Carlists. Two hours after, 800 of the British Legion landed from the steam-boats, attacked and carried the position of Lugariz, the Carlists flying in disorder to Ernani, abandoning three pieces of cannon, muskets, and other articles. The loss is considerable, as little or no quarter was given on either side.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH DISCIPLINE.

It has of late been much the fashion to propose imitations of the army of France in several branches of the British service. Surely it may be well to compare generally the armies of France and England, before such imitation is proposed. As to what the French Army was, that is not the question—we must look to it as at present formed, organized, and governed. And first, as to its formation. That there still remain many valuable and experienced officers in the French army no one can deny; but let it be recollected that every officer of suspected attachment to the Bourbons, or of known adherence to the old revolutionary principles, as well as many of those whose activity in the troubles of the late revolution rendered them too conspicuous, have been carefully weeded out, and replaced by men whose first merit, like Col. Heyne's, was their having used their influence with the troops to turn upon their officers and act in direct disobedience to them; and we shall find, without surprise, that the French soldier has very few of those ties which constitute the only discipline on which dependence can be placed in times when it is most needed, and when its absence is most fatal.

The organization of the French army, whatever be its merits, is new: the officers and men have shifted about so much—the regiments have been so often within late years re-formed and placed on a different footing, that it is impossible there should exist among them that fellowship and mutual reliance so eminently advantageous to the soldier and the service.

The government of the French army is our next consideration. Every one acquainted with military life is aware of the necessity of consistency in the governing of troops. The strict, nay even the severe, officer, if he be consistent, will possess more of his men's confidence and respect than one who, though far more mild in his administration of military justice, is inconsistent and uncertain. On the same principle, the frequent changing of officers will, in a great degree, produce similar effects, because, no sooner is the character of one Commander well known to the soldier, than he is replaced by a new one. Now, whatever professions or assertions may be made by the French military authorities, the truth is there is no French officer who can deny that favour, and favour exercised in the most arbitrary manner is the road to promotion in their service. The nominal advancement by seniority is a mere farce and delusion from beginning to end, and is evaded daily in the most flagrant manner. As a proof of this, it is only necessary to see any French regiment under arms, and to notice the different ranks of officers, when one glance will show that there are just as many young men in the upper grades as with us, where the purchase of promotion is an admitted rule and principle. To say that these young men owe their position to the pure and unpatronised merit in the field is an absurdity—for where have been their fields of distinction unless the mock siege of Antwerp, the disgraceful civil broils of Paris, or the savage partisan fighting about Lyons, are to be held up as theatres of honour and glory?

All the mutual instruction in the world will not give that character to the modern French soldier with which he was inspired, first by the spirit of republicanism, and afterwards by the wonderful influence of Napoleon's genius. He will perhaps become very wise in his own conceit, and will be more difficult to manage in consequence; but his superficial acquirements will lead him to look upon himself as too well fitted for a great general to make a good soldier; and considering the duty of the sentinel beneath his talents, will neither have patience nor sense of duty sufficient to make him endure those privations and hardships which are of daily occurrence while the opportunity of acting the hero is constantly presents itself to him, even if he knew how best to improve it. The discipline of the French army, composed of such materials, is not easy to maintain; and as the vanity of the soldier is flattered by many petty devices, and he is among other delusions taught to be not liable to corporal punishment, yet what is the real truth after all? Why, that no soldier is subjected to immediate brutal and hopeless degradation eventually, in case of misconduct, even of a venial description, than the French soldier; for he is condemned to the bagne, which is the modern substitute for the punishment of the galleys, where, probably, the degradation of the human species is carried to an extent beyond any comparison with the worst condition of our convicts in the penal settlements. But the chief point, as concerns the question before us, is that the soldier discharged into these prisons becomes at once liable to an arbitrary and disgraceful description of corporal punishment, namely, the infliction of the cudgel by the gaolers, thus entirely exploding the empty boast that "the French army is not subject to corporal punishment,"—a boast only so far true that corporal punishment is always preceded by expulsion from the ranks into the bagne. With such a tremendous power over the soldier as this, it is not surprising that French can, in time of peace, preserve a tolerable degree of discipline in their army; for they not only severely punish the offender, but they at once get rid of him out of their ranks for good and all, thus avoiding the main evil in our service of being obliged to keep men who are themselves incorrigible, and who corrupt others besides.

We have had for many years satisfactory proof of the effect of a partial application of this part of the French system in our Household Cavalry, where flogging has, it may be said, scarcely existed; not by any means that the power of flogging was abridged or restricted more than in the Line, but it was always a privilege of the Life Guards and Blues to discharge a soldier after receiving corporal punishment, so that the offender, after serving as an example to others, was himself dismissed from the service. Such a privilege as this, extended, even with some restrictions, to the rest of the army, and above all if accompanied, or rather followed, by a term of imprisonment, would doubtless have a greater effect upon the discipline of the service than any other means that could be devised. Let the soldier who is incorrigible be flogged and turned out of the army into the precincts of a house of correction, and you will indeed be imitating the French system to some purpose, and in a beneficial way.

The inquiry made by the late Committee on Corporal Punishment into the French system must not be mistaken for an acknowledgment that it is one which, of all the continental armies, most merits the imitation of the British. The sole reason why that Committee so carefully investigated the French discipline, by examining French officers sent over on purpose to explain its details, was because, of all foreign armies, the French alone can lay claim to this boast of exemption from any kind of military punishment of a corporal description. With what truth they lay claim to this exemption has been sufficiently shown; and it is only to be hoped that, whenever the subject is before Parliament, Members conversant with the true state of the case will be found ready to explain for the understanding of the public in general, that the sole difference in reality between the codes of France and England, as to the liability of the soldier to corporal punishment, is, that the former discharge the ill-conducted soldier into prisons, where he is liable to flogging and such other severe treatment; while the latter are compelled by that mistaken and sordid economy which is prevalent to fetter and impede every measure of real benefit to the soldier by those who are his true friends, from get-rid, by any milder and yet exemplary means, of men who are a disgrace to the service, and a source of constant annoyance to their well-behaved comrades.

COAST GUARD SERVICE. (LETTER XI.)

Sir,—When I take up the Navy List and find there are two Captains, fifty-three Commanders, and three-hundred and fifty Lieutenants, with two Surgeons, employed in the Coast Guard Service, I cannot help feeling the utmost astonishment that my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty should have given over such a number of their officers to the routine of a Board, in no manner conversant with their peculiar genius, their feelings as gentlemen, or energies as officers; and still less competent to appreciate their exertions, and to bring all their powers into full operation for the public weal.

Anything like Naval or Military command is an unnatural position for the Board of Customs to assume, or to have conceded to it; and it is manifest that the requisite qualification for such a command can only be acquired by long habit, and a thorough knowledge of all the peculiarities of the persons to be commanded. What, then, can the Commissioners of Customs know of a profession they have never served in? They have not, I believe, one Naval officer at the Board; and how much less must they know of Naval discipline, or what is essential to it, when all their practices as Commissioners of Customs have been, and still are, such as would subvert all discipline, and bring the officers of a Naval or Military Service into contempt, by divesting them of necessary authority, and by constantly vacillating, as they do, in their various orders and regulations respecting the Service.

But, unhappily for the nation at large, fiction is the deceit, and expediency the stumbling blocks in this service. The late government inferred there would be difficulty in getting the Coast Guard paid by a Parliamentary grant, and the sum necessary for such a purpose is, consequently, taken out of the collection of the Revenue; hence, the fiction, and the miserable expediency to which so many officers are sacrificed. However, reform is now the order of the day; reform in all our institutions is called for, and will be conceded by a King who surely lives in the affections of his people, and the wise and enlightened government we live under. And shall Naval men alone sit quietly under their numberless wrongs and grievances, and not at least make them known? There yet remains, I am convinced, some sympathy in the nation for those men who have never refused to fight their country's battles, nor to bleed and die in her cause; flinging to the winds, for the time, those associations of kindred and of home, that they might rise, like the phœnix, from its ashes, strong and mighty, and grapple with the foe with all their energies of mind and body. We have a Sailor-King, God bless him! let us, then, lay our manifold wrongs before him; at all events, let us sound them loudly and constantly till they reach his ear. Should these letters meet his eye, and he condescends to read them, I am sure he will graciously deign to cause some inquiry to be made respecting this service; and should he, Sir, will not his generous and royal heart be grieved to find, that the profession he chose for himself, as one high, honourable, and dignified, is now made to bend to an inferior service; that the officers of it are made to succumb to officers of Customs, and that naval rank and naval uniform are rendered ridiculous, indeed disreputable, By those entitled to them being associated on an equal footing with the lowest of the low in society, and prostituted to purposes which bring them into utter contempt. I may be told that the Coast Guard Service existed when His Majesty was Lord High Admiral; but we have an undaunted guarantee by what he did do, of what would have been done for the honour and benefit of the Navy generally had more time been allowed him, and there is, therefore, no doubt he would have reorganised this service.

I have now to go back to the control of the service in its details. I admit the Commissioners of Customs have the assistance of the Comptroller General, who is a Naval captain, and of his deputy, who is a Commander in the Navy, and having so frequently been obliged to speak of Captain Bowles personally, I must express my conviction, and it is, I believe, that of almost every officer in the service, that the few ameliorations which have been introduced into it, have been mainly effected by the instrumentality of that officer. It must be borne in mind, too, that he, himself, is also mixed up in the confusion of the service, and relatively speaking, is thereby placed as much out of his proper station, as any other person in it. In fact, he is scarcely more or less than a subordinate officer under the Commissioners of Customs, and his utmost power, it would appear, extends only to offering or submitting recommendations as to the regulations of the service which are, or are not, adopted at the discretion of the aforesaid Commissioners; a pretty position for an officer of upwards of twenty-nine years standing as a Post-Captain in the Royal Navy!

These Commissioners may be compared to children in leading-strings; they must be guided in all transactions by others, and seldom or never give a decision without a number of references to the subordinate offices; and as these references often clash, and have to be gone into again and again, you may conceive the delay which necessarily arises out of them, to the prejudice of an active service like the Coast Guard. It is not unfrequently the case that the original recommendation of the Comptroller-General is so contravened by other persons who know nothing of the bearings of it, as regards discipline or good order, that the Board adopt some other on their suggestion, or so mutilate the first by mutilations as to render it of no effect.

These cautions are necessary and proper, no doubt, as respects matters of revenue. They are, also, the system and plan of the Board, and cannot be dispensed with, and for this cogent reason, because it is wedded to them. But such an uncertain and tardy process can never answer in a service requiring promptness of decision and quickness of action, nor can any such service be properly conducted by an intermediate power, having no fixed and decided authority, but dependent upon the will and pleasure of a Board which does nothing of itself, and is not identified in any manner with the feelings and interests of the parties it controuls, but rather inimical than otherwise to them, as forming an extraneous branch of the service of Customs not immediately within its proper sphere of action, and one which it does not perfectly understand.

Out of such a system what can be expected to arise? Nothing, of course, but that confusion which has emanated from it, and which I have endeavoured, imperfectly it may be, to explain. Some abler pen will, I hope, fill up such interstices as I may have left in the narrative history I have attempted.

Having so far shown the working of the machinery, it must be seen, I think, that the Coast Guard office is rather an impediment on the operations of the service than anything else, a mere source of additional delay, and the Comptroller-General little better than an upper clerk, for it is most obvious he is quite as subject to be contravened and contradicted in his plans; hence he can but little protect the rights of those nominally under his controul, nor can he, of himself, extend one act of grace to them.

To delegate a power to any man, and more especially to a naval officer, who, like his brother of the sister service, is probably more tenacious of that self-consequence which should attach to him in his situation than most other individuals in society, and then to render his authority ridiculous by petty interferences, and by unnecessarily—indeed, improperly—thwarting him in any of his plans, thereby seeming to imply a distrust of his capacity, is at once to sap his zeal, and to make him careless of, and indifferent to, his duties. This, however, appears to be the broad principle upon which the Commissioners of Customs act towards the Coast Guard officers generally.

The Comptroller-General is constantly called out of London on his inspections and other duties, and his deputy is, necessarily, also occasionally away, and then, Sir, clerks are found competent to give orders respecting the service, and to forward recommendations to the Board of Customs, and, for aught that can be discovered to the contrary, answer all the purposes with the Board of the Comptroller-General and his deputy; but they likewise appear to be off at times, we presume leaving their letter-boxes on their desks to replenish during their absence, for it does not unfrequently occur that applications of the greatest importance, such as really affect the operations of the service, remain unanswered and unattended to for weeks by the Coast Guard Office, and then, when the applicant begins to despair of any reply, he finds the Collector of Customs at the port has orders in respect of it direct from the Commissioners of Customs, without any reference to the Coast Guard Office; then, after another tedious delay, down comes orders from this office when the matter of the application is very probably completed and done with. Such are the cross purposes of this service, and such is the way it is conducted. It is also absurd to see to what a length the reference system is practised in the Coast Guard Office, as it appears none will take the trouble to turn to papers already in the office; thus creating an unnecessary correspondence, and clearly establishing the fact that little or nothing is known of what orders are already given, and of the details of the service which the office was established to controul.

Naval Club, 6th April, 1836. NUMA.

[We hope to give the twelfth and last letter next week, and either then, or in the following number, to review the whole of the facts brought forward. The subject has attracted the attention of several Members of Parliament, and unless an immediate change takes place, it will be difficult to find any Naval officer of character to accept employment in this degraded service. We noticed last week the futile attempts to discover the author of these admirable epistles, and the endeavours to suppress the facts he has exposed; but we assure Numa that his able, temperate, and loyal letters have given satisfaction to his brother officers, and that should his name transpire through any imprudent friend, he need not fear any evil result. The Service, and every right-minded man in the government must be with him.—Ed.]

THE BARONET'S BADGE.

Sir,—The gratitude of the members of our "Order" is justly due to you for the kind notice you have taken of our claims. Is it not, then, most unjust that gallant officers, at times, and anonymous scribblers, more frequently, should through the agency of the press, be perpetually misrepresenting, and persecuting us? What rights do we seek to usurp? Have we not, over and over again, declared that we sought neither stars nor crosses? and that these, as badges of honour and glory, we were content to leave to those whose gallant exploits had won them? Do we not count, in our own ranks, many gallant officers of the Army and Navy decorated with those very insignia we are falsely accused of coveting, and whose signatures are appended to our petitions? a convincing proof, by the way, they have neither folly nor impropriety in them.

We sought only permission to wear the badge assigned to our ancestors by the Royal founder of our honours, in the same manner as was granted to the Baronets of Scotland by his son and successor, their martyred Sovereign of the House of Stuart. Surely it can with no justice be pretended that a badge like this, symbolical merely of our "Order," (not a reward of merit,) can in any degree infringe upon those bestowed by the Sovereign for personal services. Our Order comprises a body neither few in number nor otherwise insignificant; next in degree to the Peerage, the sixth of dignity hereditary in the realm, and (the Garter excepted) ranking above all Knights whatever. While Baronets were fewer in number, and no other Orders of Knighthood existed, the absence of personal decoration was little felt; but now that, of late years, these have been so profusely extended, it is surely not too much to ask that ours too should not be thrown into the shade. It is, indeed, Sir, distressing to us to find such unworthy jealousies entertained towards us by those from whom we should have expected better things. None can be more modest in their demands, nor less envious of the rights of others; and if the nobility rightly understood their own interests, they would perceive that whatever enhances the dignity of our Order, standing as a barrier between themselves and the people must, à fortiori, support and strengthen their own position.

By giving a place to these lines, at your earliest convenience, you will confer an additional favour upon

AN UNDER BARONET.

BOYS FOR THE NAVAL SERVICE.

Sir,—The Lords of the Admiralty having thought proper to employ a certain number of boys in his Majesty's Navy, the "workhouses" and the "jobbers" about the different maritime ports availed themselves of the opportunity, and I believe the stipulated number soon entered. Now, Sir, I cannot but imagine their Lordships intended the indulgence to extend to our public Naval Institutions, therefore, I cannot ascertain by what misadventure the "lower section" at Greenwich has been overlooked, where, I am credibly informed, there are many intelligent lads fit for the service, unless their position may be considered different from the starving urchins who have been housed, clothed, and fed, but are liable to be turned "adrift" when the object is answered, whereas the Greenwich boys must have been apprenticed, and consequently taken care of, till the expiration of their indentures. This is a stretch of economy which ought not to have been tolerated, as they would eventually have been "able seamen," &c. ready for any vessel in commission wanting hands. I am the more confirmed in the opinion thus formed, as numerous warrant officers have applied for such provision for their children, and have not met, as they conceive, that attention their services merit. I can only attribute this to the reason I have assigned, not to any neglect of their Lordships, of the well entitled claims of those who applied, still it leads to unpleasant reflections, which, by an explanation through your columns, may allay feelings not strictly consonant with the well-being of the Service.

VEXATIOUS CUSTOM HOUSE DUTIES.

Sir,—Being informed among the East India Commanders that the Naval and Military Gazette is also the East India and Colonial Chronicle, I beg you will oblige me by publishing, in your useful paper a broker's bill of fees and charges upon a small quantity of tamarinds entered in the Custom House at this port, as presents, brought home from the Mauritius, for my wife and family. The value of the tamarinds was not more than 2*l.*, yet I had to pay the exorbitant sum of 1*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* before I could again call them my own. Should the East India and Colonial Chronicle open the eyes of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to these vexatious charges made upon a trifling new year's, to please his affectionate wife or child, I am confident he would remove this galling inconvenience (I had almost said imposition) which causes many an honest Master, Mate, or seaman to smuggle their trifles on shore, thereby defrauding the revenue, and tempting the broker. It was only the other day I heard a sailor say he would be d—d if he would pay the same for clearing a host of sweetmeats for his Poll he a merchant pays for a hogshead of sugar.

J. Hotson, No. 3, Nog's-head-court, Gracechurch-street. Received for J. Hotson, (signed) R. B., March, 1836.

[As the duty on tamarinds imported from a British Possession is only one penny per lb., presuming the quantity in dispute to be above 1 cwt., the broker's charges appear to be the matter to be complained of: seventeen shilling is too much for the dock dues, commission, cartage, &c. of three parcels of that weight. We cannot perceive how it would be possible to abate the duty on articles intended for presents, because it would lead to endless impositions; and in this case the duty appears to be very small (only a shilling upon a dozen pounds), and therefore scarcely to be found fault with. We admit that these exactions are harassing; but still, if a revenue is to be raised by Custom dues, they must be submitted to. What appears to require redress in the present instance is the charge of the broker. We shall be glad to assist our new correspondent in some matter of more importance; many evils are in existence which require exposure and redress.—Ed.]

TRISTRAM'S LAST LETTER ON A RESERVED HALF-PAY LIST FOR THE ROYAL NAVY.

Sir,—My late letters were penned in a cheerful mode to amuse the mind after its intense occupation in a long speech at the bar of the House of Commons, on the wrongs of the Navy, which speech, by-the bye, I am informed, has made so great an impression on the hearts of my countrymen, that I am confident, that if a proportion of each class of Commissioned Officers of the Navy were to petition that generous branch of the legislature for the annual grant of 70,000*l.*, it would be carried nem. con., for the benevolent purpose of ameliorating the hard condition of the sea officer, his widow, and his child. I must now alter my tone and prepare some very pretty words and delicate sentences, to converse with that man of sensibility, "Perspicuous," who published his sensitive Epistle in your No. 163, appealing to my feelings upon the hardness of heart in my proposition, that Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants who had not been employed for 20 years, should be removed from the Half-pay List to a "Reserved Half-pay List." "Perspicuous," like Lapit, and the Logical Master, has committee a great quid pro quo, by trusting to his memory; for if he had composed his Epistle, with my plan of a "Reserved Half-pay List" by his side, he would have no occasion to be so alarmed, or to touch the chord of the Sympathetic. Let us see what this hard-hearted Tristram wrote upon the said subject, "That from the several Half-pay Lists, there should be selected, to form a 'Reserved Half-pay List,' all the inert; and the incompetent to fill their situations from a deficiency of professional skill, of which, it is supposed, there are 500 Lieutenants, averaging 40 years of age, who have not been for these last 20 years employed as such in the Navy, or even in any capacity at sea, since the date of their commission." By this extract it is obvious, I do not propose, nor hint at proposing, nor do I wish to propose, that Captains and Commanders, who have been unemployed for 20 years, should be placed upon the "Reserved Half-pay List," because they must be competent to perform their every duty, when fortunately called into command, having served at sea, perhaps, several years, as Lieutenants, or one or more years as Commanders; but I solely confirm my proposition, to exclude from the active list, all those Lieutenants who have not been at sea for 20 years from the date of their commissions, and who must be incompetent to perform their important duties, from not having practised those of an officer of the watch. God forbid, that a British Man of War, with all her wealth in arms, life, and property, should be resigned to the charge of these untaught and unskilful officers!!! Let us suppose that the greater number of these 500 Lieutenants is to be found on the Navy List, in the years 1814-15, and 1816; those of 1814 will be at least 7 years before they can expect an increase their Half-pay; those in Feb., 1815, 12 to 20 years; those in March, 20 to 25 years; the remainder, in 1816, 20 years; at least, there being 1063 between the last on the list, and the first in 1815; so that the greater number of these Lieutenants, now averaging 45 years of age, will, in all probability, be called in their long home before they can enjoy an increase of Half-pay. Where then is the satisfaction to these officers, if they are placed on a "Reserved Half-pay List" for life, with their present Half-pay for services, and their utmost pretensions upwards to "flowing sheets." The other officers of each grade, will rionaly disqualified, as I have, although facetiously, yet truly particularised, have no right to expect to remain on the Active List, which can be of no benefit to themselves, but a great injury to the active and the zealous. Why have the "Royal Marines" a Reserved Half-pay List? because those on the Active List are promoted by seniority, and were the undeserving and the unqualified to remain on their Active List, they would, consequently, in turn, be promoted before the deserving and the qualified. Why then do I solicitously urge upon the consideration of the Admiralty, the indispensable and urgent necessity of a "Reserved Half-pay List" for the Royal Navy? Because the Naval Officers increase their Half-pay by seniority; if, therefore, the variously unqualified are suffered to remain on the active Lists, to increase their unearned Half-pay, it will be, as it has been, the greatest injustice, in every sense, to the active officers, wholly devoted to their profession. A petition should be presented to the Admiralty, praying the removal of those officers' names to a "Reserved Half-pay List," justice, reason, fairness, policy,—each demand the expulsion of the "drones from the hive;" the disgraced from the honoured; the defaulter from the honest man; the emigrant from the patriot; the worthless from the valuable; the undeserving from the meritorious; the "mauvais sujets" from gentlemen;

> The knight of the hand-cuffs*, et "d'Industrie,"
> From the knight d'honneur et de Chevalerie†!!!

My object is to realise a general good, without creating an individual harm. The sensitive Epistle, of the man of sensibility has, therefore, made as much impression on my unfeeling heart, as bad weather has upon the heart of a mile stone.

Let my brother-sailors disguise the fact as they please, yet it must be known to the whole world, that the Royal Navy has a considerably greater proportion of objectionable characters than the army, because Military Officers can, at their own free will, serve their interest or pleasure, by selling out; or are obligated to sell out, if their conduct merit reproach or degradation; whereas, in the Navy, no such indulgence is granted to the discontented or the luke warm, or loop-hole made, through which the unqualified or the blemished may creep, "sans tambour ou trompette," but all must remain on the respective Naval Half-pay Lists, a heterogeneous mass, a motley group in "sweet disorder," "the odd and the even," the good and the bad, alike entitled to receive, by seniority, an increase of Half-pay!!! Before the country can do justice to the meritorious portion of the Navy, or the Navy benefit itself, "a Reserved Half-pay List" must first be formed for the objectionable and the variously unqualified; after which, a "Retired List" for the veterans in service and experience, when the active and the devoted will then increase their Half-pay within a reasonable period. As the Lists are now composed, the Post Captain of 1836 will be 30 years; the Commander, 35 years; the Lieutenant, 60 years; before either can expect to increase his Half-pay!!! My good fellow, Mr. Editor, I was thinking very seriously for the salvation of Tristram's soul, in case there should be a majority on the "Reserved Half-pay Lists," for should his plan be sanctioned by the King in Council before next Christmas Day, how those officers on the "Active Lists" will pray, how those on the "Reserved Lists" will not pray, for thy friend, Tristram.

THE INQUIRY INTO THE CAUSE OF THE I CREASED NUMBER OF SHIPWRECKS.

Sir,—The Member for Sheffield's motion, relative to frequency of shipwrecks, and on which that gentleman pects to be so fortunate as to obtain "a Select Committe causes much excitation. I beg leave to call your attenti to a fact within my own knowledge which will clearly es blish the absolute necessity of such inquiry, and give so weight to my ideas through your impartial and influen columns. At the breaking out of the war in 1803, the F in the Mediterranean were entirely without Midshipm and on board the Triumph Quarter-Masters were do their duty. A ship commanded by a Mr. H—— in Smyrna trade was captured by a French privateer carried into Toulon. This Mr. H——, and three oth (whilst being conveyed into the interior with many m unfortunates,) made their escape, bivouacking during day in the woods, subsisting on grapes and wild fruit, p suing their route for the coast by night, in which they s ceeded, and found a small boat hauled up on the be with oars in her, which they launched before the break the more, and shaped their course for the English fleet, were all that day and night rowing hard to reach it, w they were picked up by the Triumph 74; the three m were sent on board the Admiral's (Sir Richard Bick ton's) ship, Mr. H—— remaining in the Triumph; t person, though Captain, and part owner of the trader, co neither read or write, and his Chief Mate was in the sa predicament, therefore, all was trusted to the Second Ma This you will allow is a pretty specimen, of a vessel li to be taken up as a transport, in which to risk the lives troops or convicts. Mr. H—— was taught reading, writi and navigation by the schoolmaster of the Triumph, af wards passed for a Lieut., appointed to the Hibernia 1 from thence into the Courageux 74, where he was tried a Court-Martial and broke for incapability. Now, Sir submit, would it not be advisable for the Underwriters Lloyd's for their own advantage, never to grant an in rance upon vessels where the Captains (although owne and Mates have not passed some examination before Trinity or other competent board established for that p pose. At the same time I would suggest that Governm should adopt the resolution of never taking up a trans until they ascertained, by such passing certificate, that Master and Mates were duly qualified. I am well warra in my proposition by the lamentable instances which h occurred, of the destruction of life and property, thro brutal ignorance and inebriety. And the vessels themse should be surveyed by one of H.M.S.'s Naval Surve prior to them being taken up. I will not enter into propriety of the idle men-of-war, now rotting at their m ings, being employed for that purpose, although it wo be the means of providing for many a gallant but p H.P., anxious for sea service; then few, if any, lives property would be lost. I merely throw out these hints the benefit of all parties, and if supported by your aid, s of them, at least, may prove advantageous, and you will obliging one who was once

[We have so often dilated on this subject that we h left ourselves nothing further to add, and it only rema to bring forward such cases in point as the above to exp the system. The necessity we have made apparent those put in command of merchant vessels to undergo examination is generally admitted; but it is one of things which will require considerable trouble to effect the objection of nine-tenths of ship-masters and also own (a class of persons by no means inclined to innovation have to be overcome. We do not despair, however, p ticularly if the Trinity Board could be induced to act.—E

* Duelling in Germany.—You may not unfrequently Germany meet a group of young men, sometimes two tering along the woods, and occasionally at the ta d'hôte, with their faces deeply scarred. These her have been putting courage to the proof with swords; a the rule, they say, is "that it is dishonourable to yi until a cut of an established depth and length lays o the face, generally on the cheek between the ear a eye." Four of those persons, so slashed, sat oppos to us at table last year at Ehrenbreitstein. A few d before we arrived at Baden, a duel took place, which I w astonished at not causing any remark or feeling of ind nation, took place. The principals were, it was sai son of that celebrated warrior and remorseless barbarian B——, and a young Frenchman. They were station at the fixed distance: they approached step by step: t Frenchman fired and missed: the Prussian held h until he walked up to his antagonist, and then plant the muzzle of his pistol to his adversary's forehead, bl his brains into the atmosphere. In the evening it said, that the Marshal's son, who, it would seem, in rits his father's propensity, was at his usual post at gaming table! If this be true, as every one whom spoken to avowed, and which no one denied, a duel, h ever fatal, is a matter not seriously considered at Ba Nothing, it is true, can train the heart to the same ste of stillness as the gaming table.

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1836.

WE must content ourselves this week with referring our readers to the accounts in this paper of the conflict on the 5th at St. Sebastian. Every Englishman, no matter of what party, must be gratified that our countrymen have well maintained, on this occasion, the proud character of the British Soldier for conspicuous bravery and gallant bearing in the field.

The Carlist correspondent of the Morning Herald says—

"The English fought bravely—like lions, whatever the interest of truth may have compelled me to say of them up to the present moment, it is with the greatest satisfaction, and with the pride of an Englishman, that I now publish, they have done honour to Old England!"

The services rendered by Lord John Hay, with his Majesty's steam-vessels Phœnix and Salamander, appear to have been of the utmost importance; the destruction produced by the fire from the former vessel effected a breach in a principal redoubt, which was considered nearly impregnable, and enabled two regiments of the British Legion to enter.

We must, however, confess that we do not see what beneficial results are likely to arise from this battle; or, indeed, that any advantages can be expected which may counterbalance the great sacrifice of officers and men. The Carlists on the 7th, four days after the battle, were in possession of Hernarni, although to occupy this position, we believe, General Evans hazarded the action.

IN expressing, as we have done from time to time, the opinions of very many of our able correspondents, officers of high rank and reputation in the Service, on the strict and even-handed justice of assimilating, in every possible way, the rank and emoluments of the officers, of all classes, belonging to the ARMY and NAVY, we have been led to support those well grounded opinions, in the sincere belief that this measure would be attended with infinite benefit to the country at large, by at once putting an end for ever to those invidious feelings which are now so often declared, and which are constantly conveyed to us in the numerous letters that we receive, calling for "Fair Play" in this respect. The object sought being that of raising the Navy to the same standard only as that of their gallant brethren of the land forces, and not, with the most distant desire, to take from our gallant soldiers that which they so deservedly possess; we are fully persuaded, that there is not a liberal-minded man in the Army who would wish to withhold this boon from our brave Naval defenders.

We are aware, however, that it has been argued hitherto by some, that the circumstance of our Military officers having generally to purchase their commissions gives them a claim to a larger allowance of pay and half-pay; but the friends of the Navy maintain that this ought not to have weight, because, as it is asked by them, does not the Ensign, who pays three or four hundred pounds for his commission, at once receive about 100*l.* a-year? And again, where is there a person, that enters the Army, who, having the money at his command, would not gladly lay it out, in order to get a company, or obtain the rank of Field Officer so many years earlier than he could otherwise expect to gain these steps? and where is there one that enters the Navy, who would not, in like manner, were it possible, purchase a Lieutenancy, and also the commissions of Commander and Post-Captain, within nine or ten years, instead of waiting in a cockpit, with but from 25*l.* to 50*l.* a-year twenty years, for even the first of these ranks (as is at this moment the case with many of our old passed Midshipmen, and who, for some years after they entered the Navy, had but 6*l.* a-year), and perhaps never attain the higher grades within forty years, if at all? Besides, it must be recollected, the Navy say, that the Military officer, who buys his different commissions, is at liberty to sell them again at a future period; and, further, that the pay which he receives, whilst he continues to hold them, must be considered, in most cases, as fair interest for the money he has thus employed, independently of the honour and the opportunities of distinguishing himself, which he has acquired by rising thus early to the higher grades. But, even allowing that the argument herein referred to, about the purchase of commissions, may hold good in some few instances of cavalry regiments, it cannot, it must be admitted by all, possibly be made to apply to the Artillery, to the Engineers, or to the Marines, in neither of which corps are commissions ever purchased, and yet the officers in each have a considerable higher rate of pay and half-pay than those of corresponding ranks in the Naval Service.

As regards the average degree of advancement of the officers of the Army and Navy, the advantage, it has been shown us, is decidedly in favour of the former; for, although the Lieutenant-Colonels have, in consequence of the long peace, been twenty-two years in this rank, yet, it must be borne in mind, that this is an unprecedented long period; and, further, that though the Post-Captains, who obtained the corresponding rank in the same year (1814), did acquire the nominal rank of Colonel three years afterwards, yet that they gained nothing by this brevet grade; on the contrary, they have, during the whole of these twenty-two years, been in the receipt of less half-pay than the Lieutenant-Colonels of the Army, and still are so! This is an anomaly which but few would believe who are unacquainted with the regulations of the two Services, but such is the fact. The SEA full Colonel of even twenty-one years' rank as such, has at this moment but ten shillings and sixpence per day, whilst the LAND Lieutenant-Colonel has eleven shillings, and even a greater disparity exists in the other grades.

Some of our Naval correspondents have sent to us also a scale of the comparative rates of promotions in the two Services, and which, in justice to them and their brother officers, we think it right to give a few examples of.

First, it is stated that the fifty senior Post-Captains on the list have held this rank thirty-four years, and that consequently they have held that of full Colonel thirty-one years, and the majority of these fifty have held that of Field Officer (Commanders ranking with Majors) thirty-eight years, and some as much as forty-one years; and that 480 out of the 757 Post-Captains (namely, those from 7th January, 1802, to 7th December, 181 have held the rank of full Colonel from thirty-o to seventeen and a half years, and the whole these have held the comporative rank of Fie Officer from twenty-five to forty-one years, a have been in the Navy from about forty to six years; whilst, in the ARMY, the full Colonels the year 1821 only were advanced to the rank Major-General six years ago, that is to say, in t year 1830, thus being but nine years in this grad whilst, as we have just observed, the Naval Ca tains have been thirty-one. Moreover, the Colonels, who have obtained the rank of Majo General in 1830, were Lieutenant-Colonels of t year 1811 only; indeed, a case has been adduce where a Lieutenant-Colonel of 1812 became Major-General even in 1825, and which gallan officer, we understand, only entered the Army 1806 or 1807 as a Cornet of Dragoons.

In the late war, the average period of office holding the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel has be shown, by Parliamentary returns, to have be from five to eight years, and that of full Colon about the same. In many instances, however, has been considerably less. The late Earl Chatham, for example, only obtained the rank Colonel in October, 1793, and he was advanced that of Major-General in February, 1795, th being but just sixteen months a full Colonel. We member often to have heard an old Admiral sta that when he commanded a frigate, about the ye 1792 or 1793 we think it was, he had once as guest on board a young nobleman, then an Ensi and that many years before he got his flag t same young Ensign was a General Officer! T names of the parties are known to us, and the fore we are assured of the fact, and we are t that this is by no means a solitary instance of incredible rapid advance of the Military profe sion over the Naval one.

Since the present long peace the rank of Colo has been held about ten or eleven years, viz. Colonels of the year 1814 were promoted to Major-Generals in 1825, and the Colonels of t years 1819 and 1821 were advanced to Maj Generals in 1830, the former being Lieutena Colonels of about the year 1808, and the lat Lieutenant-Colonels of 1809, 1810, and 1811, a very many, if not the most of whom, it is stated us, entered the Army but about ten or twel years before, namely, between 1797 and 1800.

It is not the higher rank of the Naval Serv that alone complain of this marked disparity promotions and emoluments, but the old Lieut ants and Commanders with like reason feel that th too have not had the same consideration sho towards them that has been evinced towards th gallant associates in arms of the sister servi They say, and say truly, that whilst the Milit Officers of corresponding ranks rise progressiv to superior grades, they, the Naval Officers of ranks, remain for ever stationary; thus, the Li tenant of the year 1796, just forty long years ago still but a Lieutenant, with seven shillings a-d being only two shillings more than the youth ceives who got this rank but yesterday; and Commander of even the year 1787, nearly f years' standing, has still only this rank, with half-pay of ten shillings per day, being but eight pence a-day more than the officer who recei his Commander's commission twenty-four ho ago.

Reflecting upon these painful facts, the NAVY naturally ask "WHY THIS INFERIORITY! Have we not fought our country's battles as bravely and as faithfully as our gallant Military brethren?" and "Is there any reason, then, why we should not alike be considered and alike rewarded?"

The British nation will, we are positive, with one accord respond to these queries with the warm declaration, that its Navy most richly deserve the boon that is asked, and will, with heart and hand, come forward in support of so just and so reasonably grounded a claim.

Our Gracious Monarch, himself a gallant sailor, we are convinced only requires that the statements, which we have now briefly given, and which are known us to be irrefutable, should be laid fully and clearly before him, by his present liberal-minded advisers, to ensure the immediate amendment of the existing regulations herein complained of, and that, thenceforward, the two distinguished professions should be placed SIDE by SIDE in every possible form and shape: and, as we have again and again observed, the object sought by our Naval men being only to be raised equal to their Military brethren, and not to take from these, their brave companions in arms, aught that they now so rightly and so deservedly possess; we are confident, that there is not a gallant soldier in the Army but will hail, with infinite satisfaction, the advancement of his sailor-friend to share with him precisely all the advantages which he himself enjoys, as he has, in countless fights, shared with him in adding to his country's glory.

WITH every feeling of respect and esteem for the private, as well as professional, character of Sir James Cockburn, we cannot conceal the satisfaction which we partake of at this moment, in having it in our power to announce, that henceforward the Royal Marines are to be commanded in CHIEF by the senior officer of this distinguished corps; the situation of INSPECTOR-GENERAL being about to be discontinued.

We have many times stated that the objection to Sir James Cockburn's appointment arose, not on account of his private character, or even his incapacity for the office of Inspector-General. We believe his character to be held in high estimation, and that he has satisfactorily performed the duties of his department. But it was considered insulting to the Royal Marines, to pass over altogether the superior officers of that gallant corps, many of whom are quite equal to the duty, and to select a gentleman who had actually retired from the Army for many years, and apparently resigned all connexion with a Military life, and invest him with high rank for the special occasion.

It now appears that the situation itself is dispensible, and that the duties of periodical inspection can be performed during the visit of the Deputy Adjutant-General to the garrisons wherein the several divisions of Marines are stationed; but should any inconvenience arise from this arrangement, making it necessary to restore the appointment, we are certain it will be conferred upon an officer of that distinguished corps.

Our columns have unceasingly maintained the strict justice and propriety of this arrangement; hence, we naturally rejoice to find that this long-desired measure is now to be carried into effect; but whilst expressing the gratification we feel at this wise determination of the Board of Admiralty, we with equal sincerity hope that some other acceptable appointment may speedily be bestowed on the gallant officer who, up to this period, has filled that of Inspector-General of the Marines.

REFERRING to the observations we have recently made on the system pursued towards the exiled British Army in India, we will now endeavour to suggest a remedy for the existing evil; indeed, having felt the pulse, and ascertained the disease, we may fairly be required to prescribe for its cure.

We can hardly expect to accomplish a less tardy relief of the regiments now in India by sending out three or four regiments direct from England. Indeed there are only two corps which seem available for that purpose, as one must be reserved for the Convict Guards to New South Wales. The 18th, 33rd, and 35th might with justice be ordered abroad this season; the 18th and 35th direct to India, and the 33rd by detachments to New South Wales. Or, as the 33rd and 35th were last from the West Indies, and the 82nd returned from one of the best stations we have, the Mauritius, perhaps it would be more equitable that it should go to India instead of the 33rd. The 35th must share in the hardship of the present system, and in doing so it will only suffer as others have done before it. The following table proves that for 1837-8 there is but one regiment available for foreign service, the 46th, and that corps has last returned from India:—

Infantry Regiments now in the United Kingdom, as next for Foreign Service.

| Regiments. | Year of Return of Head-quarters from Abroad. | Returned Home from what Station Abroad. | How many years in United Kingdom. | When available for relief of other Regts. now Abroad. |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 18th | 1832 | Mediterranean | 4 | In 1836-7. |
| 33rd | 1832 | West Indies | 4 | do. |
| 35th | 1832 | West Indies | 4 | do. |
| 82nd | 1832 | Mauritius | 4 | do. |
| 46th | 1831 | India | 3 | In 1837-8. |
| 12th | 1831 | Mediterranean | 2 | In 1838-9. |
| 23rd | 1834 | Mediterranean | 2 | do. |
| 51st | 1834 | Mediterranean | 2 | do. |
| 71st | 1834 | Bermuda | 2 | do. |
| 77th | 1834 | West Indies | 2 | do. |
| 93rd | 1834 | West Indies | 2 | do. |
| 9th | 1831 | Mediterranean | 2 | do. |
| 66th | 1831 | India | 1 | In 1839-40. |
| 95th | 1835 | Mediterranean | 1 | do. |
| 96th | 1835 | America | 1 | do. |
| 1st, 1st Batt. | 1836 | West Indies | 0 | In 1840-1. |
| 7th | 1836 | Mediterranean | 0 | do. |
| 25th | 1836 | West Indies | 0 | do. |

By referring back to the table published last week, and from comparing the above, it is quite obvious that the regiments now in India cannot be relieved within even eighteen years, unless the authorities order out to join the head-quarters abroad the following depots of regiments at the Cape, the Mauritius, and Ceylon, viz. the 27th, 29th, 58th, 61st, 72nd, 75th, 78th, 87th, and 90th. There seems nothing peculiar in service or station, at least in the regiments at Ceylon, to cause a different system to be adopted towards them and the regiments serving but a few miles apart on the main land of India. By sending out the depots of the regiments in Ceylon, one regiment might be sent forward to relieve a corps in Madras or Bombay at very little cost. In like manner, by ordering out the depots of regiments at the Cape and the Mauritius, two might be sent on to India, and thus could three regiments be relieved in the course of 1837. We observe by the table for Indian reliefs that there are still three regiments of 1819, and two of 1821, fully entitled to return to their native land, unless eighteen and sixteen years be considered too short a period for English troops to serve in a burning and baleful climate.

Do not the 45th, 54th, 16th, 6th, and 55th, deserve relief, after eighteen and sixteen years service, in 1837, far more than regiments with four company depots at home, whose head-quarters six companies are enjoying the pure climates of America, the Cape, the Mauritius, and the Mediterranean? The Army was led to hope that fifteen years would be the maximum of Indian service, indeed, that no regiment should serve longer abroad. But this promise cannot, on the present system, be kept, and the Indian Army feels that till some other system be adopted, it is doomed to a service of twenty years abroad at the very least.

We all know that our present Quartermaster-General is a soldier, and that, as far as he is concerned, he would effect the relief of Indian regiments after fifteen years' service; but he is bound down by the depot system, and perplexed by the interest urged in favour of the pet corps, so that he cannot do as he would. To Lord Hill we must look, for he alone can put to rights a system that works evil to a large portion of the Army he commands. Retain the depot system for all corps but those in India, at Ceylon, at the Cape, and the Mauritius; send on the companies now here, and only reserve a skeleton company for each, as at present is the case for regiments in India and in Australasia. It may be questioned how far the depot system is a good one in any case, but we clearly see that it cramps the reliefs from India by keeping in Ceylon, the Cape, and the Mauritius three regiments which could be made available for India.

IT is not long since we took occasion to advert to the valuable assistance derived by the Irish Government from the excellent system of Military Patrolling, so promptly adopted by Major-General Sir Edward Blakeney, under the immediate superintendence of Major Wrottesley, 95th Regiment, in suppressing the disposition to outrage and disturbance, which had so suddenly manifested itself in the county of Tipperary. Tranquillity has scarcely been restored in that quarter, when the county of Longford became the scene of similar violations of the public peace, and the same judicious measures having been put in force to frustrate the designs of the ill-disposed, they have proved equally efficacious on this occasion, the Magistracy having reported to Government the entire cessation of outrage.

Few men are so well, and at the same time favourably, known to the Army at large as Sir Edward Blakeney, whose reputation as a gallant, zealous, and talented soldier in the field, and a first-rate tactitian and disciplinarian, in the Military School (which the Dublin garrison, from its superior local advantages for field manœuvres may not inaptly be styled) so many of our regiments have imbibed the soundest principles of Military order and economy; and it cannot fail to prove a source of much gratification to his numerous friends and admirers, to learn that His Majesty has been pleased to appoint him a Privy Councillor, as also, by virtue of His Majesty's Letters Patent, one of the Lords Justices of Ireland during the temporary absence of His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, whose recommendation of the gallant General to His Majesty for this important post fully attests the confidence placed in his admirable integrity, and well known impartiality.

In the Naval and Military Gazette of the 3rd ltimo, we noticed the report of a Brevet and aval promotion, which was then current, and we gain return tu it, because, as the King's Birthday pproaches, the belief (we fear the hope only) of ich an intention is the more indulged in. Our orthy contemporary, The Hampshire Telegraph, vours us last week with a detailed account of the tended arrangement of a Flag promotion, compreending the sixty Senior Captains, about twenty-ve of whom are eligible, but we believe upon no etter authority than the rumours which wags enerally set afloat for whims or purposes of their vn. In despatching the Honourable Captain ouverie to South America, our contemporary rgot to inform us for what reason Sir Graham lamond, who has held his command for little ore than half the usual term, is tu be recalled!

We have elsewhere given the particulars of the tel between Brigadier-General Evans and Capin Dickson; and, although we shall continue to oid offering an opinion on the matters that have d to it, we cannot resist our satisfaction at the rigadier-General's ready deference to the opinion the Club, of which he is a member, in respect to aptain Dickson's position.

The Thirty-third regulation of the Junior United ervice Club states—

"Any Member wilfully infringing the Rules and egulations of the Club, or the ordinances of the Comittee, or whose conduct in or out of the Club, after his lection, shall, in the opinion of the Committee, be derogatory to his station in society, shall be subject to expulsion under the award of a General Meeting, which it shall be the duty of the Committee to expressly convene, for the purpose of investigating the charges brought against such Member: the opinion of such Meeting to be obtained by ballot," &c.

The Committee having, with reference to the title, decided that Captain Dickson's character and conduct were not affected by the affair with Major Long, the Brigadier-General immediately consented to give the satisfaction required.

To the Brigadier-General's statement, given in our last, we have now to add the following postscript.

"I confess, unfeignedly, that it has caused me deep regret to have been provoked to become the means of bringing this matter into notoriety, affecting, as it does, the reputation of a young officer; but I beg to submit to those officers of experience, who may have noticed these reports, how far it was consistent or becoming in a young officer of Captain Dickson's standing to have brought forward such statements as he has thought proper to do, against one of upwards of thirty years service, without adducing a single proof in support of his assertions.

"I have, since the year 1825 commanded four different regiments of the East India Company's service, and I have had a regiment of light dragoons, and a regiment of infantry, of his majesty's service, in a force under my command; I have also had detachments of king's troops under my command, both in garrison and in the field; and I can fearlessly appeal to every officer of the regiments and detachments, as to whether I ever struck or used a soldier ill, or abused or showed any disposition towards harshness in my conduct to officers.

"Having given these explanatory particulars, it now only remains for me to subjoin the account of the proceedings of the Court of Enquiry itself, together with the correspondence I have adverted to; and I shall then be content to leave the entire case to the fair judgment of all who may feel disposed to consider it with due attention.

R. De Lacy Evans,
Brigadier-General, B.A.L.

London, May 6th, 1836."

All the ships lately commissioned are now fast advancing in their equipment, and will probably be assembled in squadron during the present month, it becomes a matter of speculation as to the service for which they are intended. To us this increase appears nothing more than a return to that policy which should always induce the Government of this country to keep employed a respectable Naval force, particularly when we view the position of France and Russia, and the extension which their Navies are progressively undergoing. With a dozen sail of the line available for particular service, to form the van-guard as it were against any contemplated or positive aggression, whilst, in the mean time, we should be developing the whole of our mighty resources,—we might laugh to scorn the naval pretensions of France, but more particularly of Russia, whose force, though high sounding in enumeration, if considered relatively, is by no means imposing, when compared with our own, even were it united instead of being detached at each extremity of that empire. The surest mode of maintaining peace is to be prepared for war; and the best demonstration, in this respect, is to show that a dozen sail of the line can be equipped in the short space we have just witnessed, without any greater exertion than the distribution of a few handbills, and ordering the Coast Guard officers to receive volunteers. It has been matter of astonishment to many, that, considering the period at which the ships were commissioned, so many simultaneously, and scarcely one paid off to form even the nucleus of a new crew, with the advance which has taken place in wages, owing to the great prosperity of commerce, and the necessity for even a greater number of spring ships for the North American and Baltic trades than is usual at this busy season, when so many homeward-bound ships are due too, and all things combined to produce a scarcity of seamen,—it is most gratifying to find that, without the necessity for bounty, levy money, or any unusual inducement, the required number of men has been readily procured; and had not the officers acted so precipitately in entering their crews in the first instance, but attended to our caution in this respect, there would not now be occasion for the only complaint we have heard, namely, that the crews appear too light for working the masts and yards of these heavy ships. A great portion of them are, however, young, and every day will remedy this matter. In the mean time, the prospect of many merchant vessels arriving from abroad in our principal ports, whose crews will be available, now that the great demand for seamen for the spring ships is over, will give a larger choice for selection; besides that several King's ships, whose term of service is expired, are daily expected, the crews of which will nearly all re-enter as soon as they have had their spree on shore.

As soon as the line-of-battle ships are completed, the Pique, Madagascar, and Inconstant will be commissioned, the latter ship will be launched about the middle of June, and Captain Hayes, her constructor, will have the command.

We recently noticed the appointment of Lieutenant Otway to the Comet steam vessel of war. That old and gallant officer, we perceive, has participated in the recent affair under Lord John Hay, and we trust it may lead to his promotion. There is not a more deserving Lieutenant in the Service.

Some time since an intention was reported to exist, of concentrating the whole of the departments connected with the Navy under the Board of Admiralty, by annexing the only remaining excluded branch, namely, the Ordnance, and placing the superintendence of all articles of artillery and stores, denominated under that term, under the control of Naval officers, directly amenable to the authority of the Admiralty. We advocated this laudable invention by every means in our power, and pointed out the various disadvantages which the Navy has suffered by the present arrangement, as well as the benefit which might be reasonably expected when every department connected with that service was placed under the absolute control of its own officers. Although many difficulties presented themselves in a division of the Naval and Military Ordnance, we were prepared to show that they could be overcome, and we have reason to think that but for the interruption caused by the successive and rapid changes of the heads of department, the intention would ere this have been carried into effect. We have heard of late that a comprehensive measure, having the object in view, is likely to come under consideration, and that the design which we have so often advocated, forms part of contemplated arrangements. But few Naval Officers of superior rank are said to exist, whose presumed attainments in the science of gunnery, and what is of equal importance, qualifications for business details, render them competent for presiding over the management of the Naval Ordnance. The lamented Sir Henry Duncan was generally considered the best qualified, having long studied the matter with this view, and moreover filled one of the most arduous offices in the Ordnance department with great ability. The Hon. Capt. George Elliot has also devoted considerable attention to Naval gunnery, and designed several valuable improvements therein, and as he is also well experienced in details of business, a better selection could not, we consider, be made than this officer, to organise and preside over a Naval Ordnance establishment.

Our readers must be aware how long and how ze lously we have laboured on behalf of the Pursers of t Royal Navy; incessantly repeating the various caus which, in times of peace particularly, rendered the Ha pay of this class of officers altogether insufficient f decent maintenance, much less to support the rank gentlemen; neither did we cease in our strong remo strances on their behalf, until we came to the certa knowledge that an arrangement was in progress whi would materially better their condition, although not the extent we wished. We felt, however, that they wou be thankful for the boon bestowed, and thought it unwi to interrupt intentions in their favour, when once ente tained, well knowing the difficulty which exists to indu the authorities to make alterations in established regul tions, particularly when such alterations involve an i crease of expense. It has afforded us no small amus ment, therefore, to find our Port contemporaries takin credit for bringing about the long sought desideratum, the additional shilling a day half-pay, and wholly omi ting mention of our claim on such account. It is grat fying, however, to find, that the Pursers themselv think differently, and we have this week received comm nications from several, offering to convene a meeting their members in order to express their conviction of o exertions in their behalf; to vote their thanks to the Ed tor of this paper for the manner in which he has adv cated their cause, as well as that of the widows a orphans of their deceased brother officers, and to addre this public testimonial to us, in the same manner that deputation of Naval Lieutenants did last week, wi many more assurances of respect and support. Althou these intentions are highly flattering to us, we sincera assure our correspondents that we need no such displ to induce us to proceed in the line we have chalked ou to point out prevailing abuses, with the remedy whe ever it appears feasible, and to expatiate temperate upon the evils until the authorities are made fully awa of their existence. This is a sure, although, in so cases, it may be a slow means, of correcting, if not awe ing away the evil complained of; and we need only point the sensation which our exposure of the Coast Gua system has created, and the admitted necessity for a tot re-organisation of that service, which prevails even in t highest quarters, provided it be continued in connexi with the Admiralty and the Navy, for the truth of wh we have advanced.

The Great Solar Eclipse.—The solar eclipse whi occurs to-morrow will be one of very considerable ma nitude, 11 digits 18 minutes, or nearly the whole of t solar disc will be obscured between the hours of one a five in the afternoon. The obscuration will be so gre that it is supposed the planets Jupiter, Venus, and so of the fixed stars will be visible. This eclipse will visible to North and South America, the Atlantic Ocea Europe, and some parts of Asia and Africa. Shou the larger stars be visible, Jupiter and Venus may found near the meridian, the latter northward of t former. The exact time of the greatest obscuration w be at 18 minutes 57 seconds after three o'clock in t afternoon. In the year 1858 there will be a still great eclipse of the sun, wanting only half a digit to a to obscuration. In 1887 an eclipse will occur wanting on two minutes to a total eclipse. No total eclipse visi in this country will take place till the year 1916, a even then it will be without continuance, as the two di well perfectly coincide.

H.R.H.'s third son will shor go on board the squadron which is destined to cruise the Baltic; after which he will proceed on his intend voyage to the East Indies. On Wednesday Adm. Robert Stopford waited on the Prince of Orange, the purpose of presenting to the Prince's two sons t unanimous request of the Committee of the United S vice Club, that they would do the Club the honour permitting their names to be enrolled as permane honorary members. The Prince has been for seve years an honorary member.

Victimizing.—The Irish constabulary bill has given an pportunity to a fashionable swindler to victimise several f the provincial applicants for situations under it. By eans of an advertisement in Saunders's News Letter, e entered into correspondence with some Johnny Raws, ellah, after much negociation, ended with their paying im from 50*l.* to 60*l.* down, and the like sum on their eceiving their appointments; the money so received he leged was to be divided between certain high function- ies. The gentlemen, whose names he made use of, on earning the circumstances, immediately entered criminal roceedings to be taken, but the fellow has fled, it is upposed, to England; he is, however, well known, and here is no doubt he will be shortly picked up. Singular Outrage on a Picture.—The Committee of he Literary Fund, wishing to pay Sir John Soane a ompliment in acknowledgment of his liberal patronage, sked him to sit for his portrait, to be placed among the emorials of their benefactors which adorn their council hamber. Sir John consented, and M'Clise, the artist, ndertook the task. The picture was completed, framed, nd duly exalted on their walls. Some time after it was bjected to the portrait by some friends of Sir John, that t was a caricature, and Sir John expressed a wish to ave it given up to him, at the same time offering to ave a copy made of his portrait by Sir Thomas Law- ence, to supply its place. Mr. M'Clise, informed of what had occurred, consented to his picture being re- moved to make room for the one which Sir John pro- osed to give, but wished the former to be returned to im. Sir John, however, required that the picture hould be placed unconditionally at his disposal, on pain f his future patronage being lost to the Society. This ave offence to some of the members of the committee; hey considered it an insult, and insisted that the like- ess painted by Mr. M'Clise was a very fine performance. An angry discussion was expected, when on Sunday the members were unexpectedly summoned to meet on Monday, in consequence of the destruction of the por- rait. It appears that Mr. Jerdan went on Saturday ight to the Society's chambers, and, in the absence of he secretary, claimed admission as a member of the ouncil. The use he made of this was to cut the picture with his knife almost to ribbons. He then wrote a note ut ng that he had "destroyed the bone of contention," nd afterwards acknowledged the act, in

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 9th May.—The House went into committee on the Irish Municipal Corporations Bill. On the second clause being read, a debate arose on the amendment moved by Lord Lyndhurst, in the course of which Lord Melbourne, the Marquess of Clanricarde, the Duke of Richmond, the Lord Chancellor, the Marquess of Conyngham, and Lord Brougham supported the original clause; and Lord Ellenborough, the Duke of Wellington, the Earl of Haddington, and the Marquess of Londonderry defended the amendment introduced. On a division, the numbers were—for the Amendment, 107, against it, 53; Majority, 54. Clauses 3 and 10 were then agreed to, and the rest of the clauses, to the 22d, were, upon the motion of Lord Lyndhurst, struck out. On Lord Lyndhurst proposing that the 23d clause should be struck out, the Duke of Richmond objected, as this was the clause by which aldermen and councillors were appointed in certain towns. He then proposed an amendment, to the effect that the large towns should be allowed corporations. On a division, the numbers were—for the Duke of Richmond's Amendment, 45; against it, 98; Majority, 53. The following clauses, to the 37th, were then agreed to without discussion, after which the House adjourned.

Tuesday, 10th May.—The Scotch Entail Bill was read a second time, and ordered to be committed on Monday week.—On the order of the day for the third reading of the Irish Constabulary Force Bill being read, Lord Ellenborough proposed a new form of oath in regard to secret societies, to be taken by constables. The proposal was agreed to; after which the Bill was read a third time and passed.—The House went into a committee on the Church Pluralities Bill. On clause 4 being read, Lord Wynford moved an amendment, to the effect that no spiritual person should hold two benefices who had a cure of souls, where the united value of the two livings exceeded 1,000*l.* a year. The House divided—contents, 29; non-contents, 7; majority against the amendment, 22. The remaining clauses were agreed to.

Friday, 13th May.—The Duke of Leinster presented a petition from the Mayor and citizens of Dublin in favour of the poor laws. The Noble Duke, although he did not go the full length with the petitioners, still thought that some system should be introduced to relieve the destitute poor. The Registration of Aliens' Bill was read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 9th May.—On the order of the day for the second reading of the Factory Bill being read, Mr. J. Thompson entered into some explanation of the measure. The object of the Bill was to place the law regarding factories in the same situation as that in which it stood previously to 1st March. By the present law, children under the age of thirteen years were prohibited from working in factories for more than eight hours per day, and the object of this Bill was to allow children between the ages of twelve and thirteen to work, if they were so inclined, for twelve hours per day. Lord Ashley said that the existing law had not had a fair chance, and complained that, within nine days of its coming into operation, the Government should come down with a project for its amendment. He moved that the Bill be read that day six months. Mr. Poulter seconded the amendment. After a long debate, in the course of which Mr. Potter, Sir R. Peel, and other Members supported the Bill, and Mr. Fielden, Lord F. Egerton, and Mr. Goulburn opposed it; the House divided, when the Bill was carried by a majority of 2, the numbers being—for the amendment, 176; against it, 178.

Tuesday, 10th May.—Mr. O'Connell moved for leave to bring in a Bill to regulate the Dublin Steam Packet Company, notwithstanding that the orders had not been complied with. Mr. R. Plunket seconded the motion. Sir M. S. Stewart and Mr. M. Philips opposed the motion. Lord F. Egerton thought that the introduction of capital into Ireland ought to be encouraged, and with that feeling he would give the motion his support. Sir H. Parnell, Dr. Bowring, Sir T. Clerk, and Mr. G. F. Young, severally opposed the motion. Lord Sandon, Lord Clements, and Mr. Roche, supported it. The House then divided—Ayes, 106; Noes, 65; majority for the Bill, 41.—In answer to a question from Mr. G. Berkeley, who said he understood that Government intended to provide accommodation in the House for the ladies by the 1st June next, Lord John Russell stated that he had been correctly informed, and that an estimate of the expense would be laid before the House.—Mr. C. Duncombe moved for a return of a copy of the Parliamentary Surveys of Church Lands preserved in the Library of MSS. at Lambeth. Lord John Russell admitted that the documents were public property, but saw no reason why the House should take possession of them. He therefore moved that the order of the day be read. The House divided—Ayes, 99; Noes, 40; majority for the amendment, 59. The House went into Committee on the Tithes (English) Commutation Bill. Sir E. Knatchbull moved an amendment to the 33rd clause, that instead of the seven years' average of the value of tithes produce, the words should be inserted "having regard to the productive nature and quality of the land." A lengthened discussion ensued; after which the committee divided—Ayes, 51; Noes, 111; majority against the amendment, 61. Two amendments, moved by Mr. Pannor and Mr. Richards, were severally rejected.

Wednesday, 11th May.—The Birmingham, Bristol and Thames Junction Railway Bill, was read a third time and passed.—Mr. Lynch moved the second reading of the Roman Catholic Marriages Bill. The motion was opposed by Dr. Lushington, who moved, as an amendment, that the Bill be read a second time that day six months. On a division, the amendment was rejected by a majority of 9.—The Public Walks Bill, the Public Institutions Bill, and the Poole Corporation Bill, were severally read a second time.—On the second reading of the Poor-laws (Ireland) Bill being read, Lord Monteagle said, that though he permitted the Bills to be read a second time, he disclaimed being thereby held pledged to sanction either of them.—The Civil Courts (Ireland) Bill went through a committee, and the clauses up to the 38th were agreed to.

Thursday, 12th May.—Mr. Clay moved—"That a select committee be appointed to inquire into the operation of the Act of the 7th George IV., c. 46, permitting the establishment of joint-stock banks, and whether it be expedient to make any and what alteration in the provisions of the Act." His object was to induce the House to inquire whether the system of joint-stock banking had acquired the best legal development of which it was susceptible. He took a full review of the rise and progress of the present system of banking, the result which he stated to be to constitute a tremendous power in the monetary system of the country without any precaution being taken to limit its operations. The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER thought there were sufficient grounds for the appointment of the committee, without exciting either alarm or distrust. If the Honourable Member would place the matter in the hands of Government, he would in a few days name such a committee as would insure an impartial inquiry. After some further discussion, in which Messrs. O'Connel, Gisborne, Richards, Pattison, Hume, Cayley, Forster, Handley, Pease, Hawes, P. Thomson, Warburton, and Attwood took a part, the appointment of the committee was agreed to; after which the House divided on an amendment by Mr. Hume, that the committee should be instructed to inquire into the effect of the clause introduced into the charter of the Bank of England, by which country bankers were held to have satisfied their engagements by paying them in Bank of England paper, when the numbers were—against the amendment, 98; in favour of it, 12; majority, 86.

FRIDAY, 13th May.—The Dublin Police Bill was read a third time and passed.—On the motion of Lord J. RUSSELL, the House went into Committee on the Tithes Commutation Bill, and several clauses were agreed to.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence

AUSTRIA.—Vienna, April 25.—After all the reductions that have taken place in the army within the last year, government intends to proceed to an entire disarming, and to reduce the army to 100,000 disposable troops. First, the reserve of the army in Italy is to be dissolved. This army has hitherto consisted of two corps and the reserve, under Count Von Wahnoden, Count Geppert, and the Prince of Bentheim-Steinfort. Besides this, a division of each battalion of Landwehr will be disbanded, and 7,000 horses of the train sold. The artillery in Italy is to be reduced to 35 batteries, and the dissolution of the reserve batteries may be shortly expected. The hôtel hospitals at Cremona, Lodi, Pavia, and Brescia, are, or shortly will be, entirely broken up. All this gives great pleasure, as proving the good understanding between the great Powers, and certainty of the preservation of general peace. It is not doubted that the example of Austria will be followed by most governments, and an end be put to the expensive military establishments, and the heavy burdens which for these six years have oppressed all the continental states.

RUSSIA.—St. Petersburgh, April 2.—The Emperor has ordered that a quarantine shall be established on the arm of the Danube, called the Sulina, that it shall be in two divisions, viz one for pratique, at the end of the island of Peti, and the other stricter quarantine in the island of Georgisewsk. These establishments, which are to serve as a place of refuge for vessels detained by unfavourable winds, or by the strong current of the Danube, and also for those which come for a supply of fresh provisions, are not bound to purify goods, but are only to send them to the lazarettos of Odessa and Ismail. The Busartscheck quarantine barrier at the mouth of the Danube, which cannot be of any further use, shall be abolished. The sum of 2,25[illegible] silver rubles is assigned for the establishment of the Sulina quarantine.

April 25.—The first steam-boat from St. Petersburgh arrived at Cronstadt on the 19th of this month, with passengers. On the same day the Pomona frigate went out of port to take its station as guard-ship at sea. It hoisted its flag on passing the fort of Peter I., and a cannon shot announced the opening of the navigation. On the 8th a flag was hoisted on the Custom House Hall.

Law and Police.

COMMON PLEAS.—The Court, on Monday, gave judgment in favour of Admiral Napier, in the action brought by Mr. Dobie to recover for losses sustained in the seizure of the Lord of the Isles, which was confiscated by order of the Admiral for attempting to break through the blockade established on the coast of Portugal whilst he held the chief command in the service of the Queen. The question turned upon several points, such as whether or not the blockade was effective; or whether, in that case, sufficient notice of it had been given; and whether, under such circumstances, the foreign enlistment act not having been at that time suspended, Admiral Napier, being a subject of the King of this country, could enter the service of a foreign prince, and make war upon his fellow subjects, or seize and confiscate their property. The judgment was generally in favour of the defendant.

ADMIRALTY COURT.—On Saturday the important salvage cause relative to the Victoria came before Sir John Nicholl. The vessel was an American, laden with copper ore and cotton, her cargo being of the admitted value of 20,000*l*. She went on shore on the Larne Sand in Carmarthen Bay, and was assisted off by the crews of the smack Miranthe and the Pearl, in all 21 men. The owners of the Victoria tendered 127*l*. 15*s*. to the salvors which was refused. After hearing all the facts of the case, the Court awarded the salvors 450*l*. for their services, with costs. It is a remarkable fact that, for the last 20 years, the Victoria is the only vessel, except a small coasting vessel, that has either been wrecked or seriously damaged, that has escaped off the Larne Sands. The Victoria was of 500 tons burthen.

SHERIFFS' COURT—Thursday—Proclamation of Outlawry—We give publicity to the following, though with some pain, as it may be the means of giving information to the parties concerned. This morning Mr. Kemp, the sheriffs' officer, made proclamation in open Court, and called upon the following noblemen and gentlemen to surrender themselves to the custody of the Sheriffs of Middlesex, upon pain of being declared outlaws, viz.:—

The Right Hon. William Paget, commonly called Lord William Paget; Edward Thynne, commonly called Lord Edward Thynne; the Rev. John Capel Hanbury Tracy; Charles Gore, commonly called the Hon. Charles Gore; Sir Francis Vincent, Bart.; George Burkett, George Herbert, John Scott, George Giles How, Henry Vetch, W. Byrne, Edward R. Baller, Edward Hull, Robert Abbey, Hugh Andrew Frazer, Henry Leigh Hunt, J. O. Luxford, Nicholas Power, T. Sowerby, and the Rev. William Hamilton Maxwell.

Theatres.

COVENT GARDEN.—Mr Macready's appearance on Wednesday evening, in the character of Macbeth, attracted a very numerous and fashionable audience. His recent rencontre with the Lessee of Drury lane theatre has occasioned an extraordinary sensation in theatrical world. The audience rose en masse on the entrance of their favourite actor, and greeted him with the most tumultuous cheering. On Thursday a new opera, called The Rose of the Alhambra, was produced, and proved very successful. The poetry is from the pen of Captain Pothill, late lessee of Drury lane theatre, and the music by De Pinna. The story is full of romantic interest, but it has been spun out to far too great a length. The music is of a light and pleasing character, but does not present any thing particularly striking or novel. The instrumentation is not always what we could desire, it is occasionally by far too noisy, particularly in the chorusses and bass song given to Morley, there is, however, much to please.

LYCEUM.—A new piece, called Gunpowder Plot; not the Fifth of November, was played at this house for the first time on Monday evening, and we hope, for the credit of the theatre, it will not be repeated after this week: it is beneath criticism. The Man about Town improves upon acquaintance, and A Day well Spent, nightly convulses the audience with laughter. The houses have been excellent during the week.

STRAND.—We had two new pieces at this theatre on Monday evening—a translation from the French by Mr. Elton, entitled Pay, or a Widow's Tears, and an original burletta by Jerrold, called The Man for the Ladies. The first piece is an amusing trifle enough, and proved successful: the entire weight of the piece devolves on Mrs. Nisbett, who sustained the part of the Widow Nethersole, with her accustomed naïveté and humour. The waiting woman found an efficient representative in Miss Daly. The Man for the Ladies was not well received, and the sooner it is withdrawn the better, for it is an ugly affair from beginning to end. There is neither point, humour, nor situation in any one scene in the piece: it is, from first to last, as stupid an affair as we ever witnessed. In the farce of a Dead Shot, the audience were greatly amused by the acting of Mrs. Nisbett, Miss Daly, Mr. Attwood, and Mr. Hammond, and rewarded their exertions by roars of laughter.

DUEL BETWEEN BRIGADIER GENERAL EVANS, C.B., AND CAPT. DICKSON.

CAPTAIN DRAKE'S STATEMENT.

AT about half-past five o'clock on Saturday evening, 7th inst., Mr. Cooke waited on Brig. Gen. Evans at Hake's Hotel, and delivered to him a hostile message from Capt. Dickson, in consequence of a decision of the Committee of the Junior United Service Club as follows:—

"Copy of a resolution passed by the Committee, at a special meeting held on 7th May, 1836:—

"The committee having taken into their mature and deliberate consideration Capt. Dickson's letter of 26th April, and Col. Evans' statement of 5th May, together with all the letters and documents on the subject, are unanimously of opinion, that the conduct of Capt. Dickson throughout the transactions referred to therein has been without stain, and that of an officer and a gentleman.

(A true copy). THOMAS HATCH, Secretary."

Which General Evans had only been made acquainted with a few moments before Mr. Cook's arrival. Gen. Evans replied to Mr. Cooke that he should take into consideration the purport of the message, and send him a reply with as little delay as possible. At seven o'clock the same evening Capt. Drake addressed the following letter to Mr. Cooke:—

"Oriental Club, Saturday, 7 o'clock, P.M.

"SIR,—Having only this moment seen Brigadier-Gen. Evans on the subject of the communication you made to him this evening, and it being impossible under any circumstances to meet your friend to-morrow (being Sunday), I beg to inform you that he defers giving you an answer till to-morrow afternoon. I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant, W. DRAKE, Captain.

"To W. B. Cooke, Esq."

At a quarter to nine the same evening, Capt. Drake delivered in person to Mr. Cooke, at the Junior United Service Club, the following letter:—

"Oriental Club, quarter to 9, P.M., Sat. 7th May, 1836.

"SIR,—I wish much to see you as soon as possible, on the subject of your communication to General Evans. I have called with this note in the event of your absence. You will, however, find me at the Oriental Club till two in the morning. I am, &c. "W. DRAKE.

"W. B. Cooke, Esq."

Mr. Cooke and myself conversed for some time on the disputed question, but came to no satisfactory conclusion. Mr. Cooke, on the part of Capt. Dickson, demanded an apology from Gen. Evans, which I would not admit of. A meeting being inevitable, I proceeded to procure pistols, which, from the lateness of the hour, I had much difficulty in doing. I waited on Mr. Cooke at his lodgings about 11 o'clock at night, when he agreed to meet at my lodgings at 2 o'clock next day (Sunday). The pistols having been sent home next morning, I anticipated my visit, and waited on Mr. Cooke at eleven instead of two (the hour appointed), when I acquainted him that Gen. Evans would grant Capt. Dickson a meeting, and was ready to go to the ground whenever he pleased. At two in the afternoon Mr. Cooke called on me at the Oriental Club, when he again urged an apology from Gen. Evans, with as little success as on the former occasions; it was then agreed he should meet at Wormwood Scrubs by five in the evening. The meeting took place, and the principals being placed, Gen. Evans received Capt. Dickson's fire; when, after an interval of a few seconds, General Evans brought down his pistol, and uncocked it, without having fired. Upon which I addressed myself to Mr. Cooke and said, "I have now to say, that in deference to the opinion of the committee of the Junior United Service Club, I have brought my friend here; and having now paid that deference to the judgment of those gentlemen, I feel it my duty to withdraw Gen. Evans from the ground." Mr. Cooke then said, "I am not satisfied," and again made allusion to an apology. I persisted in withdrawing General Evans without further explanation; and on leaving the ground, he then only informed me of his being wounded; and on his return to his hotel he was attended by Sir Stephen Hammick, who extracted the ball, and left his patient in as comfortable a state as, under such circumstances, could be expected.

Oriental Club, May 8. W. DRAKE.

MR. COOKE'S STATEMENT.

A meeting took place this afternoon at Wormwood Scrubs, between Brig. Gen. Evans, of the British Auxiliary Legion, and Capt. Lothian Dickson, of the British army. At the word "Fire" being given the Brig.-Gen. purposely withheld his fire, and was withdrawn by his second, Capt. Drake, of the Madras army, he having previously given me the following reasons for so doing, reading a paper he held in his hand: "I have now to say, that in deference to the opinion of the committee of the Junior United Service Club, I have brought my friend here; and having now paid that deference to the judgment of those gentlemen, I feel it my duty to withdraw Gen. Evans from the ground." To which determination I distinctly repeated several times that "I was not satisfied," on the part of my friend, Capt. Dickson, without having either an apology from the Brigadier-General, or a further exchange of shots, or words to that effect. However, Capt. Drake persisted in withdrawing his principal, and I therefore conceived my friend Capt. Dickson had not received the satisfaction to which he was entitled. I have subsequently heard, on my return to town, from Capt. Drake, that Brig.-Gen Evans was wounded, which was not known to Capt. Drake previous to the parties leaving the ground. W. B. COOKE.

May 8.

The ball from the pistol fired by Capt. Dickson, grazed the right arm of General Evans, and entered the back below his right shoulder, from which it was extracted by Sir S. Hammick.

A meeting took place early on Friday morning, at Chalk Farm, between Col. Kirby and Capt. Dickson. An exchange of shots took place, but Col. Kirby's pistol having missed fire he demanded a second fire. Capt. Dickson said to his second, "You may give Col. Kirby what he demands, but I shall not fire at him." Col.

rby replied, "Well, that ends it;" and threw his rol on the ground. Capt. Dickson advanced, and ered Col. Kirby his hand, which was refused, and the rties were taken from the ground.

Literary Notices.

e Life of Robert Lord Clive. By Major-General Sir John Malcolm. John Murray.

e only received this valuable work on the eve of going press, and must, therefore, be brief in our notice. It s commenced in consequence of the possession of a dy of unpublished documents, which having been pre-ved among the family records at Walcot, was thrown en to the late Sir John Malcolm, by his friend the rl of Powis. From these documents the gallant eneral was enabled to trace the whole of the eventful reer of this great and extraordinary public individual. he volumes are full of personal anecdote, as well as torical matter of the highest interest, and are credit-le to the literary reputation of the gallant biographer, o lived to complete all but the two last chapters, and hich have been ably supplied by a gentleman who was the confidence of Sir John. We have this week room t for two anecdotes.

" His impatience of control, and wayward and impracti-ble firmness, never forsook him. On one occasion it pears that his conduct to the secretary under whom the ilers were placed on their first arrival, was so inconsistent th the rules of official discipline, that the governor, to om it was reported, commanded him to ask that gentle-n's pardon. With this order he complied rather ungra-ously; but the secretary immediately after, before his itation had time to subside, having invited him to dinner,— No, Sir,' replied Clive, ' the governor did not command me dine with you.'

" He was engaged in a duel with an officer, to whom he d lost some money at cards, but who, with his companion, s clearly proved to have played unfairly. Clive was not only loser; but the others were terrified into payment by threats of those who had won their money. This example d no effect on him; he persisted in refusing to pay, and s called out by one of them who deemed himself insulted his conduct. They met without seconds: Clive fired, d missed his antagonist, who immediately came close up him, and held the pistol to his head, desiring him to his life, with which he complied. The next demand was, recant his assertions respecting unfair play. On non-ance with this being refused, his opponent threatened to oot him. ' Fire, and be d—d,' said the dauntless young n; ' I said you cheated; I say so still, and I will never y you.' The astonished officer threw away his pistol ying, Clive was mad. The latter received from his young mpanions many compliments for the spirit he had shown; t he not only declined coming forward against the officer th whom he had fought, but never afterwards spoke of his haviour at the card-table. ' He has given me my life,' he d, ' and though I am resolved on never paying money ich was unfairly won, or again associating with him, I all never do him an injury.'"

In portraying the character of this great man, Sir hn Malcolm observes—

" Lord Clive was one of those extraordinary men who e a character to the period and country in which they e. His name cannot be erased from the history of India, r from that of Britain. Born in the rank of a private ntleman, and launched out early in life into the wide sea Indian adventure, he soon far outstripped all his com-etitors in the race of fortune and fame. He was trained in e best of schools, a state of danger, of suffering, and. tivity. He could not be said to have had any master in e art of war; he was, to adopt the language of the great hatham, ' a heaven-born General;' and it was by the ldness and novelty of his measures, the impetuosity of a onset, and the imperturbable obstinacy of his defence, at he confounded his enemies, and changed the hesitating oops under his command into a band of heroes. He left othing to chance; he foresaw and provided for everything ictory seemed to attend him wherever he turned, and no terprise was too arduous where he was the leader."

The work must be, to our Indian friends, of particular terest.

Day in the Woods: a Connected Series of Tales and Poems. By Thomas Miller, Basket Maker, Author of "Songs of the Sea Nymphs," &c. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THROUGHOUT this volume much original talent is per-ceptible, though it is the production of a "Poor Basket Maker." It appears, that the Editor of "Friendship's Offering" has essayed to drag him from his obscurity, deeming him worthy of a better fate than basket-making; we hope most sincerely that authorship will prove so, though in general we believe it to be but a very pre-carious trade. Thomas Miller, at nine years of age, "was thrust forth to gain a livelihood by the labour of his hands," and when it is considered that the volume has been written "amid the fatigue and exertion consequent upon several hours daily perambulation in the streets of the metropolis, in unsuccessful endeavours to dispose of his baskets, when his spirits were subdued by poverty and disappointment, when even hope had deserted his dwelling, and despair sat brooding by his hearth," every al-lowance should be made for any defects in the composition, but for one defect there are numerous beauties, de-lightful poems, and bright sparks from a superior mind. We recommend the little book most warmly to every one disposed to patronise original genius in apparently a very deserving individual. Though exceedingly pressed for space we cannot resist giving an extract, in the hope that it may induce some to patronise the "Poor Basket Maker."

THE EVENING HYMN.

How many days, with mute adieu,
Have gone down yon untrodden sky!
And still it looks as clear and blue,
As when it first was hung on high.
The rolling sun, the frowning cloud
That drew the lightning in its rear,
The thunder, tramping deep and loud,
Have left no foot-mark there.

The village bells, with silver chime,
Come softened by the distant shore,
Though I have heard them many a time,
They never rung so sweet before.
A silence rests upon the hill,
A listening awe pervades the air,
The very flowers are still, and still,
And bowed as if in prayer.

And in this hushed and breathless close,
O'er earth, and sky, and sea,
That still low voice in silence goes,
Which speaks alone, great God! of Thee.
The whispering leaves, the far-off brook,
The hermit's warble fainter grown,
The hive-bound bee, the lonely rook,—
All these their Maker own.

Now shine the starry hosts of light,
Gazing on earth with golden eyes,
Bright guardians of the blue-browed night!
What are ye in your native skies?
I know not! neither can I know,
Nor on what leader ye attend,
Nor whence ye came, nor whither go,
Nor what your aim or end.

I know they must be holy things,
That form a road so sacred shine,
Where sounds the beat of angel-wings,
And footsteps echo all Divine.
Then mysteries I never sought,
Nor brake my mind to what Science tells,
For, oh! in childhood I was taught,
That God inhabits dwells.

The darkening woods, the lulling leaves,
The grasshopper's last feeble sound,
The flowers just wakened by the breeze,
All hear the stillness more profound.
The twilight takes a deeper shade,
The dusky pathways blacker grow,
And silence reigns in glen and glade,—
All, all is mute below.

And other eyes than ours this hour
Will close upon its calm or day,
And, sinking down the deep abyss,
Will, like the last, be swept away.
Until eternity is passed,
That boundless sea without a shore,
Then without time we ever rest,
And will what time is no more.

Now nature sinks in soft repose,
A dreamy semblance of the grave,
The slow steals on, rises on the rose,
The bright have almost ceased to wave,
The silent sky, the sleeping earth,
Tree, mount on, stream, the humble sod,
All tell from whom they had their birth,
And cry "Behold a God!"

NEW MUSIC.

Da, du Leigst mir in Herzen. a German air, arranged for the Piano-forte, with variations. By Charles W. Glover.

THIS air is known as, "Am I not fondly thine Own;" it is a beautiful melody, and the variations are skilful compositions. The third variation is particularly pleasing, and the allegro finale, brilliant and effective. This piece does Mr. Glover infinite credit.

The Queen's March, arranged for the Harp. By Frederick Chatterton.

THIS is a showy and brilliant piece; the staccato move-ment, page 6, reminds a little of the air in Balfe's Opera of "The Siege of Rochelle." "'Twas in that Garden beautiful." It is a great favourite with the Foot Guards Bands. This will be found a good lesson for the Harpist.

The Appeal, a Ballad; the Poetry by Mrs. B. C. Wilson, the Music by Macdonald Harris.

A STRIKE and pleasing ballad; the poetry also good. Mr. Harris's composition, we predict, will be a standard song with every syren who may desire to make a suc-cessful appeal in matters of music as well as of love.

Ah, Come Mascondere, an air by Rossini, with variations for the Piano-forte. By Mr. Stephen Glover.

THIS air is well preserved throughout; the andante third variation, in four flats, is a bold and spirited work. The fourth variation, and finale, are clever, and written with the skill of a master. This will be found a good lesson in fingering for the amateur; it is a showy piece and not difficult.

My very particular Friend. A Comic Song, by Miss L. H. Sheridan.

THE words and music of this humorous little trifle are both by Miss Sheridan, and in her happiest comic vein. This song will, we are certain, be found in every lady's collection of music.

THE LILY. By Leigh Hunt.

We are blue fair,
The flower of virgin light;
Nature held us in her hand and said,
"Lo! my thoughts of white."

Ever since then, angels
Hold us in their hands;
You may see them where they take
In pictures their sweet stands.

Like the garden's angels
Also do we seem,
And not the less for being crowned
Within a golden dream.

Could you see around us
The enamoured air,
You would think it pale with bliss
To hold a thing so fair.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—CAPITAL, £500,000, With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of £5, each. Deposit, £1. per Share. The remaining £4. to be paid in two instalments, namely, £2. per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro. tem., No. 30, Essex Street, Strand.
Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with the Interest for the time, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by the ordinarily engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, [illegible] themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company well avail itself of the [illegible] to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a general scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, £5. per cent. per annum. And each Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than £5 per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as speedily.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

THE FOREIGN BANKING COMPANY, No. 31, Lombard-street.

Capital, 1,000,000*l.* in Shares of 100*l.* each.
First Instalment, 25 per cent.

BANKERS.—Messrs. Spencer, Attwood, and Co.

The business of this Company will consist in receiving deposits of cash and bills for the purpose of effecting payment through the agency of bankers, in the principal towns of Europe, at all the principal cities and commercial towns abroad.

In making payments and transacting pecuniary business in England, the Foreign Coupons, or bills of exchange, will be presented at the counter of the Company, and the money paid without any charge.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the [illegible] to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies,—

SIR, I am honoured with the king's command to express his Majesty's sense of your politeness in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 9th 1837. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Dewhurst Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHEREAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all old pulmonic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in promoting instant relief to Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fullness, Pain and Oppression after Meals, also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies. Ingestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time. If taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wines it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undermentioned, and 298 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Thomson, Aldred, S. Ashwell, B. Rowley, A. Hubbleton, C. Lawton, D. Davies, Surgeon to Their Majesties, J. Ferrera, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, J. Tyrrell, A. H. Curtis, Apothecary to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DEWHURST WOODHOUSE, Operative Chymist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London bridge, and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

MOST IMPORTANT INFORMATION.
BY HIS MAJESTY'S ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

G. MINTER begs to intimate to the Nobility, Gentry, &c., that he has invented an EASY CHAIR that will produce and elevate, at will, into innumerable variety of positions, without the least trouble or difficulty to the occupier, and there bring no machinery, i.e.h, catch, or spring, it is only for a person sitting in the chair merely to wish for recline or elevate themselves, and the seat and back take any desired inclination, without requiring the least assistance or exertion whatever, owing to the weight on the seat and back acting as a counterbalance to the pressure against the back; the application of a fit adjusting leverage, and the whole to be obtained by Mr. Minter's Letters Patent. G. M. particularly recommends this Invention to Invalids or to those who may have lost the use of their hands or legs, as they are by it enabled to carry their position without requiring the assistance of other persons, from the easily available, simple contrivance for the recumbent position, which is required to be continued in by the patient's case all hours.

The Chairs are made by the best cabinet makers, at his Wholesale, Retail and Upholstery Manufactory, 71, Gerrard-street, Soho. In Minter's method of reclination each is required to be examined in the patient's case all hours.

Merlin, Bath, Bingham, and every other description of Garden Wheel Chairs, most improved by G. Minter, with his elevating reclining backs; and as he is desirous to avoid the delay of bill boards, Spiral Counters, Portable Carriage Chairs, Water Beds, and every article for the comfort of the Invalid.

A MOST IMPORTANT NOTICE

G. Minter having tried the validity of his Patent, both in the Court of Exchequer, before Baron Alderson, and in the Court of King's Bench, before Lord Denman, and Special Juries each time, he will now give a handsome Reward to any person finding out another of any Chair, where the seat and back are so made otherwise, being sold, made, or even in use, that has not the legal stamp in the top of the legs, and the words "Patent, G. Minter, 33, Gerrard-street, Soho," &c.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S BUTTERHAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"SIR, For many years I suffered by Corns; lately I had such a one on my foot, becoming fixed on my left toe, that the frequent bodkins, pains, &c. of cling of them in no way removed me. For [illegible] I could wear boots, and for ten or twelve days and [illegible] Butterham's Corn Solvent, to obtain [illegible] to the Proprietor. After using it few days, I received [illegible] days, nor in the terms, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I considered more in perfect ease, as it was better to lay [illegible] I have [illegible] work after, and [illegible] Having experienced this benefit myself I [illegible] in my own person, and having recommended this Solvent to many [illegible] who have been cured, I [illegible] it [illegible] to [illegible] you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obliged servant,

D. EVANS, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton Grove, Strand,
10th March, 1838."

Another testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the many [illegible] who have [illegible] and [illegible] to substitute for it [illegible] and many [illegible] but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Butterham Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles, at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

HEALTH, BEAUTY, and LONG LIFE.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent illness, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quinine, Extract of Chamomile Flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica.

They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of Stomach and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fullness Sick Head ache, Pain and Oppression after Meals, Habitual Costiveness, Flatulence, Shortness of Breath, Stomach Coughs, Spasms, Worms, and Fits in Children and Grown Persons, and all Disorders incident to the Stomach and Bowels. They are also highly efficacious in the cure of Colds, Agues, Asthmas, Rheumatism, Gout, Jaundice, Dropsy, Gravel, and an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Ladies who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit, who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not curtail mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, several of them highly distinguished Members of the Royal College, who know their value, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramp, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented. Numerous patients, whose cases had been considered hopeless, have been restored to sound health by them. This can be proved by the testimony of thousands, and shown by letters from numerous patients who have benefitted by their unrivalled efficacy. To describe all their excellent properties, and the cures they have performed, would fill volumes, and exceed credibility; in fact there is scarcely any disease to which the human frame is subject that they will not either prevent or cure, and none in which they can possibly do harm.

Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 86, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the Kingdom.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1838."

From WILLIAM HENTSCH, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville-street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been of many months' [illegible] treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "WILLIAM HENTSCH.

TO EPICURES.

ROSSE AND BLACKWELL'S FLORENCE CREAM,

for Dressing Salads, Lobsters, &c. in a Minute.—This delicious Cream is most justly acknowledged the most superior preparation for Salads, Lobsters, and all kinds of Cold Fish, as a Salad after the Parisian manner, which is universally allowed to surpass all others, can be obtained in one minute. To Families and Hotel Keepers it will be found very economical and convenient, as it only requires the addition of Vinegar to obtain a rich and delicious dressing, and immediately fit for use.

ROSSE and BLACKWELL'S Celebrated SOHO SAUCE for Fish, Game, Steaks, Made Dishes, &c.

DINMORE'S ESSENCE OF SHRIMPS will be found far superior to the Essence of Anchovies for every description of boiled and fried fish, being of a more mild, rich, and delicious flavour.

TO EPICURES, &c.

DINMORE'S SHRIMP PASTE, a superior Delicacy to any thing yet offered to the Public, for Breakfast, Sandwiches, &c.

The above to be had of most Sauce Venders throughout the Kingdom, and wholesale of the Proprietors, 11, King-street, Soho.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS,

for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine, Pots, 1s. and 2s. each. The high repute and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an Imposition by labeling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes a delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, ALEX. THORN, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated TALLY HO! SAUCE, for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, Imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use; in Bottles, 2s. and 4s. each, warranted in all climates.

Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 223, High Holborn, also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.—INFALLIBLE HAIR DYE.

—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between the two, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots or discolouring the skin or linen. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and Gentlemen of the turf in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot on the horse any colour required. Sold by the sole Agents, William Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish House Warehouse, 95, Gracechurch-street; Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; and by all the principal Chemists, Perfumers, and Hairdressers, in town and country, in bottles, at 5s., 10s., and 15s. each, having directions for use, with a fac-simile of the signature of Agid Hassan; also that of William Day and Co. All others are counterfeit.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA,

January 25th 1831.

GENTLEMAN,—I regret that I have not earlier acknowledged to you the great benefit which I have derived from the use of your Balm of Columbia, which, in my own case, I have happily found to possess all the virtues you ascribe to it; I at first, and by mere accident, purchased a Bottle from one of your Agents merely as a trial; and until lately, was unaware of its justly famed and great celebrity, or of your being resident, and having a principal establishment in England, otherwise I should have felt pleasure, and a sense of duty to you and the public in making this acknowledgment before. About four years ago, I found my hair rapidly falling off, not occasioned by any bodily illness, and to such an extent was my head really bald that I was compelled to wear a wig; about three afterwards I began to use your Balm, and after the lapse of nine months, and the application of only three 3s. 6d. bottles, I was enabled to leave off the wig, finding my hair quite restored to its pristine strength, which it has retained ever since.

I am, Gentlemen, yours very obliged,

To Messrs. C. & A. OLDRIDGE, BENJAMIN BRIDGER, Balm of Columbia Establishment, 31, Little Newport Street, Wellington Street, Strand, London. Leicester Square.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM causes Whiskers and Eyebrows to grow, prevents the hair from turning grey, and on the first application produces a beautiful curl, frees the hair from scurf, and stops it from falling off. Abundance of certificates from gentlemen of the first respectability are shown by the Proprietors, C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London, where the Balm is sold.—Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.

MINERAL MARMORATUM for FILLING DECAYED TEETH, and INCORROBIBLE ARTIFICIAL TEETH FITTED WITHOUT WIRES or other LIGATURES.

MONSIEUR LE DRAY & CO., Surgeon Dentists, No. 60, Newman-street, Oxford-street, continue to RESTORE DECAYED TEETH with their celebrated MINERAL MARMORATUM, applied without PAIN, HEAT, or PRESSURE, which in a few seconds HARDENS INTO ENAMEL, allaying in one minute the most excruciating PAIN, and rendering the operation of EXTRACTION UNNECESSARY. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, whether arising from neglect, the use of calomel, or disease of the gums. ARTIFICIAL or NATURAL TEETH of SURPASSING BEAUTY, fixed from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect Articulation and Mastication.—Charges as in Paris. At home from 10 till 6.

TO the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public.—Families of distinction and Visitors to the Metropolis at this Season, who frequently experience great difficulty in suiting themselves with FURNISHED or UNFURNISHED HOUSES, owing to the great demand, are respectfully informed every attention will be afforded in the House and Estate Agency Department of HENRY L. COOPER, in obtaining or disposing of the same, or in the Selling, Letting, or Valuing, any description of property in Town or Country.

From the central situations of the Establishments in their respective commanding localities, every facility is rendered to families honouring his house with their instructions, and offering the advantage of a double register usually replete with eligible properties.

The general introduction of PLATE GLASS for Windows, Carriages, Conservatories, Internal Decorations, &c., has induced H. L. C. to annex a Tariff of sizes, adapted to those uses, with Prices exceedingly moderate, but of a quality not to be excelled: also is added an outline of his general business, comprising the Cabinet, Upholstery, and Decorative Departments, in each of which the most careful attention is paid both to quality and cost.

HENRY L. COOPER, Plate Glass and Furniture Warehouses, No. 93, Bishopsgate-street Within, and Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent-street, left hand side.

Among the variety of Articles above referred to, will be found LOOKING GLASSES of every denomination and size, varying from one foot to eighty feet and upwards; plate glass for windows, carriages, &c., which possess great advantages over crown, and when required for exportation, a considerable drawback obtained. Annexed are the Prices of Current Sizes of Plate Glass for Sashes, &c.

Or any sizes containing from 1 feet to 8 feet, at 9s. per foot: thus a plate being 80 inches by 18 inches, contains three feet nine inches superficial measure, and costs £1. 18s. 9d. as per above Tariff. All under three feet superficial at a reduction.

CARVING AND GILDING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

In this department will be found a very elegant and extensive variety of Chimney and Pier Glass Frames, Cornices for Windows, Ornamental Tables and Furniture, and richly mounted Frames in various sizes for Portraits, Paintings, &c. Paintings and Prints mounted, framed, and re-gilt.

PAPER HANGING, AND INTERIOR DECORATIONS

in all its branches, from the most simple to the first style of elegance. A rich variety of new patterns on show.

IN THE UPHOLSTERY ARRANGEMENT,

the greatest attention is paid to unite elegance with economy in character for the drawing-room, boudoir, dining room, library, and bed-chambers, from the most quiet to the most costly styles. In the various articles of cornices, mirrors, damasks, silks, &c. A great variety of the most splendid and novel styles are constantly on view of those qualities which can alone insure permanent satisfaction; the extreme disparity to prices in these articles mainly arises from the inferiority of the fabric.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND BEDSTEAD WORK

manufactured of the most esteemed materials. In the finish of Chairs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the materials used, and the workmanship. It may not be unworthy of remark that a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one half, but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious disappointment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manufacture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of most unsound materials and unsound work, that cannot be detected by the casual observer, can never bear that service and durability so essential. H. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own premises, and has always on hand a large stock of well seasoned materials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest possible rate and of a superior quality.

STEAM and SAILING VESSELS promptly fitted up with CABIN FURNITURE and PASSENGERS' REQUISITES.

SOLID and PORTABLE Furniture, Bedding, Musquito Hangers, &c., for Foreign Climates. Families going abroad will receive every information respecting the articles best adapted for their particular destinations.

Merchants, Captains, and Dealers, supplied with the utmost despatch, on the most liberal terms of the fabric especially made for the first Upholstery Houses, viz. Brussels, Kidderminster, and Venetian; also a few of the much admired Velvet pile carpets, hearth rugs, druggets, baize, floor-cloth, &c.

BEDDING, BLANKETS, &c.

well-seasoned, real Danzic feather; also equally prepared light downy feathers for second and French bed beds, elastic spring, hair, and wool mattresses, coal Witney, fine bath and York blankets; Marseilles quilts, and counterpanes. In the article of bedding, blankets, &c., in which so much important to all, H. L. C. is determined that no trader shall undersell them on better terms.

FUNERALS FURNISHED,

and conducted with the greatest propriety, and with every consistent regard to economy.

Families in the country may rely on the most approved taste by being waited upon at home with patterns, and designs made on the spot, calculated to harmonize with the plans, proportions, and decorations of the rooms; and their orders delivered and fixed in terms forming a very small addition to the first cost, by the system adopted by the country.

With this short summary of the leading articles of his trade, and the very favourable terms on which he undertakes to supply them, HENRY L. COOPER appeals to all classes for a continuance of that flattering preference hitherto afforded his house, 93, Bishopsgate Street Within; Western Branch, 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Regent street.

H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to the Address. Also, that any article will be exchanged should a fair objection arise, thus preventing the Public from imposition.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL,

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose hand would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—It will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although so oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances misnamed Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it, but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff comb, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and 11s pint bottles, with glass stoppers 12s. each.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—

Mr. S. J. VAN BUTCHELL, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, (exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even when the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

32, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, and
No. 16, Ludgate-hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists,

respectfully acquaint their friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 1, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL STOPPING, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly ingenious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS OF TEETH, INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, on NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—ingenious to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE,

introduced by S. HICKSON, 1826, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broths, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 7, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Son, Hewis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., which is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

A GRAND FANCY DRESS BALL
[illegible] the Benefit of the Royal Orphan Institution, R[illegible] Park, will take place at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. J[illegible] square, on Monday the 16th instant, under the immediate Patronage of the Queen. Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Kent, Princess Augusta and Landgravine of Hesse Homburg have signified their intention of honouring the Ball with their presence.
Vouchers to be procured, at the original price, from the Lady Patronesses only, a list of whom may be had at the Rooms.

MESSRS. DELCROIX & CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, beg leave to inform the Nobility and Gentry that they have now completed their SPRING STOCK of NEW and FASHIONABLE PERFUMERY, and have also just imported from Paris and the South of France, a choice selection of the most approved [illegible] of the day. They respectfully recommend the following articles to the attention of families and the public:
Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavande aux Mille fleurs.
Rocket handkerchief.
Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.
Delcroix's Pommade Regeneratrice, for the growth and preservation of the hair.
Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Glycerable Soaps.
Delcroix's much-esteemed Old Brown and White Windsor Soaps.
Delcroix's long-approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and gums from decay.
Delcroix's Creme de Sultanna, for softening and beautifying the complexion.
Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bears' Grease and Bulles Ambrées.
Messrs. D. and C. have recently obtained Injunctions from the Court of Chancery preventing certain parties from selling spurious imitations of their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, both of which will in future bear their signature on the labels, and their address, 158, New Bond-street, on the back of the bottles.

LIEUTENANT BEADON'S PATENT BOAT SAFETY.—The Gentlemen and Members of the Yacht Club, and others attached to aquatic recreation, are invited to an inspection of this highly important invention, by which the capsizing of sailing vessels and boats in squalls is prevented. The invention is contained in a small ornamental case, and consists of a reel of the simplest construction. By the use of which thousands of lives may be spared from a watery grave, and the pleasures of sailing enhanced by perfect security. A model of the Boat Safely's may be inspected daily at the Adelaide Gallery, Strand. Gentlemen wishing to purchase will have the goodness to forward the size of the main-sheets of their yacht or boat to Mr. Jones, Optician to the Board of Ordnance, Charing Cross, where one may be seen. Any person wishing to treat for the sole Agency for the sale of the "Boat Safety," may apply to Messrs. Newton and Berry, at the Office for Patents, Chancery-lane, London, and Town-hall Buildings, Manchester, who have also one of them for Inspection.

MESSRS PRATT beg to introduce the Newly-Invented CIRCULAR EXTENDING TABLE, which they have the honour to submit to the notice of the Nobility and Gentry, and to explain the principle of the very simple construction by which the table is adapted to any required changes. Messrs. PRATT's collection of Ancient Furniture has been increased by recent importations, and the MARQUETERIE and BOULE CABINETS and TABLES, CHAIRS and CONSOLES, and PANNELLING for SALOONS, some very rich VELVET DAMASKS, and TAPESTRY of the style of Louis XIV., and RARE CARVINGS in oak of the Gothic and Elizabethan periods.—47, New Bond-street, opposite Stratton-street.

DOUBLE PATENT PERRYAN PEN.—The increasing demand for this superior and long-established Writing Instrument, justifies the Proprietors in strongly recommending it to all Writers—its [illegible] Quill, in combination with the Patent [illegible], removes the objections made to Metallic Pens. Price of Holder, 2s.; with Elastic Holder, 2s. 6d.—[illegible], and 2s. per Bottle. Manufactured expressly for Messrs. [illegible] this Ink has a flowing property peculiarly adapted for Metallic Pens, and will not corrode them. It is also excellent for Pens made from Quills. Perryan Ink Powders 1s. per Packet, sufficient to make a wine bottle full of Ink. Sold by all Stationers and Dealers in Metallic Pens, and at the Manufactory, 37, Red Lion-square, London.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS.—The superiority of this Patent over all other Inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers and Gentlemen of the Civil Service. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED, and where all other descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied on the lowest Terms.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. the East India Company.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William-street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 10 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

MILITARY and Naval Gentlemen, Writers, Cadets, Midshipmen, and Families, are respectfully invited to Messrs. W. H. ABLETT and CO.'s, 37, Cornhill, Clothiers and General Outfitters, where every article is charged at the wholesale price, for Cash only.—Calico shirts, 6s. per dozen; ditto, 12s. and 14s. per dozen; good ditto, 18s., 21s., 24s., and 30s. per dozen; ditto, with linen collars, wristbands, and lawn fronts, from 30s. per dozen for the finest quality; a large assortment of long-cloth and Irish linen ditto; striped sea shirts, 18s. per dozen; printed ditto, [illegible] per dozen and upwards; cotton half-hose, 3s. 6d. per dozen; [illegible] handkerchiefs, 3s. 6d. per dozen; silk ditto, 6s. per dozen; dress [illegible], 3s. 6d. per dozen; cotton caps, 2s. per dozen; a great [illegible] and girls' under-linen; ladies' chemises 9s. per dozen [illegible] and 18s.; good ditto, 21s. and 24s. per dozen; ladies' [illegible] 6s. per dozen; night-gowns, 18s.; long ditto, 24s., [illegible] per dozen; sheets, 2s. per pair; pillow-cases; linen [illegible] dozen; gentlemen's wearing-apparel made up in the [illegible]; a great variety of jean jackets and trowsers, from 7s. 6d. per suit; superior ditto, made to measure, 18s. and 20s. per suit; duck, drill, kerseymere, &c., ditto, in great variety, bedding, from 3s. 6d. each; cots, hammocks, blankets, counterpanes, trunks, sea chests, and all kinds of cabin furniture, &c.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

E. JOHNSON invites the attention of Naval and Military Officers, Cadets, Surgeons, Writers, and Passengers, proceeding to India or the Colonies, to his improved PATENT METALLIC EXPANDING BEDSTEADS, forming Ship Sofas and Swing Cots, which for Cleanliness, Economy, Lightness, and Convenience are unequalled. Also to his new Ship Sofas, either in Rosewood or Mahogany, which may be used as Ship Sofas, Swinging Cots, or Camp Beds, forming at the same time a convenient and elegant piece of Drawing Room Furniture.

A large assortment of Brass and Iron Camp and House Bedsteads, Spring, Stuffed, Recumbent, and Easy Chairs, Mattresses, Carriage Seats and Cushions, Mahogany, Camp, and [illegible] Drawers, Wash-hand, and other Tables, Wardrobes, Canteens, Liqueur Cases, and every description of Portable Furniture, whether for the Camp or Cabin, all at Wholesale prices for cash.

OFFICER'S BEDSTEADS, with Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, and Curtains complete, only £6 6s.

An Inspection of the above articles is earnestly and with confidence requested at the Manufactory for every article of Travelling and Camp Equipage, 155, Leadenhall-street, only four doors from Cornhill.

Drag. Gds.—1 Offi., 1 Serjt., and 10 r. and f., and 1 ffi., 1 Serjt., and 14 r. and f., from Ballincollig, to rrive at Dummanway and Bandon on the 30th and 31st.

Drag. Gds.—have quitted Chichester and Brighton for Portsmouth.

Drag. Gds.—The 1st div., from Dublin, landed at iverpool on 4th inst.; two troops marched on the 5th, a Chester, and arrived at Birmingham on 10th; one oop and hd.-quarters marched on 6th, via Warrington, nd arrived at Birmingham on 12th. The second div. nded at Liverpool on 7th, and proceeded on 9th for the land district.

Drags.—Hd.-qrs. and 3 troops arrived at Dublin on oard the Hart Roden and Cumberland steam-vessels om Liverpool, and reached Dundalk on the 18th.

Lt. Drags.—Squadron and hd.-qrs, from Cork and Bal- incollig, to arrive at Cahir on 25th, and a troop from allincollig to arrive at Limerick on 24th. The detach- ents at Bandon and Dummanwey to arrive at Cahir on rd June.

Drags.—have arrived at Brighton and Chichester.

Hussars—Died of rheumatic fever, on the 12th May, aged 24, Capt. Arthur Annesley Cotton, M. M. 7th Hussars, son of C. B. Cotton, Esq., of Kingsgate, a nephew to J. P. Powell, Esq., of Quex Port, Isle of Thanet, deeply lamented by his family and numerous friends; he had obtained leave to attend his sister's wed- ding, the 6th April, being then ill, on which day he was put to bed, from which he never again rose. The general sympathy and interest exhibited towards this young offi- cer will always prove a consolation to his family, as being the most flattering mark of the general estima- tion in which his character was held. Few young men have lived more universally beloved, his lively and ami- able manners always secured him friends, and he never had an enemy.

Hussars—have arrived at Piershill.

7th Lt. Dragoons—Private letters from the Horse Guards, says the Cawnpore Omnibus, mention that this regiment will positively embark for England in the cold season of 1837.

14th Lt. Drags.—3 troops have arrived at Belfast from Dundalk, and hd.-qrs. with remaining troop to arrive on 23rd or 24th for embarkation.

15th Hussars—The hd.-qrs. and troops at Cahir, Limerick, and Clonmel have moved to Newbridge, and will arrive at Dublin on 25th. Capt. Wakefield is gone to Lausanne upon leave of absence. Four Officers were admitted brothers of the ancient honourable craft of free and accepted Masons, in Limerick garrison, within the last week.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 2nd batt.—The second (hd.-qrs.) div. embarked on 13th inst., on board the Innisfail steamer at Dublin, for Cork.

5th—The King has been pleased to command that this corps shall in future be equipped as a Fusilier Regiment, and be styled the 5th Regt. of Foot, or Northumberland Fusiliers.

7th—when the force of Portsmouth garrison will admit of it, will move to Winchester and eventually to Windsor, for duty at the Castle, as his Majesty has signified his intention of presenting the officers' mess with his approving testimony, in the shape of a magnificent piece of plate for their table.

15th depot—The draft, 2 Officers, 2 Serjts., and 100 r. and f. arrived from Armagh at Warren's Point on 18th, to embark for Cork.

19th depot—were last week inspected at Stockport, by Maj.-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie.

27th Depot—Lieut.-Gen. Lord Bloomfield, the Magistrates, Clergy, and respectable inhabitants of Nenagh, presented a very complimentary but well-merited address to Major Maclean, on the departure of the Depot from that town.

34th Depot—At Carlisle, were inspected on 6th inst.

37th Depot—Maj.-Gen. Sir W. Cotton inspected at Plymouth the Depot, most minutely, after performing a variety of evolutions in the most steady soldier-like manner, he was pleased to tell Major Kell that he commanded the best Depot in the service.

38th — Has arrived at Falmouth from India, after 25 years service.

43rd Depot—The comp. at Charleville arrived at Buttevant on 19th.

46th—Friday morning, the 13th inst., Capt. French, quartered at Downpatrick, threw himself out of a window in an upper apartment of the barrack in that town, and received such injuries that he shortly after expired. The unfortunate gentleman had been ill of fever, and was understood to be recovering. A coroner's inquest was held in the course of the evening, and a verdict returned accordingly. Several of the soldiers have been also under fever in the same barrack, although the town of Downpatrick is in a very healthy state at present. The com. at Downpatrick and Carrickfergus to arrive at Enniskillen on 23d and 24th, and 1 com. 55th r. and f., making 95 r. and f. to arrive at Cavan on 23d.

48th—At Blackburn and Bolton were inspected on the 9th.

52nd Depot—Was embarked at the Pigeon House, Dublin, on board the Erin steamer for Bowness and Isle of Man, on 15th inst.

56th Depot—Were, on the 4th, inspected by Maj.-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie, at Sunderland.

60th, 1st bat. Depot—Were inspected on the 4th inst. by Maj.-Gen. Sir H. Bouverie at Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

66th Depot—On the 9th inst. Maj.-Gen. Sir W. Cotton, commanding the Western District, made his half-yearly inspection of the Depot at Plymouth, under Maj. Daniell, with which he was much pleased. The Depot are under orders for Cork. Maj. Daniell is selling out, and is to Barrack-Master at Corfu.

71st—6 cos. and hd.-qrs. arrived at Kingstown on 12th inst., on board the Jupiter steam-vessel, from Glasgow, were disembarked, and occupy Richmond Barracks, in Dublin. The remaining 4 cos. arrived on 14th inst., on board the Erin steamer.

72nd—The draft arrived at Dublin on the 12th inst., in the Ballinasloe steamer from Glasgow, and embarked on the 13th inst. on board the Innisfail steamer, and sailed for Cork.

79th depot—have proceeded from Aberdeen to Edinburgh.

81st—The Barrosa tr. has left the river Thames for Cork, and the service cos. are to embark in her for Gibraltar, immediately on her arrival. Sir T. Arbuthnot will previously inspect them.

85th—1 Capt., 1 Sub., and 50 r. and f., from Cork, arrived at Middleton on 12th, to aid civil power in executing writs.

89th—depot were inspected on Saturday last by Maj. Gen. Sir J. Douglas, at Nenagh, who complimented the Commanding Officer (Major O'Hara), and the Officers, on the soldier-like appearance of the men.

93d—They were inspected on Monday in the Fifteen Acres, Phœnix Park, by Maj.-Gen. Sir Edw. Blakeney, K.C.B., who expressed himself in the highest terms of gratification at the effective state of the regiment. They have taken up the quarters of the 51st in Beggar's Bush, George-street Barracks, Dublin.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—The band belonging to the Corps at Woolwich, commenced playing on Monday afternoon on the Parade, between half-past 4 and half-past 5, and will continue on the 3 first days in each week until the concerts cease. Serj. Tewey, Field Batteries, died on 12th in the hospital, from a severe accident received some months since in the course of his professional duties. He was a deserving N. C. officer. The extra wheelwrights taken for the carriage department, and who were engaged for three months, have been retained for another month. The Brigade in Limerick garrison will shortly proceed to Dublin.

BOARD OF ORDNANCE.—The row of houses in Dublin, which are occupied by the senior clerks of the Ordnance department, are ordered to be sold; and the Gun carriage Yard is to be attached to George-st. Barrack, for the accommodation of troops.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.—All the yeomanry cavalry of England will be inspected this year, field officers of the line being appointed for this purpose. The lords lieutenant of counties have in consequence made the necessary communication to the commandants.

Major-General Sir George Elder succeeds Major-Gen. T. Hawker, at Madras.

We are authorised to state that there is no truth in the report that two steamers, the Rhadamanthus and Tartarus, have been sent to the Cove of Cork, to embark there two regiments for the coast of Spain.

The late Governor Muir was a truly charitable and hospitable man, a cheerful companion, a kind and faithful friend. It does not become us to speak of him as a husband and a father, but the character which he sustained in his domestic circle may be learned from the sorrow evinced by every member of his surviving family. He has left few behind him more distinguished by private and public acts of beneficence. The extent of his charities was known to few, but silently as the stream flowed, it could not altogether be concealed. A considerable number of the poor in the neighbourhood and other places, received regular supplies from his bounty; no season passed away, during which his family did not distribute clothing to the naked and food to the hungry. The applicant in the hour of need seldom, if worthy, went disappointed away. He was a great supporter of charitable institutions, and his name is, we learn, to be found on the lists of no fewer than eight religious societies. He was unusually anxious about the religious instruction of the young, and, whilst he often visited the Sabbath school at Fort George, and fostered it by his bounty, he assisted most liberally in the erection of a school house at Campbell Town, and for a period of sixteen years contributed anously to the objects of that valuable and flourishing institution. He has left a considerable sum to be distributed by Mrs. Muir for charitable purposes.

A Grand Review of the Horse Brigade and Field Batteries of Artillery will take place to-day at Woolwich, when in addition to the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Commander-in-Chief, the Duke of Wellington, the Marquess of Anglesey, and other distinguished officers, the Prince of Orange and his two sons will be present. There will be some mortar and bowitzer firing.

Portsmouth, May 20.—(From our own Correspondent.) On Saturday, May 14—Trinculo, 16, Act. Com. H. J. Puget, arrived from the coast of Africa with 2300 oz. of gold dust, and about 4 tons of ivory. Left Ascension on the 6th March, and Sierre Loone on the 28th March; relieved off Prince's Island by the Pylades. Trinculo sailed to Plymouth to be paid off on Sunday. Maitland transport, Lieut. Biosted, arrived from St. Helena on Tuesday, left on the 12th March, with despatches from the Gov., Maj.-Gen. Middlemore, and part of the East India Company's St. Helena garrison, to be disbanded in this country. Maitland brought 50 women and 140 children; the remainder of the troops are on their passage to England in the Athol. The 91st reg. were all well, but miserably off for provisions, &c. The Maitland was intended to have been sent to Chatham to land her passengers, but her services being required immediately, they have been lodged for the present in Cumberland Fort, and the ship is in harbour. Hermes steamer arrived on Wednesday, and was immediately employed to tow Vanguard to Spithead (she made an attempt to sail out on Monday, but the wind fell). Hermes went to Falmouth, and will take out the next Mediterranean mail. Salamander steamer arrived on Thursday on her way to the N. coast of Spain; she is fitted as an armed steamer. Lieut. Clapperton, 1 Corporal, and 11 Marines (artillery Gunners will embark from this division to form part of her complement. The Salamander and Messenger are to proceed together, the latter being filled with spirits and provisions for the marines and squadron. Bellerophon was towed to Spithead by the Salamander. Pembroke was hauled out of the basin on Tuesday, and is fitting alongside the hulk. Moira transport has been docked for 24 hours to ascertain if she experienced any damage from getting on the Hamilton Bank, but none discovered; she is fitting for the Mediterranean. Capt. Hoyes's frigate, the Inconstant, is to be launched on the 15th or 16th of June; the slipways are filling. You may calculate on hearing plenty of reports respecting Capt. Symonds's ship the Vanguard. All these emanate from certain gentlemen in the dockyard, who cannot conceal their spleen as they witness the progress of this splendid ship. They last week industriously circulated a report that she had been obliged to land a considerable number of her tanks, finding her too deep, &c., &c., whereas the fact was that having ascertained that she could stow 600 tons of water, and the order being to take on board 400, that quantity being considered fully adequate, the tanks which formed the ground tier in the after-hold, were taken out, and their place supplied with provisions. She stows by this arrangement, six months' provisions, twelve months' spirits, and 400 tons of water, for 650 men, with a magazine amidships. Every thing reported about the Vanguard from the quarter alluded to is false. She is beyond comparison the finest man-of-war that ever left Portsmouth harbour, and, when complete, will swim within an inch or two of the constructor's line, a thing never before accomplished in building a line-of-battle ship. Ships in port—Vanguard and Bellerophon at Spithead; Britannia, Pembroke, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Buffalo, Stakesby, Moira, and Maitland transports in harbour.

Milford Haven, 17th May.—(From our own Correspondent).—The change to fine weather has entirely swept the Haven of merchantmen. An order has been received at Pembroke yard stating that the Admiralty having reconsidered the subject, do not intend building the Guard-house there this summer, although Parliament had granted them the money. This is a great hardship on the military guard, who are now in a temporary room without even a fire to warm their toes. Would any regiment of the line be thus treated? certainly not; but unfortunately this gallant and royal corps are differently circumstanced. To relieve the sentries from the present barracks, a leaky old ship, the Dragon, is next to an impossibility, for some of the stations are at the very extremity of the Dock-yard. Lieut. M'Killop has relieved Lieut. Wright, R.M., at Pembroke, the latter is shortly for sea service, and hence has been recalled. The summer drills have commenced there preparatory to the annual inspection, which generally takes place in June. The United Service Club held their periodical dinner last Monday; the attendance was small. The entry of men for the Navy at this port has been a complete failure. The eclipse on Sunday was observed very advantageously from this neighbourhood; the hen and light were materially diminished, so much so, that the feathered tribe seemed to feel considerably. The barn-door fowls were actually crowing at the time. Remain, the Sky Lark cutter, and Royal Sovereign yacht.

We some time since stated that the Deptford collectors of taxes made some seizure in the Victualling yard for the non-payment of land-tax, and some new buildings, being at the time cautioned against the legality of the seizure, memorials were forwarded to stop the law investigation, which Government declined, and on Monday the trial came on, and in twenty minutes it was decided in favour of Government, thereby setting any other claims of the kind at rest for ever, either as regards Deptford, or any other public departments in the United Kingdom, of any sort or description whatever.

The Trinculo, 16, Com. H. Puget, arrived at Spithead from Sierra Leone on Saturday morning, 14th inst., bringing 2300 ounces of gold dust, and 309 elephants' tusks, weighing 4 tons, 6 cwt., 1 qr. of ivory. She left Prince's Island on the 13th Feb. (having been relieved by H.M.S. Pylades, which vessel sailed on a cruise the day she sailed), Island of Ascension 8th, and Sierre Leone, 28th March. 19 Spanish vessels were lying at Sierra Leone waiting adjudication, that had been detained by the squadron under the new treaty, no Act of Parliament having then arrived for carrying it into effect. Trinculo has been in commission since 14th April, 1832, during which time she has been actually under canvas 914 days, and run, by log, 82,900 miles. She has never lost a man by accident, and only three deaths have occurred on board, and those from fever. The principal part of her service has been on the East and West Coast of Africa, and perhaps her crew has seen as much, in boats and otherwise, as any vessel in commission. The squadron are disposed as follows:—Thalia, Leveret, and Pelican, at the Cape; Ralla, in the Gambia; Curlew Forester, Griffin, and Buzzard, at Sierra Leone; Britomart and Fair Rosamond in the Bights; and Water Witch at Prince's Island, this vessel had displayed her superiority in sailing in a most extraordinary degree in chasing a slave vessel in company with the Thalia; and had captured another, which had nearly ready, at Whydah, a cargo of 600 slaves, but was chased off the coast by the Britomart. Trinculo is ordered to Plymouth to be paid off.

By letters from Bilboa it appears that Lieut. Castieau, with one half of the detachment of Marine Artillery that left this place in the Carron st., has landed and quartered at Desierto Convent, where they were actively employed in constructing and arming redoubts.

Melville (with the flag of V. Adm. Sir P. Halket), arrived at Madeira on 8th ult., after a most boisterous passage. On 27th and 28th March she encountered a tremendous gale, in which she lost her quarter boat, the topsail yard was washed out of her chains, and six of her main deck ports were stove in. Melville was to proceed from Madeira to Bermuda on the 10th ult.

Mr. William Jenkins, of the Admiralty has been appointed Naval Dock-Yard Store Receiver, vice Mr. Williams, of Woolwich Yard, superannuated, after 43 years' servitude.

The Rhadamanthus is placed in Woolwich basin, in charge of Mr. Aylmer, Sec. Master, with all her stores, to be ready at a day's notice for service. Lieut. Blount has joined the Hermes st. for Malta.

The Diligence tr. will load this week at Woolwich, for Portsmouth and Plymouth.

The following steamers at Woolwich are expected to be commissioned, Pluto, Blazer, Alban, Echo, and Firefly.

Com. Kains, R.N., Coast Guard, Whitby, has been presented with a silver claret jug elegant pattern; and Lt. Brittain, of the same service, with a purse of gold, for their zealous and honourable exertions in taking charge of the Spring of South Shields, when she drifted on shore, and in preserving and securing the property, and when the whole of the crew, eleven, were drowned (two only since found). Inscription on the jug, "Presented to Com. J. Kains, R.N., by the underwriters on the ship Spring of South Shields, in testimony of their approbation of his prompt and efficient services in taking charge of that vessel when stranded near Whitby, on the 17th of April, 1836."

The Barrosa tr., Lieut. Goodlad, agent, sailed from Deptford on Wednesday, to take the 81st regt. from Cork to the Mediterranean. The Salamander arrived from Woolwich to tow her down, but not being required, returned in the evening.

The Scarborough, 74, was taken into the basin at Deptford Dock-yard this week to be broken up.

Royal Marines.—Woolwich Division—have had several splendid drills during this week, under the command of Colonel M'Cleverty.

Woolwich Dock-Yard, May 20th.—(From our own Correspondent).—Hermes st.-v., Lieut. Blount, received orders to take on board marines for the Coast of Spain, which was countermanded by the arrival of the Salamander st.-v., Lieut. Duffill, which vessel went to Deptford with the Lascars out of the Imaun (or Liverpool) 74, to be hulked in the Investigator until the Prince Regent yacht is ready for sea. Salamander subsequently dropped down to Woolwich, and took on board 50 marines, she then hauled up alongside the Sheers at high water, and took in 12 guns and 2000 shot, and hauled off again to her moorings in the river, and sailed from here on Wednesday morning for the Coast of Spain. Hermes st.-v., Lieut. Blount, got up her steam to go down to the Arsenal night, and in doing, burst one of the stay-heads of her boilers, which they were engaged on Sunday in repairing, during which from the insolent conduct of the (third engineer, Richardson, Mr. Doyle, Master's Mate in command during the absence of Lieut. Blount, on duty on shore, ordered Bardoo into arrest, and on an inquiry being held on Monday before Sir S. Warren, C.B., Captain Superintendant, Bardoo was dismissed H. M. Service, and another was appointed off the Cheque of the Yard; this vessel left the Arsenal at five o'clock on Tuesday morning for Falmouth to take out the Malta mail. Pluto st.-v. left dry dock on Monday and hauled into the basin. Lightning st.-v., Lieut. Shambler, hauled out of the basin into dry dock. A collier brig has been alongside the Rhadamanthus st.-v., which, from the circumstance of her taking in coals, it is supposed will be commissioned. Ships in Commission in Port—William and Mary yacht. In the Basin none. In Dock—Lightning.

A Lieutenant and thirteen seamen, part of the crew of H.M.S. Satellite arrived at Falmouth in the Nightingale packet last week. They had been put on board a slave which that ship had captured on her passage from Janeiro to England. The Nightingale brought 30,000 dollars on freight.

The Cornwallis, 74, was docked on Monday evening, to ascertain the amount of injury done in touching the ground when going into the Sound.

The Camel lighter, sailed on Thursday for Pembroke with stores, and jury gear for the Dido, which is about to be launched. The master of the yard vessels, are to perform the duties of pilots as at Portsmouth, but at reduced rates. One regular pilot only being left to perform the various duties.

The Trinculo brig arrived from Portsmouth on Tuesday afternoon to be paid off.

Lieut. Arson and the 13 seamen who took the slaver at Rio de Janeiro, came home passengers in the Nightingale packet last week. The slaver was captured by H. M. brig Satellite on her passage home to England, and was condemned at Rio.

In Hamoase—Royal Adelaide, Minden, Cornwallis, Transit freight-ship.

In the Sound—Talavera, Arab transport.

Commander W. Robertson, late of the Snake, has been appointed Sec. Capt. to Lord John Hay, on that officer hoisting a broad pendant in the Castor, on the coast of Spain. Commander Henderson takes his passage in the Salamander st.-v. for St. Andero.

Accounts have been received by the ship Anne Baldwin from Macao, that H. M. sloop Raleigh, was upset in a tremendous typhon, on the 4th and fifth Aug. last, in lat, 2 18., lon. 118. 30., one hundred and fifty miles from the island of Formosa. Fortunately all her guns except three had been thrown overboard about two hours previous to the disaster, or she must inevitably have foundered. She remained with her tops under water and her keel above water for the space of a quarter of an hour, when, owing to the exertions of the crew, who, while clinging to the weather rigging, employed themselves in cutting away the lanyards with that coolness, determination, and obedience to discipline, for which the British seaman is so remarkable in situations of danger and difficulty; all the masts and bowsprit went, and the vessel righted, upon which the ca gave a hearty cheer, and turned to "clear the wreck," and to pump the ship, which, owing to the hatches having been closely battened, had only made five feet water, and the pumps being fortunately uninjured, this was soon effected. The gale shortly after abating, and the sea subsiding, the ship was jury-rigged and carried safely into Macao.

The intelligence we gave last week of the situation of Inspector General of Marines being abolished is this day officially announced. It is reported that an extensive alteration in the Coast Guard service is contemplated by Government.

It is currently rumoured, that a French squadron of seven sail of the line, and five frigates, are on their way to Spithead from Toulon, and that a Dutch squadron, of frigates and smaller vessels, is likely to pay us a visit.

A new Code of General Regulations and Instructions for his Majesty's naval service has been prepared, and is expected to issue from the press in about two months. Separate codes have also been prepared for the surgeons and pursers of the fleet, which will be promulgated at the same time.

East India Intelligence.

On Wednesday a Court of Directors was held at the East India House, when Lieut.-Gen. Sir T. P. Maitland took the usual oaths on his appointment to the office of Commander-in-Chief of the Forces on the Madras Establishment, and Second Member of Council at Fort St. George.

At a meeting of the inhabitants of Calcutta on the 5th Jan. the following petition to the House of Parliament was agreed to:—"That the act for the renewal of the Charter tended only to benefit the East India Company, as appears from the 9th section, by which the whole Bond Debt of the East India Company in England, as well as the debt called the Territorial Debt, and every other kind of debt and liability, is charged upon the revenues of India, whilst neither the stocks of the Company, or the dividends accruing therefrom, nor the property of the Directors or Proprietors are chargeable with the existing debts. That the payment of the dividends is made preferable to any other liability, while the government promissory notes given for money unquestionably borrowed on the security of the territorial revenues, has been made secondary. That the creation of the Presidency of Agra was only to increase patronage. That the Episcopal establishment was entirely useless, and if necessary should be paid out of dividends, or otherwise paid for by Parliament. That the present method of civil and military appointments was particularly obnoxious. That it would be more just to remunerate the East India Directors with liberal salaries. They prayed likewise, that individuals connected with India, by locality and property, might be allowed a seat at the Council, and that a proper time might elapse between the passing and publishing of any law." This petition was presented to the House of Commons on the 13th of May.

Mr. G. Blunt has been directed to receive charge of the office of Collector of Customs at Agra from Mr. Laing, the duration of the latter officer being devoted to reduction. Mr. Laing's salary at present is nearly 50,000 rupees, and the reduced allowances is not to exceed 24,000 rupees. The two Cess Chokie Jurisdictions is abolished, and the interference of the preventive service is now every where confined to the class of articles declared liable to assessment an export or import across the final frontier.

Capt. Higginson is now spoken of as successor to Major Honeywood in the Guardianship of the Mysore Princes, and the appointment formerly pointed out for him, the Political Agency at Simla, is to be conferred on Major Gowan.

The abolition of the Custom Houses at Benares, Ghazeepoor, Allahabad, Cawnpoor, Furruckabad, and Bareilly have been determined upon, and will take place as soon as arrangements can be made, by which the interests of the present incumbent Collectors shall not be compromised. Report speaks of a surplus revenue being the cause.

The General Order has been republished, stating the Directors' determination not to make any pecuniary advances to officers at home beyond what they are allowed by the existing regulations of the service.

Sir Charles Metcalfe, finding that the District Charitable Society had suffered loss by the departure of Lord William Bentinck, to the extent of 500 rupees per month, has, with characteristic munificence, made up the deficiency, 5000 rupees, and intimated his desire to become a subscriber for 500 rupees monthly.

The overland despatch of August and September reached Madras Jan. 4, bringing news only two days later than the Lady Flora, which arrived on 29th Dec.

There is a rumour abroad of orders having been received from home to apply the pruning knife of retrenchment again to the military establishment, in order to effect still further reductions than have already been accomplished.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

Captain P. O. Hanlon.

At a General Court-Martial, re-assembled 27th Oct., 1835, Capt. Pringle O. Hanlon, 1st L. C. was arraigned on the following charge, viz.—"With the publication of a letter in the Meerut Observer, containing false and scandalous charges against Col. Reid, 10 L. C., and Capt. J. A. Scott, 1st L.C., and on being made officially aware of the said letter, never offered any contradiction to, or disavowal of the same." Upon which charge the Court were of opinion that the prisoner (being then under suspension) was made officially aware of the letter in question, and that he allowed the said letter to remain before the army and public without any contradiction or disavowal of the same, to the great detriment of the said Col J. Reid and Capt. Scott, such conduct being unbecoming the character of an officer, and subversive of military discipline; but acquit the prisoner of the remainder of the charge. The Court sentence the prisoner, Capt. Pringle O'Hanlon to lose a portion of his rank in the regiment to which he belongs, by being placed next below Capt. Bradford, and to be severely reprimanded in such manner as the Commander-in-Chief may deem proper. The Court reassembled on 28th Dec., 1835, agreeably to the orders of the Comm.-in-Chief, to reconsider their former verdict, upon which the Court adhered to their former finding, and in doing so, respectfully explained to the Comm.-in-Chief that they considered it unbecoming in an officer to resort to the public newspapers in which to state his grievances; but they did not think it ungentlemanly in this instance, inasmuch as the Court acquitted Capt. O'Hanlon of having stated any falsehood in the letter he published, and therefore they adhered to their former sentence.—Confirmed, H. Fane, Gen. Comm. In Chief.

Remarks by His Excellency.—Although he had confirmed, he did not approve of the finding or sentence of this Court-Martial. He deemed that if Capt. O'H. wrote the letter he was bound as an officer and a gentleman to meet the charge of having done so, and to justify the act in the best way he could; if he did not write it, then was he bound, when it appeared before the public and army under the sanction of his name, to disavow it. He was likewise at a loss to understand for what reason the Court entered into so great a mass of evidence respecting the truth or falsehood of the charges preferred against Col. Reid and Capt. Scott, if in the end they were to abstain from pronouncing an opinion; but in his opinion the gravamen of those charges were disproved. With reference to the sentence, he thought the punishment quite inadequate to the amount of military offence found to have been committed. Capt. P. O'H. will receive what is called a portion of the reprimand ordered to be addressed to him, and the Comm.-in-Chief is not aware that there has been in Capt. O'Hanlon's military ervices, or that enough may be expected from them to ompensate either to the army or the government, for the vil which his conduct is thus shown to have produced. His name is to be transposed in the Army List, accord- ng to the sentence of the Court. He is to be released rom his arrest, and to join and do duty with 9th L.C., otil further orders, since it is impossible that his ser- ices can be useful in the 1st L.C.

Ensign M. V. Abbott, 16th Foot.

At a General Court-Martial held at Cawnpore, 4th Dec., 1835, Ensign M. V. Abbott, H. M. 16th, was rraigned on the following charge:—"For conduct ighly unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, in familiarly ssociating and drinking with a serjeant and two privates f the same regt., in his bungalow, on 6th Oct., 1835, otwithstanding that he has been twice warned of the onsequences of his persisting in such improper con- uct."

The Court were of opinion that the prisoner is guilty f the charge preferred against him with the exception f the word "twice," of which they do acquit him, and ccordingly sentenced him to be dismissed from H.M.'s ervice, with a recommendation to the clemency of the Commander-in-Chief, in consequence of the deep con- rition he has expressed, and his having alleged that he urchased his commission.

The Com.-in-Chief regrets that he cannot see any rounds which could justify his attending to the recom- endation of the Court. Ensign Abbott is to be struck ff the list of the 16th reg., which the Commanding Offi- er will immediately report to the Adjut.-General of H.M.'s forces in India, and to the Mil. Sec. to his Excellency.

Lieut. Bell, 2nd Bengal N.I.

7th Jan.—1. Lieut. Interpreter and Quartermast. T. Bell, 2d N.I., fancying that the Adjutant of that regt. ad improperly interfered with some of the details of the Quartermaster's business, made an appeal against what e supposed to be the misconduct of the Adjut., to Lieut. Col. D. Dowie, commanding the regt.

2. The consequent line of conduct adopted by Lieut.- Col. Dowie led to a correspondence between him and ieut. Bell, and as the Lieutenant deemed that Lieut.- Col. Dowie, in his correspondence, had not done him or is office of Quartermaster due justice, he desired to ap- eal from his Commanding Officer's decision, and to sub- it the affair to the superior judgment of Brig.-Gen. mith, commanding the Saugor division.

3. Brig.-Gen. Smith having considered the case, rdered a severe and well-merited censure to be addressed Lieut. Bell for his conduct, and for the insubordinate nd highly disrespectful style of a letter which the Lieut. ad addressed to his Commanding Officer.

4. Lieut. Bell has thought proper to appeal from this ecision of Brig.-Gen. Smith to the Com.-in-Chief.

5. The Com.-in-Chief having looked carefully at the ase, and deeming that Lieut. Bell was in error from the ery commencement of his proceeding, and concurring ntirely in the view taken of the case by Brig.-Gen. mith, and quite approving the censure which he had xpressed, his Excellency called on Lieut. Bell to assign is reasons for his appeal.

6. In his reply, the Lieut. has so entirely overlooked he relative position of himself and Brig.-Gen. Smith in he army, as to presume to set up his (the Lieutenant's) pinion, that the General's decision "is at variance with xisting regulations," and that the General's censure of im was as "unjust" as "unmerited," and he winds up his highly disrespectful and insubordinate series of con- uct, by putting it as a questionable point whether the ecision of the General was given from "an error of dgment," or from "partiality!"

7. In order to mark the Com.-in-Chief's strong disap- robation of such a total absence of subordination and espect to superiors, he directs that Lieutenant Bell shall e dismissed from the staff situation of Quartermaster nd Interpreter of the 2d regt.

8. If Lieut.-Col. Dowie has officers in the corps fit to ill up the vacancy, he will send in their names. If not, n officer will be appointed from another corps.

9. This, and another case which has recently been rought under the consideration of the Com.-in-Chief, ccasion him to feel it necessary to call the attention of he Quartermasters of regiments to section four of the tanding orders of this army, pages 17 and 18, in which heir duties are clearly defined.

10. It would seem from the instances to which he al- ludes in the last paragraph, as if some fancied that the Quartermaster's department in a regt. formed something distinct, and differently circumstanced from other parts of he corps, and as if they considered themselves in some egree independent of the controul of their senior officers. They must learn, therefore, that their duties are merely executive, under the orders and controul of the Com- manding Officer of the regt., and that it is that officer who is the responsible person to the Com.-in-Chief for every article issued by the Quartermaster to a regt., and, consequently, that everything issued must meet his entire satisfaction and approval.

11. Lieut. Bell appears also to have quite mistaken the duties of the Adjutant of a regt. when he talks of his (the Adjutant's) "presuming" in having sent to Lieut.-Col. Dowie a turban, which was placed on the head of a recruit of the 2d regiment.

It is the duty of an Adjutant to observe all that is wrong in any department of his regt., and to bring the same to the notice of his Commanding Officer; and in reporting upon the turbans, which were in possession of the recruits on this occasion, the Adjutant did no more than was strictly his duty.

Lieut. Molloy, 55th Foot.

Court Martial in Perspective.—The following are the charges upon which Lieut. Molloy, of H. M. 55th reg. is to be tried by Court Martial:—

Lieut. E. Molloy, of H. M. 55th foot, placed in arrest by order of Brig.-General Wilson, C.B. com- manding the ceded districts upon the following charges:—

For conduct subversive of good order and military discipline in the following instances:—

For having at Bellary, in October, 1835, written, or been implicated in writing or sending to Madras for pub- lication, and which was actually published in the news- paper of that place called the Standard, in No. 64, dated 27th October, 1835, a letter under the signature 'School- master Abroad,' stating as follows:—

No. 1, "By what presumptive stretch of authority any individual in command can, in breach of the seventh clause of the Articles of War, detail an officer in command of garrison to sit as President of a general Court-Martial on prisoners under his command still remains to be proved. The articles in question are perfectly defined and patent, and on no account admit of any of the tortures of chicanery. Let those who should take notice of such a 'lapsus' turn their military noses to the ceded districts and they may find a case in point."

He, the said Lieut. E. Molloy, thereby calling in question the general order of his Excellency the Com- mander-in-Chief, bearing date the 8th of August, 1835.

For having, at the same place, in the same month, written, or been implicated in writing or sending to Madras for publication, and which was actually published in the aforesaid newspaper at that place, in No. 60, dated 17th of October, 1835, a letter under a similar signature, stating as follows:

"The Schoolmaster begs to refer an interrogator in your last paper, to G. O., 1828, August (he thinks) for the remarks of Sir G. Walker on an individual carrying into execution illegal sentences of Courts-Martial, and directing the removal of the same person from the com- mand of the rifle corps; let him and the person in ques- tion re-read the admonition and the Schoolmaster may well spare any further remarks. In Pharoah's army list he can refer and inform himself of the name of the per- son commanding the centre division."

He, the said Lieut. Molloy, thereby meaning to hold up Brigadier-General Wilson, commanding the ceded districts, in personal obloquy among the troops under his command.

For having, at the same place, and in the same month, written, or been implicated in writing or sending to Madras for publication, and which was actually published in the newspaper aforesaid, in No. 67, dated November the 3rd, 1835, a letter under a similar signature, stating as follows:—

"No. 5. Can you point out any regulations authoris- ing the officer commanding a ceded district, to turn an officer out of his seat in a public (Church) as such a case did occur this day at Bellary Church, which the School- master can scarcely credit. In great haste he takes his departure!"

All the above instances being grossly disrespectful and insubordinate, in contempt of authority, and in violation of the Articles of War.

Correspondence addressed to the Editor.

Battle of St. Sebastian.

My dear ——,—I am afraid my letter will not reach you until other accounts have informed you of the brilliant achievements of the British Auxiliary Legion. At three in the morning the whole of the British troops then in St. Sebastian marched out of the town, consisting of the 1st, 3rd, 6th, 7th, 9th, 10th, and Rifles, with two companies of the 8th that had already arrived. The Carlists were strongly fortified, and in possession of all the heights immediately contiguous to the town; these were obstinately defended, and a murderous fire mowed down our brave fellows; still they advanced, and house after house, battery after battery, was gallantly taken. The 6th regiment suffered immensely; two officers, Capt. M'Neil and Lieut. Balfour, fell gloriously; six officers were wounded, amongst whom were Col. Tupper and Lieut. Story, both severely. The 3rd suffered also. The last and highest battery, however, obstinately held out, and things began to wear a gloomy aspect, as it would have been impossible to have retained any of the positions already in our power while commanded. The General determined, therefore, to storm it; the 1st regt. attempted it, and were driven back; the 9th, 10th, and 7th were successively repulsed. The Phœnix steamer played over the heads of our brave troops all the while, in a manner perfectly astonishing. At this critical mo- ment, the Salamander steamer appeared in the port, bearing the 4th Fusiliers and the 8th regiment on board, who landed with the utmost expedition, and instantly marched up to the lines. The Adjutant-General then ordered the 4th to storm the battery, and Lieut.-Colonel Harley, who commanded them, immediately determined to take it. The left wing, under Captain and Acting- Major Ramsay, were ordered to leap the bank under which they were sheltered, and charge without firing a shot. Major Losack was ordered to take the right wing through a breach in the second line, headed in gallant style by Col. Harley. A tremendous fire was then opened by the enemy. But one hurrah! and one simultaneous rush, did the business, and the 4th took the battery at the point of the bayonet, chased the enemy down the hill on the other side, drove them out of the houses they had shel- tered themselves in, and brought up on the second range of hills. The whole thing was done so expeditiously that scarcely my lives were lost. Capt. Allen was the only officer killed: Capt. Ramsay and Lieut. Kempe slightly wounded. The whole of their works are now in our possession; our loss is 803 men killed and wounded, and 65 officers!!

I am now writing to you upon a cold stone in an old ruin where we are quartered. The 8th regiment followed in rear of the 4th, and formed their support. In haste, your's sincerely,

Mr. Hume's Accuracy, and General Sir Edward Paget.

St. Sebastian, Hurrah! May 5th.—We (4th) landed and instantly were marched to storm a battery that had foiled the whole Legion. The Adjutant-General came up to us and told us that there were plenty of crows upon the heights, that every other regiment had failed, and that the Fusiliers had an opportunity to crown themselves with glory. We landed from the steamer, we marched from the beach, and we took the battery without firing a shot! My conduct has been approved of. Colonel Harley be- haved like a hero. I am now writing this in a café at St. Sebastian. I carried this letter in my cap through the whole of the fight. We have 600 killed and wounded, and upwards of 30 officers!!! We have carried every thing before us. Poor William is wounded. I traversed a fire of forty Carlists to go to his regiment to know how he was. His wound is slight, thank God! and he be- haved nobly throughout the affair.

Sir,—In perusing the evidence before the Commissioners for Inquiring into the system of Military Punishments, I was struck with the following statement from Mr. Joseph Hume, p. 57, No. 822. "Q. At that time (that is at the time Mr. Hume left India, 1808) was there a power of inflicting corporal punishment? A. Yes, the power of Courts-Mar- tial by native officers on natives. As interpreter I officiated not only at European Courts-Martial where Natives were examined, but at Native Courts-Martial where Europeans were examined, and I had thus frequent opportunities of forming my own opinion on these subjects, in addition to the other opportunities I had. I have in my hand a memo- randum that the flogging of the natives had after my leav- ing India increased to a very considerable extent. I see in the minute of a Court-Martial held at Dinapore on the 12th Sept., 1825, a man was sentenced to 1,900 lashes, on two charges of insolence and insubordination, and remitted by Sir Edward Paget to 1,250 lashes." From reading this evidence, the impression on my mind, as, no doubt, it would be on that of every one reading it, was, that the man tried was a native, and there could be no question as to what, according to Mr. Hume, was the number of lashes Sir E. Paget had authorised being inflicted on him. Still, how- ever, knowing the character of this most excellent officer and most amiable man, as well as the character of Mr. Hume, I was led to make further inquiry into the case, and the paper I herewith send you is copied from the printed order issued on the occasion.

General Orders by the Commander in Chief.

Head Quarters, Calcutta, 7th Oct., 1825.

At an European general Court-Martial assembled at Dinapore, on Monday, 12th Sep. 1825, of which Lieut.-Col. Com. W. Innes, C.B., 39th reg. Native Infantry, is Presi- dent, Private James Wilson, 3d Company, 2nd European regiment, was arraigned upon the following charge, viz.:

"For mutiny, whilst under arms at the drill, on the evening of the 10th inst., in having lain down on the ground and refused, at my repeated orders, to get up and carry his arms, and (addressing himself to two soldiers, who were taking him to the Guard by my orders and alluding to me)

made use of the following expression—'I would see him damned first;' also, for afterwards looking me full in the face, whilst on the ground, and addressing me in the following terms—'you tyrannical rascal,' 'you foxy-headed scoundrel,' 'you villain—rascal,' or words to that effect.

(Signed) "Thos. V. Lysaght,
"Lieut. & Adjot. 2 Eur. Reg.

Dinapore, 11th August, 1825."

Charge preferred by the General Court Martial.—"Private James Wilson, of the 3rd company, 2nd European regiment, arraigned before the General Court-Martial, of which Lieut.-Col.-Com. W. Jones, C.B., 39th Native Infantry is President, and which was assembled for his (Private J. Wilsons's) trial on a charge preferred against him by Lieut. and Adjut. Lysaght, 2nd European regiment, in the following charges, viz.

"For making use of highly disrespectful language to the Court (although warned and admonished before by it for having done so), by saying, that he insisted on having the question put down, whether it did him harm or not, and looking round to the Court in an highly insolent and disrespectful manner, said, 'I expect justice to be done me, and that Lieut. Lysaght will not go against his oath,' or words to that effect."

Upon which charges the Court came to the following decision:—

Finding and Sentence on the First Charge.—"The Court having maturely weighed and considered all that has been adduced in support of the prosecution, as well as that has been brought forward on the defence, are of opinion, that the prisoner, James Wilson, Private in the Hon. Com.'s 2nd Bengal European reg., is guilty of the whole and every part of the crime preferred against him, which being a breach of the Articles of War, do sentence him, Private James Wilson, to receive Thirteen Hundred Lashes (1300) on his bare back, in the usual manner, at such time and place as His Excellency, the Com.-in-Chief, may be pleased to direct."

Finding and Sentence on the Second Charge.—"The Court having found the prisoner guilty of the whole and every part of the charge exhibited against him, Private James Wilson, which being a breach of the Articles of War, do sentence him, the said Private James Wilson, 2nd Reg., to receive Six Hundred (600) Lashes on his bare back, in the usual manner, at such time and place as His Excellency, the Commander-in-Chief, may be pleased to direct."

Approved, Edward Paget, General,
(Signed) Com.-in-Chief in India.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

In approving of the foregoing proceedings, the Com.-in-Chief has to remark, that the obvious impracticability of carrying into effect the double infliction of Corporal Punishment awarded to the Prisoner, ought to have pointed out to the Court the expediency of assigning a different Punishment on the second conviction; for, as the record stands, the prisoner must escape the penalty awarded to his last most grave offence. Half of the punishment on the original charge, and the whole of that awarded on the additional charge, is remitted; the remainder to be carried into effect in the usual manner. By order of His Excellency the Commander in Chief,

W. L. Watson,
Adjut.-Gen. of the Army.

From this it will be seen that Mr. Hume, when he stated that he held in his hand the memorandum to which he referred in giving his evidence, must either have wilfully misrepresented the case, both as regards the soldier tried, and the number of lashes to be inflicted, or else that he quoted from a document the correctness of which he had not ascertained. Mr. Hume is so frequently incorrect in his statements, that it is, perhaps, hardly necessary to bring forward this additional instance of it, nor should I do so, but that it is in justice due to Sir Edward Paget to show that the man tried was an European, and the number of lashes ordered to be inflicted was 650, and not 1250, as stated by Mr. Hume.

ROYAL NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

Sir,—Well knowing your anxiety for the removal of all apparent abuses connected with the public service, I am induced to request your insertion of the following. At the last quarterly meeting of the Royal Naval Charitable Society, certain papers were produced by the Secretary, showing the amount of contributions in aid of the Society, the dividends in public securities, with the total of annual receipts from 1796 to 1835, inclusive, the amount of annual donations to widows, &c., the investments made in the public funds, and the office expenses during the above period. It appears to me that in a society so slenderly supported by the profession, and, I much regret to add, with so great an increase of claimants upon reduced funds, that the office expenses far exceed what propriety demands. On referring to these documents, it appears that in 1835, 1695*l.* were distributed in donations for relief; the office expenses for the same period were 247*l.*, which, in my opinion, is 100*l.* too much, being no less than a ninth of the total receipts for the past year; there likewise can be no doubt but that the office of Secretary ought to be filled by a Naval member (instead of the present Secretary, who enjoys a very handsome retirement from the public service, and has other occupations), which might be easily accomplished at much less expense. I propose that the Secretaryship should be balloted for by members resident in London and the environs. I am doubly induced to trespass upon your valuable columns, from the conviction that your insertion of my communication will be the means of reviving the declining state of our funds, and remedying the evil complained of.

SERJEANTS, ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Sir,—Under the head of regimental news in the Gazette of the 7th inst., you have given a list of several old Serjeants of the Artillery, with their years of service. I understand it would be curious, and by no means unamusing, if a statement could be furnished of the number of years each of the Serjeants alluded to has served at home and abroad. I believe it would be found that the servitude of very many of them is confined entirely to Woolwich, where they have enjoyed a long and uninterrupted reign, with very good pay and allowances, and comparatively far more comfortably circumstanced than many of their officers. I believe, indeed, that there is not one of the Serjeants named, who would not be extremely sorrow to exchange places with any Captain of their corps.

COAST GUARD SERVICE (LETTER XII. & LAST).

Sir,—Having by my preceding letters shown what a perfect jumble this service is, what an admixture of those dissimilar particles, no more likely to amalgamate than oil and vinegar, and the manifest injustice done the Naval profession by employing its officers in it in a manner derogatory to the military rank given them, thereby making rank to them ridiculous, the shadow and not the substance, together with the manifold evils arising out of the system now pursued.

I presume, with all deference to the more matured opinions of others, to suggest, as succinctly as possible, some remedies which I conceive would cure a portion at least of the evils complained of, render the service more efficient, and make it one of selection and choice to those officers who may, on an improved plan, hereafter seek employment in it, instead of its being, as it now is to the generality of those at present attached to it, one, I fear, of dire and absolute necessity.

It seems admitted the service is now "essentially Naval," and, being so, it ought undoubtedly to be under Naval control, and none other. I would, therefore, in the first place, recommend that it be immediately transferred to the Admiralty and its officers, the Naval part of them, thus recognised by their only legitimate masters, and kept up in the same bearing they would be if on board a ship of war. The Admiralty Board is alone competent to command its own officers; and so large a body of them as are now under the Customs, deserve their most serious and immediate consideration.

It is an adage—vulgar, no doubt, but nevertheless true—"Show me a man's companions and I will tell you what he is." Association, whether good or evil, has its peculiar influence; if, then, you compel gentlemen to do duties only suited to men of a low grade, and make them subject to a companionship with such men—which must unavoidably be the case in the Coast Guard service, to a certain extent, as at present constituted (all officers in it of the same class being considered equal)—to keep up a cordial co-operation, then, Sir, it must be expected that in process of time a large proportion of Naval officers will become tainted by such grovelling duties and improper associations, and be rendered for the future unfit to be officers on board ships of war. Every species of unmerited degradation put upon an individual, be his situation in life what it may, must, in a moral point of view, have an evil tendency, and consequently prove highly injurious to his future prospects in his calling or profession.

There is, in my mind, an insuperable objection to Naval officers holding permanent appointments in the Coast Guard as the Lieutenant "Sitters" now do, especially if they be young men, because their minds are alienated from their profession, and being, from the causes I have already stated, stripped of their self-respect, and thrown into these associations so far beneath them, some of them have sunk, and from being gentlemanly men and good officers, they have become disgraced and degraded, as the order books of the several stations will unhappily testify.

I would, therefore, in the second place, recommend that all appointments of Naval officers to the Coast Guard be for five years only, and this with an altered restriction as to age. The duties of the officers in this service are peculiar as compared with those of the Navy, inasmuch that the smuggling laws have carefully to be studied, and they are constantly changing; besides, the expense of joining a district or station is considerable, and a shorter period would scarcely reimburse an officer.

I would, in the third place, in the re-organisation of this service, suggest that the officers now termed "Inspecting Commanders" should consist of Post Captains, as well as Commanders, assimilating as far as was practicable their respective commands to what they would be on board ships of war; they should have no more power—they should have no less.

The above-mentioned officers I would designate "Divisional Captains" and "Divisional Commanders;" their divisions consisting of a given number of districts. In the division of a Captain I would confine the number of Lieutenants to what it would be in the rate of ship he was entitled from his standing in the Navy List to command.

To the division of a Commander I would give three Lieutenants only, except, perhaps, where revenue cruisers were stationed, to which division, for obvious reasons, one Commander should be appointed who had not himself commanded afloat.

The duties of the Divisional Captains and Commanders I would make different to those at present imposed upon the Inspecting Commanders, whose day duties, God knows I are, as I think I have indisputably shown, manifold, irksome, and tedious enough, without imposing night visits upon them. These I would entirely dispense with, and for another reason, too, they are harassing and useless.

To each of these officers a clerk should be allowed, as was the case with the Divisional Lieutenants of the late Coast Blockade Service, deducting, if necessary, a certain portion from their emoluments to meet the expense incurred by this addition to the Coast Guard force, which arrangement would add that ease and respectability to their situations which, in this respect they now require, and would render totally unnecessary their making use of the Mounted Guard in the highly improper manner which has been brought under review in my second letter. With regard to their emoluments and general duties more hereafter.

Fourthly—the Lieutenants I would have placed in the position the Admiralty thought them worthy of when it first instituted the Coast Blockade Service—that is, give each charge and command of a certain number of stations to be comprised in one district, he bearing the appellation of District Lieutenant. The stations in his district he should constantly visit night and day, and he should be held responsible to his divisional officer for their good discipline and efficiency; his correspondence with the heads of the department being forwarded through that officer, no question ever being allowed to arise as to his right thus to address them.

The District Lieutenant of the Coast Blockade, as originally established, performed his duty on horseback. He had allowances approximating to 300*l.* a-year. The District Lieutenants of the Coast Guard I would assimilate with those of the late Blockade, paying them in the manner hereafter described.

RETIRING PENSIONS OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

Sir,—It was not long since you announced to your readers the Plan of the Court of Directors, granting retiring pensions according to "length of service," in lieu of rank—viz. 35 years' actual residence in India for a Colonel, 30 for a Lieut.-Col., and 25 for a Major.

The only part of this regulation that is good is the principle, viz. "length of service;" but the extreme period of "actual residence" in India is so great, that the measure will totally fail to give that impetus and acceleration to promotion which the Home Government contemplate. Who can expect to battle with the debilitating climate of the East for an uninterrupted period of 35 years, without being obliged once or twice to proceed to Europe on sick certificate, or on furlough; thus bringing the aggregate period of his long service to about 45 years, when he shall have attained the age of 65 and upwards. Now it is quite certain that an officer of that age is totally disqualified for Indian service. In proof of the inconsistency and unreasonableness of the regulation, I beg to call your attention to the following questions and answers from the report of the Committee on Military appointments in 1833:—

Question to Sir W. Gordon.—"From your knowledge of the opinion of British officers, do you think they consider five years residence in a tropical climate as a harder service than service five campaigns on the continent of Europe?" Answer—"There can be no question upon it; one leads to nothing but a broken constitution, and the other to great distinction, honour, and reward."

The same authority also states—

"I think a man who has served at years has given the country the best of his service."

It is here clearly shown that the Indian Army has to battle up against the two evils of war and climate; for, in India not one year passes but some field force or detachment is employed. It is therefore most certain that unless the Plan, as originally proposed by the Court of Directors (but rejected by the Board of Control), viz. to deduct a "furlough" of three years from the present 35, 30, and 25 years, is brought into operation, no benefit or promotion will be gained by the Indian Army, and the evil must annually increase, as we have now Ensigns of 10 and 12 years, Lieutenants of 20, and Captains of 30 and 33. At present the state of promotion is truly disheartening; there will this year many regiments with 4, 5, and 6 Lieutenants of 8, Brevet Captains!!

I hope, however, the Court of Directors will again submit their plan to the Board of Control for deducting the furlough; it is the only one that will lessen the feeling disgust and discontent so prevalent throughout the Indian Army. If the plea of expense is again urged by the Board of Control as a reason for non-compliance with this just and beneficial measure, why, in the name of justice and common sense, are second Councillors at Madras and Bombay kept up on salaries from 60 to 70,000 rs. each per ann., appointments which are just as useless as a supernumerary, or a second Commander-in-Chief. One Civil Councillor is in all conscience sufficient for Madras or Bombay, where they have Revenue and Judicial Boards of three and four members to each. The patronage of appointing men to such sinecure situations, with the title of Honourable and Silver Sticks, should not, in times of retrenchment and equalisation of service and reward, be allowed. Here might be a saving of a lac and 40,000 rupees a-year, half of which would more than defray any future expense that is likely to occur from "retiring pensions," and restore the Army, on which the security of India depends, to that tone and vigour which has so long been wanting through the unpardonable neglect and apathy of the home authorities.

Let me ask further, why should such invidious distinctions exist between the Civil and Military rates of pensions and periods of service? The Civilian has only one grade, viz. 22 years, with a pension of £1000 per annum. Mark the poor officer—he has four grades of from 20 to 35 years, with a pension of from £180 to £450 per annum. Consider also the duties to be performed. The Civilian's duties are conducted at quiet healthy stations, in their Bungalows or Cutcherries, with every comfort and luxury the climate demands, with a salary of thousands of rupees per month. The military man is obliged to be constantly prepared for field service in hill or jungle, so fatal to health, to battle against war and all its concomitant evils of sickness and a wretched climate, with the miserable salary of from 140 to 370 rupees per month (the pay of Captain, which is the highest grade any officer can now expect to attain after 20 or 22 years' service).

Should then the unfortunate officer who loses his health from field service, wounds, or climate, and from dire necessity, to save his life, is obliged to return to his native land, have the period of such furlough filched from his time of service? Reason forbids it, and justice denies it.

If the Army alone is to bear the brunt of all retrenchment, and the favoured Civil Service allowed to keep up such useless and expensive appointments as Second Councillors at Madras and Bombay, and many others that I can point out, independently of their over-paid salaries in general, the officers of the Army have nothing left but to memorialise.

In justice I will add that some gallant officers and gentlemen of the East India Direction have supported the cause of the Army, and in particular Major Sir J. R. Carnac. I have no doubt that Sir John Hobhouse, from the experience he must now have of Indian affairs, will clearly see the necessity and justice of allowing this deduction of a "sick furlough" as a boon to the Army, which will add as lasting a laurel to his fame and character, as any of the great and statesman-like acts he has performed since his joining the present liberal administration.

TRISTRAM'S OPINION UPON CAPTAINS SUPERINTENDENTS PRESIDING AT NAVAL COURTS-MARTIAL, AND PROVING THAT THE STYLE OF POST-CAPTAIN WAS UNLAWFULLY TAKEN AWAY FROM CAPTAINS COMMANDING POST SHIPS.

SIR,—A Correspondent, "Cato," in your Gazette of the 22nd ult., has submitted a very proper query, viz., "Are the Captain-Superintendents of Dock-yards in commission de facto or de jure." I was as much surprised as himself, on being informed that Captain Ross, R.N., the Superintendent of Plymouth Dock-yard, had presided at a Court-Martial, holden in Hamoaze, upon an officer of the Delight, brig-of-war, when the Plymouth, Chatham, and Bermuda yachts have been for two or three quarters out of commission by the Navy Lists, published by authority. In the several letters which I have written upon Naval Courts-Martial, I never offered a decided opinion upon the legality or illegality of a Captain presiding at a Naval Court-Martial, when commissioned to a civil appointment only, as that of a Commissioner or Superintendent of a Royal Dock-yard must ever be so considered, unless he is also bonâ fide a Captain of one of His Majesty's ships giving Post-Rank.

The position which I took against the illegality of Sir Thomas Usher, the Superintendent of Bermuda Dock-yard, with his pendant flying on board the Bermuda yacht at BERMUDA, was his presiding at a Court-Martial at Halifax, as Captain of His Majesty's ship Pyramus, then and there lying a hulk out of commission *. With the greatest deference and respect to the opinion and authority of the Law Officers of the Crown, Admiralty Solicitors, the Sea Lords of the Admiralty, Flag Officers, and the Captains of His Majesty's Fleets and Ships of War, I beg to submit my decided opinion, that a Captain-superintendent of a Dock-yard, if he holds a commission for a Dock-yard yacht only, cannot de jure preside as a member of a Court-Martial; admitting that Captain Ross, bonâ fide, holds a commission for the Plymouth yacht, he cannot be considered as Captain of one of His Majesty's ships, like one of those commanded by a Post-Captain on the 23d December, 1749, when the existing Naval Articles of War became a Law by an Act of Parliament. His Majesty's ships, of a particular number of guns, and His Majesty's yachts, officered and manned, although unarmed, at that period, alone gave Post-rank, when those ships and yachts were commissioned by the authority of the Lord High Admiral, or the Commissioners for executing that high office. Whatever were the Admiralty instructions or orders in Council relative to Post commands in December, 1749, can alone stand good in 1836, and up to that period when the legislature, in its wisdom, may deem a revision of the Naval Articles of War judicious and necessary. The custom of the Navy, in that particular, at that period, was made a Law, consequently, any new custom, relative to Post or separate commands, contrary to that law, must be held unlawful. The custom of the sea is Naval Law. The 36th Article of War enacts, that "All other crimes not capital, committed by any person or persons in the Fleet, which are not mentioned in this Act, or for which no punishment is hereby directed to be inflicted, shall be punished according to the Laws and Customs in such cases used at sea." If then, any person or persons, is or are to be punished by the Laws and Customs used at sea, surely he or they are to be tried by members considered as such by the Laws and Customs of the sea; hence, as it was not the law or custom in 1749, for the Commissioner of a Dock-yard, or a Captain of any ship or vessel, other than a ship of a particular number of guns, or one of the King's yachts; a Captain-Superintendent of a Dock-yard in 1836, whose only command afloat is that of a Dock-yard yacht, cannot lawfully be considered in commission as a Post Captain, either de facto or de jure.

If this argument cannot be controverted against the impropriety and illegality of a Captain-Superintendent of a Dock-yard, presiding at a Naval Court-Martial, so it must stand good against an Admiral-Superintendent of a Dock-yard, if not bonâ fide in commission as a Flag-officer in command of a fleet or squadron, or as a Port Admiral, an appointment (if my memory do not fail me) existing in 1749. An Admiral-Superintendent of a Dock-yard, with his flag flying on board of an unarmed, unofficered, unmanned, unwarlike, Dock-yard launch, hoy, pitch-boat, buoy-boat, lighter, or yacht, cannot be considered a Flag-officer in command of a fleet or squadron, or even of one of His Majesty's Ships of War, according to the true intent and meaning of the Naval Articles of War, or the custom or regulation of the Navy from time immemorial.

A Flag-officer or Captain-Superintendent of a Dock-yard, commanding the ships in Ordinary, when commissioned, would place beyond controversy the legality of either officer presiding, according to seniority, at a Naval Court-Martial until that arrangement is completed; a General or Field-officer has equally as much right to preside at a Naval Court-Martial as a Flag or Captain-Superintendent of a Dock-yard!!!

Among the most inexpedient and inconsistent innovations in the Custom and Law of the Naval Service, since the Peace, was the annihilation of the rank of Post Captain, because the "Articles of War," an act of the Legislature, still declare that part of the members constituting a Naval Court-Martial may be of the rank and denomination of POST CAPTAINS. Forms, in our Courts of Law, have ever been held sacred; but here is an evident abrogation not only of form, but of rank, particularised in a solemn Act of Parliament. I admit, in point of fact or justice, it signifies not, whether a prisoner or persons, is or are tried by a Naval Court-Martial, consisting of officers denominated Post Captains, or Captains only, being (understood to mean) the one and the same rank, if commanding His Majesty's ships above a particular number of guns; but the Law enacts, that they shall be of the denomination and degree of Post Captains; hence it was, in my opinion, an injudicious act of the Admiralty some years ago, to order and authorise an improper and degrading innovation, and an illegal informality in the denomination of the rank of our Royal Navy, Captains of Post ships, and members of Naval Courts-Martial.

A POST CAPTAIN and a FULL Colonel, appear to sound like officers of equal rank, but the style of Captain only to a Sea Colonel, compared with that of a Colonel, sound a difference, as great as really exists between the ranks of Colonel and Captain of a Company. TRISTRAM.

INTERNAL DEFENCE.

[At a time when so many speculations are afloat, and when the revival of the project of a Ship Canal from Portsmouth to London is contemplated, we take the opportunity of publishing the following observations in connexion therewith, which were drawn up and presented to his present Majesty, when Lord High Admiral, by Capt. Joseph Needham Taylor, Royal Navy, C. B., a gallant and talented officer, whose intended appointment to the Ordinary at Portsmouth has been generally rumoured.—ED.]

To His Royal Highness the Lord High Admiral of Great Britain.

MAY it please your Royal Highness to permit me to lay before you a plan of internal defence, by rendering the contemplated Ship Canal from London to Portsmouth a most important national work. And I hope I am not too sanguine in deeming it worthy of the patronage of your Royal Highness as Lord High Admiral. It has been admitted by Napoleon Buonaparte that the metropolis of England, being totally undefended by fortifications, prompted him to make an attempt of landing an army on some part of the northern coast opposite France, conceiving it practicable, by a sudden attack, to destroy its emporium, before sufficient force could be collected to oppose an invading army, similar to the dash on Washington.

The recent invention of steam, and its rapid improvement, afford a greater facility to such an attempt now than these circumstances. I beg to offer to your gracious consideration, the plan of erecting from the excavated earth from the Ship Canal, a rampart or military road, connecting the fortifications of Portsmouth with the metropolis. The expense of combining the two works would not be much more than carrying away the excavated earth, and would merely require the aid of the Engineer Corps, to render the canal-bank a complete line of defence, with a canal of 150 feet wide in front of the works. An enemy, disembarking to attack London or Portsmouth, would be compelled to land to the westward of Portsmouth, or to the northward of London, which would increase the hazard of the voyage, and prevent a possibility of an enemy reaching the metropolis, before a sufficient force of British bayonets could be collected. In lieu of lock-houses a small Martello Tower might be erected to carry one pivot gun, to be mounted during war.

As paddles of every description are objected to from the injury they do the banks of the canal, all vessels could be propelled by the following plan, and at a much less expense than by any invention now in use, and not liable to get out of order to impede or obstruct the navigation of the canal. To obtain the level of the Thames it would require about four or five locks; therefore, at every flood tide, a reservoir formed on the first level from the Thames, would admit a constant supply of water to turn at various stations a large wheel, or axle, to warp vessels by an endless chain, applicable to a plan in my possession. As steam is the fashion of the day, it might be used to turn the windlass, but at a great expense, and more liable to be out of order. Prompted by that feeling which actuates every officer when employed for the benefit of their country, that their zeal will be found under the protection of your Royal Highness, I have the honour to remain,

Your Royal Highness's most obedient servant,

JOSEPH NEEDHAM TAYLOR, C. B., Capt., R.N.

Belle Vue, Devizes, January, 1828.

Connected with this plan is an invention of Capt. Taylor to save a lock of water on vessels passing down the canal, the water being restored to the upper level by merely the aid of one man. This invention is important to all canals.

The Lord High Admiral was much pleased with the plan. When the danger of the voyage during a war from the Thames down channel is contemplated from steam privateers, and the safety of convoy from Portsmouth, had the canal been carried into execution, no doubt so important an internal defence would have induced the government to have supported this grand national work. It is to be regretted that it is not immediately proceeded in.

Railway Travelling.—A gentleman left Manchester in the morning, went to Liverpool, 30 miles off, purchased and took back with him to Manchester, on the rail-road, 150 tons of cotton. This he immediately disposed of, and the article being liked, an offer was made to take another such quantity. Off he starts again, and actually that evening delivered the second 150 tons, having travelled 120 miles in four journeys, and bought, sold, and delivered, 30 miles off, at two distinct and successive deliveries, 300 tons of goods in twelve hours.

About the year 1803, when the apprehension of invasion induced many of our peaceful citizens to form themselves into soldiers, a worthy Serjeant of the line who had been promoted to the Adjutancy of a Volunteer Corps, and was serving several of the Officers eating oysters at the mess table with great relish, was induced to take one. On tasting it, however, to the great amusement of the whole company, he threw it down with violence on his plate, exclaiming, "D—n your eyes, AS YOU WERE;" the real passion of drill being strong even in taste.

Venison.—In August, 1673, the Common Council of London forbade the venison feasts in the halls of the City, from their being offensive to Queen Elizabeth.

Homicide.—It was one of the maritime laws of Richard I., that the homicide should be tied to the dead body and cast into the sea.

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1836.

The effects of the engagement of the 5th inst. appear to have been attended with greater results than the mere raising of the siege of St. Sebastion, and dispossessing the Carlists from the heights from whence they had declared their resolution of burning the town. The severe trial which the newly-organised Legion has undergone, has not only terminated to their credit as brave soldiers, but it has enabled them to appreciate the characters of their officers, and established that reliance on each other, so necessary for mutual support; but, above all, they are acquainted with the extreme importance of their Naval allies. The measure of employing a corps of marines, supported by armed steamers, upon this service, will render it impossible for the Carlists to maintain any position upon the coast, and as the French seem resolved to prevent their receiving supplies by land, they are thus thrown entirely on their own resources.

The beautiful precision of fire from the ten-inch gun of the Phœnix has been the theme of general conversation this week, and the effect of what one gun, well directed and served, can produce even against stone walls thus practically displayed, and that from a distance of 1500 yards, must tend more than anything which could be said or written, to prove the importance of armed steam vessels in time of war. It is our belief, indeed, that so apparent will this become, when the time of trial arrives; so superior will a division of steam vessels, armed with heavy guns, throwing shells and hot shot, prove over Line of Battle Ships; that the latter will be in a great measure superseded, and the materials used in their construction and armament, as well as their crews, more profitably applied to steam vessels.

We have many times deprecated the evil policy which, on the score of saving a few pounds, brought about the reduction of that well-organised and invaluable corps, the Marine Artillary—a corps eminently calculated for steam vessels, and which should, on the contrary, have been extended, as the value of these and the probability of their adoption to a great extent became apparent. We have never met a Naval officer who has expressed a contrary opinion on this head, and it is even now not too late to amend the error, for most of the men reduced in 1830, are still serving in the Navy, and would doubtless return to their favourite corps. The merit of laying the gun and apportioning the fuze on board the Phœnix, has been assigned to Serjeant Mark Smith, of the Marine Artillery, but, without detracting from his ability, we are sure that every Serjeant and Bombadier in the corps was qualified for the duty. The great difficulty is in estimating the exact distance, when there is no opportunity available for taking the angle. In a former number we pointed out how this might be accomplished at one view, by means of Dr. Brewster's Telescope, and as this is a matter of great importance in Naval Gunnery, particularly for correct firing at long ranges, we shall take an opportunity of returning to the subject.

We have in former numbers submitted to the public and to the Military Authorities at the Horse Guards, a table of the rate at which the relief of Infantry Regiments in India has been effected, and by another table shown what regiments will become available for foreign service up to 1841. We have further pointed out how unequally the present system of reliefs operate with our regiments in India, and, in supporting the statement, have been reluctantly compelled to name several favoured corps, to which the best stations have been assigned during a succession of their tours of foreign service. We have also stated the glaring anomaly, that the regiments which serve in the least sickly and least disagreeable of our foreign stations enjoy the additional boon of leaving four company depots in their native land, and thus affording, by an interchange of officers and men, an abridgement of their nominal ten years' service abroad to an actual service of six years on an average. With this favouring system we have placed in juxta-position that adopted towards the regiments in India, which are doomed by it to suffer, in a scorching and baleful climate, a banishment of twenty years or upwards, leaving in England only one Officer, four Serjeants, four Corporals, and one Drummer to raise recruits, who are yearly embarked for India to keep up the full establishment there. We have suggested a remedy for the tardy reliefs from India, by sending out regiments, now available for foreign service, direct, and forwarding the four company depots of all regiments at or east of the Cape (particularly of those in Ceylon) to their head-quarters, leaving only a skeleton company at home, as is the case with corps in India and Australasia; for so long as the depot system of four companies is retained for regiments at and eastward of the Cape, the unequally pressing system of Indian reliefs must, from the small number of our regiments, necessorily continue. We hope that this recapitulation will draw the attention of the Quarter-Master General of the Army to the subject, and a representation to Lord Hill from such competent authority would probably effect a remedy for the crying grievance we have laid before the public.

We could pledge ourselves to prove that a great number of Courts-Martial in India have been caused by the protracted service of regiments in that country, so far removed as they are from the reflovating influence of European society, and the wholesome restraint exercised by the head of the Army over all ranks. The comparison which we could draw between the officers and privates of a regiment which has actually served fifteen years in India, and those of a regiment in almost any other part of the world, after ten years' nominal service would be such as, however well calculated to prove the truth of what we have stated in favour of relief not being deferred after fifteen years, we would regret to make, for it would do violence to the feelings of individuals, and only strengthen a statement already irresistibly strong.

It is a singular anomaly in our Naval service that while we employ a considerable number of officers of Royal Marines afloat, we neglect to avail ourselves of such assistance as they are qualified to afford the general discipline, and confining their duties solely to the care of their own men by Admiralty regulation incapacitate them from any command, or authority in the ships in which they serve. The injurious consequence of this system is that, uninterested in every thing that concerns the Naval Service, the officers so circumstanced soon cease to acquire knowledge totally useless, and seek, while on board ship, such amusements as are congenial to their taste, anxiously looking forward to the time of their disembarkation, to resume the exercise of the duties proper to their station in the service. Were there no occupations on board ship for which they are qualified, this state of comparative idleness must necessarily continue, but far from this being the case, many of the duties for which their previous education on shore qualifies even the most inexperianced, are but imperfectly performed for want of proper superintendence; of this class we consider those nominally required of the Master-at-Arms and Ships' Corporals, namely, the police service and the drilling of the seamen at sword and musket exercises.

We have said that the Masters-at-Arms and Ships' Corporals nominally perform certain duties for we have frequently found that Serjeants of Marines are called upon to instruct the small-arm men and boarders, and also that non-commissioned officers are taken from the detachments to act as Masters-at-Arms or Ships' Corporals, when the death or sickness of any of these functionaries, the difficulty of finding, when the ship is first commissioned, properly qualified sailors to fill the ratings, renders such a measure necessary. In ships where this latter arrangement is adopted, the officer of Marines is seldom pleased to find that, probably, his best non-commissioned officers are taken from their own department, either throwing additional duty on the others or forcing him to cause privates to perform services for which they are not paid, and to which they are frequently not inclined, having only a remote chance of promotion.

The alteration we propose in this branch of our Naval Service is, that all the duties now expected from the Master-at-Arms and his assistants, be transferred to the Commanding Officer of the Royal Marines, who should make a daily report of all prisoners in his charge, and all irregularities observed in that department during the preceding twenty-four hours, to the Commanding Officer of the ship; but, as it is impossible the senior Marine officer can have more than a general superintendence, he should, in large ships, direct the subaltern of the guard to visit frequently every part of the ship, and see that the non-commissioned officers properly perform the duties assigned to them, namely, that the ship's boys are inspected, the bumboats watched, the sailors properly instructed in the musket and sword exercises, the orders respecting fire and lights obeyed, and, short, that the whole internal discipline of the ship is such as will be approved of by the Captain.

To accomplish this purpose it will be advisable that an additional Serjeant be appointed in lieu of each Master-at-Arms, a Corporal of Marines in place of each ships' Corporal, and that the officer of Royal Marines be empowered to investigate all complaints made by those under his command, prior to his reporting to the Captain the names of such persons as may be charged with irregularities, thus freeing the Commander (or First Lieutenant) from much irksome detail, for which he has frequently but little time, and which materially interrupts more important occupations.

Having in a former number offered some observations on the hard case of officers who have obtained appointments as Governors or Lieut.-Governors of our Colonies being called upon to pay several hundred pounds, in the shape of fees, on their being nominated to those situations, we have further to express our sincere hope that not only will this unjust system be discontinued, but that also officers, of either profession, receiving these, or any other civil appointments, will no longer have the insignificant sum, which they receive as half-pay, stopped. In the cases, to which we now immediately allude, this is from 100*l.* to at most 250*l.* per annum, which they, as Colonels, or Lieutenant-Colonels in the Army, or Captains of the Navy, get, as a remuneration, for at least, on an average, thirty-five to forty years' service: and this allowance is now taken from them, if the appointment they obtain be above three times either of these amounts. The total saved in this manner cannot exceed five thousand a-year altogether, amongst the whole of the twenty or twenty-five old and meritorious Military and Naval Officers filling these situations; and this comparatively trifling sum, we are sure, a grateful nation would not desire to withhold from men who have devoted the best of their lives in their country's defence, and whose salaries, as Lieutenant-Governors of our different islands and settlements, are barely sufficient to enable them to support the situations they hold, being, in most of these places, but from a thousand to twelve hundred per annum. When we reflect on this small allowance to the Chief of a Colony, having this rank and station to uphold, we fearlessly ask, ought the humble stipend of half-pay, which they have gained after from thirty-five to forty-five years gallant services, to be taken from them whilst filling, for half a dozen years only, these appointments? We put it to Mr. Hume even, whether or not the present narrow-minded regulation should, in common liberality or fairness, be continued, and we feel confident that if he thinks it ought, but which we will not believe that he would desire, he is the only man in the United Kingdom, calling himself a liberal, who, on hearing all the facts of the case, will concur with him in such an opinion.

In the Brevet promotions of old Subaltern Officers to the unattached rank of Captains, we have been surprised to find that this favour has not yet been permitted to extend so far in the Royal Marines as in other corps, and we are the more astonished at this apparent unfairness, whilst we bear in mind the universally admitted high claims of the Marines to whatever boon a liberal nation may have to bestow upon its gallant defenders.

The senior ten, and we believe we may say fifteen, First Lieutenants in the Royal Marine corps have been, we understand, nearly twenty-eight years in it, and full twenty-four years of this period in active employ; the two or three years that some of this number may have been placed on half-pay, upon their being promoted to be First Lieutenants, was not at their own requests. Surely, then, no one will deny, but that these meritorious officers, who have been this length of time Subalterns, will merit the humble reward they seek, that of being placed on the unattached half-pay as Captains, to be called in as vacancies may occur in the corps, and they are the more led to hope that this favour will be granted to them, as this measure can be effected without any increase of expense to the Government; indeed, we are told, that a saving of sixpence per day, beside the allowance of coals and candles and some other extras, would, by this act of justice, be gained to the public.

We call the attention of our readers to the letter of Ganges in this day's Gazette. The arguments are so fair that we earnestly hope the Home Authorities will listen to the claim of the deduction of a "Sick Furlough," from the fixed periods of service for pensions,—no officer falls sick of his own free will, and it is therefore unjust to punish him for a visitation of Providence.

Mr. Waghorn, in his last letter, dated Alexandria, April 7th, tells us that Mehemet Ali has left Cairo a week or two since, to direct his whole attention to the agricultural improvement of his country. In his letter of March 15th, he assured us that all the cultivators of Egypt were reduced by the Pacha to the state of hired labourers, having seized upon all their property. The truth is, the inhabitants of lower Egypt, through which he passed to Alexandria, were terrified to such a degree that they fled whenever he approached, as he merely stopped in the villages for the purpose of seizing upon those men who appeared suited to fill the ranks of his Syrian army. The last intelligence from the Hedjias is anything but favourable. The new troops which had arrived had been attacked by the Amhs, and completely defeated. It has been reported that the Austrian, English, French, and Russian Consuls who had set out for Syria a short time ago, had proceeded thither on a party of pleasure. This is not the case; they are on a political mission, and have positive orders from their courts to obtain a reform of the great abuses which exist as regards the monopoly still exercised by Mehemet Ali. Enquiries are also to be made respecting the conduct of Ibrahim, who has, upon recent occasions, insulted and ill-treated several Consuls and other European subjects. It is a well-known fact that a very powerful English and French fleet will very shortly arrive on the coast of Egypt, and unless Mehemet Ali strictly conforms to certain regulations ordered by the Sultan in favour of England and France, the vessels of the former will be taken possession of by the combined fleet.

A letter from Baïrout states that Ibrahim, in his last visit to Aleppo, whither he had repaired under pretence of assisting at the nuptial ceremonies of the Governor with the daughter of an opulent Bey, occupies all his time about what he calls the conscription, which means that every individual whom he can seize, from the age of fifteen to fifty, is converted into a soldier, and sent off to Baïrout. In consequence of the great number of sick recruits, who were assembled at Aleppo, an hospital had been partly erected for their reception; but Ibrahim, with his wonted recklessness, has ordered the works to be suspended, and insisted upon the speedy termination of very extensive barracks, which are to serve as a receptacle for the unfortunate wretches who have been dragged from their homes. Ibrahim says that sick men are of no use to him, he wants soldiers to attack the Arabs, and soldiers he will have, coute qui coute. The fortifications of Colas-Boghaz are nearly completed, and the other fortifications of the defiles of the Taurus are in an advanced state. A great quantity of timber is expedited to Egypt for the arsenals, but the Governor will not pay for it; on the contrary, he compels the inhabitants to cut down the trees, and although the distance may be considera before the timber reaches the place of embarkation, unfortunate peasantry are obliged to perform this cor a Captain named El Seid accompanying them, w several companies of military, who drive them forw à coup de bâton; in fact, the Syrians are in a more co plete state of slavery than the negroes of America. less some alteration should soon take place, Syria will as depopulated as Egypt now is; indeed the necess agricultural labours cannot be performed, as every al bodied man has disappeared; the consequence is, t provisions are extremely dear, and the cattle have much decreased, that none can be found to cultivate land. Ibrahim has issued a decree that no more ox shall be slaughtered by the inhabitants—all must be s to his army under the severest penalties; and this st of things is called by Mr. Waghorn "tranquillity a happiness."

The accounts from Tripoli of a recent date are o highly favourable nature, and such measures have be taken by the Governor, Raeif Pacha, that in future will be out of the power of those who caused the seri disturbance in this province to bring misery upon a w meaning population, some of whom were unfortunat led away by the machinations of a restless set of villa Raeif Pacha, learning that the rebels had assembled Tadjorai, a small place nine or ten miles from Trip despatched an officer to assure them that, unless th sent in their submission, he would immediately ma against them. Upon their refusal, three regiments t possession of the town, and completely destroyed the surgents. Baitkji Molaisellim Osman has escaped i the interior. At the earnest solicitation of the princi inhabitants, after Colonel Kussein had arrived with artillery, another Molaisellim was nominated, and R Pacha has appointed his brother Moustapha Bey gov nor; since that period tranquillity is restored, the Ar and inhabitants of the mountainous districts have ret to their dwellings, and there is every reason to beli that these disturbances are completely at an end.

The daily complaints which we hear expressed, r tive to the Declaration now required to be made by h pay officers instead of the former oath, leads us to h that some more satisfactory regulation will very soon established, as this one has all the objectionable po connected with the administration of the oath befo magistrate, and, in addition to these, its form is thric long. We must repeat our perfect conviction, that t lines, written every quarter by each officer, decla upon his word of honour, that he had strictly comp with the rules required to be observed, would h binding as the most sacredly administered oath; bec the man who, holding a commission, would violate one would as readily violate the other. It should, at same time, be publicly signified, that the detection of slightest intentional deviation from the truth would eject the person, so far forgetting himself, to instant missal from the service of his Majesty for ever. The Duke of Richmond, himself a gallant and distinguis soldier, as a sincere friend to both professions, most berally did his best in the last Session thus to benefit officers of the United Service, and we are sure that his Grace has the power, he will again in every way p mote their interests and welfare.

We have already observed, in a former number, h much the Navy List for this quarter has been improv by the insertion in it of the dates of the different comm sions held in each successive grade by the Captains a Commanders. As to still further improvement, we wo suggest that this arrangement should be extended to Flag Officers also, and which could easily be done referring to the old lists of officers of the Navy in t Admiralty. A similar arrangement for the General a Field Officers of the Army, likewise, would be a gr desideratum, or even were it only confined to Gener and Colonels, it would prove of great utility, and wo well repay the trouble of compiling; we, therefore, mu hope that this too will, at an early period, be carri into effect. But the great deficiency of the month Army List is that it does not include the officers on ha pay, and that there is not an alphabetical arrangement in the Navy List.

The Royal Highland School Society held its sixty- ird anniversary dinner at the Freemasons' Tavern on turday last. The Duke of Richmond presided, and e Duke of Sutherland sat on the Noble Duke's right nd. The Chairman, in proposing "Prosperity to the stitution," expatiated upon the immeasurable advan- ges it had conferred upon the people of Scotland. om the Scottish nation the army and navy of Great ritain were recruited. He had had the honour of ren- ring his humble services in the former during the Pe- nsular war; and he could say, from his own personal servation, that, for endurance under suffering, for lour in the field, and humanity when it was won, the ldiers of Scotland were to be surpassed by no nation earth (cheers). The Chairman next proposed "The rmy and Navy of Great Britain, and Sir William Keir rant," who returned thanks. The Duke of Sutherland oposed "The Chairman," and in so doing took occa- on to expatiate on his heroic services in the field. The airman was sensible that the applause they had be- owed on the allusion to his humble services in the Pe- nsula was attributable not so much to their intrinsic lue (for there were far better and braver officers) as to e circumstance of his being present on that occasion o, no!). He was most happy to preside at so bene- olent and useful an association, for he saw no advantage being born to rank and station if they did not enable eir possessor to attempt to promote the welfare and ppiness of his fellow men (loud and continued cheer- g). The Secretary read the list of subscriptions, mong which were the following donations: His Majesty 0l., the Queen ten guineas, Duchess of Kent and Prin- ss of Victoria 30l., the Duke of Richmond 50l., the uke of Sutherland 25l., and Louis Philippe, the King f the French, 50l. The Chairman said, that as Duke Lennox they had done him the honour of requesting m to preside on that occasion; as Duke of Richmond ey had listened to him; as a Duke of France they would w permit him to propose his Majesty the King of the rench, whose munificent donation was a splendid in- ance of the anxious desire entertained by the reigning ntentate to promote the great cause of education mong all classes, and was one of the many gratifying oofs which were every day afforded of the harmony and od understanding which subsisted between France and ngland. The toast was received with the loudest accla- tions of applause. Several other toasts were pro- sed and duly acknowledged.

The Great Solar Eclipse.—On Sunday this sublime enomenon, the anticipation of which has excited so ch attention, was viewed under the most favourable spices. The eclipse commenced at eight minutes ty-eight seconds before two o'clock in the afternoon, l the course of the moon over the sun's disc was arly traced. At the time of the greatest obscuration, e eclipse could be viewed with the naked eye without n. The gloom at that time towards the south-east s very striking, but the darkness was not so great as ny persons were led to expect. As the dark circle ntinued moving over the face of the sun, gradually ving it, the light increased, and the fowls and birds, ich might be seen about three o'clock betaking them- ves to their houses, marvelling at the astonishingly ly coming of the grey twilight, resumed their cheer- ness and chirruping, and soon after half-past four lock the moon had finally passed over the great lumi- ry. Altogether the weather was as favourable and the as clear for viewing the eclipse, as was ever remem- ed on any former occasion.

The British Navy.—We are glad to observe that Captain Brenton, one of the oldest and most distinguished officers in the service, is about to publish an enlarged and improved edition of his "Naval Memoirs," in monthly numbers. It has been the misfortune of the Navy that its history has generally been written by men who, however qualified by classical education, have wanted those indispensible requisites which can only be acquired by professional habits, local knowledge, and constant attention. Hence it has arisen that many important events connected with the Navy have been improperly stated, and consequently have proved uninstructive to the rising generation, whose improvement should ever be regarded by the historian as the great object of his labours. Indeed, the interest and importance of a Naval history to this empire are incalculable, nor is any time more favourable for reviewing the the past, and preparing for the future, than a period of profound peace. Captain Brenton, who is about to renew his claims on the public attention, first entered the Naval service with the late Admiral Cornwallis in the year 1789, and ended his career at the time of Napoleon's surrender on board the Bellerophon in 1815. During this entire period, he had been in the habit of taking notes of every public event which came under his observation, and as the vast field of naval history lay unoccupied by any professional author, he determined to execute the task, the magnitude of which has occupied him for many years. This important work will be comprised in ten monthly parts, at 3s. 6d. each, and will be embellished with numerous finely executed portraits and other plates.

The cruise of the Prince de Joinville, son of the King of the French, in the South Seas remains uncertain; the only thing decided upon is, that his Royal Highness will sail in the Dilon for the Levant, and join in the manœuvres of the squadron on that station. The rendezvous is said to be fixed for the roadstead at Smyrna. The Prince will visit Athens and the principal towns of Greece.—Impartial.

Lord Harborough is residing at Stapleford Park, near Melton. His seclusion is never broken in upon by any intruder. Even the lady of his Love forms no part of his domestic establishment, but has taken wings and vanished, no one knows where. His Lordship is contemplating great improvements on the property.

It is rumoured in the higher circles that the visit to this country of the Prince of Orange and his sons is connected with some domestic matters of great public interest, which involve the consummation of the happiness of two exalted and highly interesting personages.

On Friday se'nnight, a Gentleman Cadet, named Smith, with two others, went into the Repository grounds at Woolwich to amuse themselves by fishing, when, while sitting across a plank, the above-named unfortunate youth slipped into the water, but as it was well known he was an excellent swimmer, his companions thought it a joke, and actually threw some small bits of wood at him; but one of them, named Wilson, observing he did not move, after a short interval, and with the assistance of the other young gentleman, got him out and laid him on the grass. Three gunners near at hand were despatched across the common to the hospital for a litter, before reaching which, he breathed his last, although life was far from extinct some time after he was brought out of the water. A Coroner's Inquest was held the next day; it was stated there was a most reprehensible neglect as the young gentleman should have been taken to the nearest place and assistance afforded, the Repository Sergeant having quarters on the ground; but from this lamentable want of discretion, the accident terminated fatally, as the youth had to be conveyed near a mile before any expedient could be resorted to endeavour to restore him. It must be remarked that his two friends were younger than himself, he being only fifteen years of age; he was the only son of the late Capt. Sir William Smith, Kt., who had served during the best part of the Peninsular War and at Waterloo, but who was unfortunately killed by falling from his jaunting car in the streets of Dublin, about twelve months ago.

The Bishop of Leon, accompanied by his chaplain, and escorted by a Lieutenant of the Gendarmerie, arrived at Strasburg on the 11th. In the course of his journey, all the bishops have visited him. His carriage was driven on his arrival to the Prefecture. The Prefect advised the Bishop to quit Strasburg forthwith, and cross the frontier. "I advise you to do so," said the Prefect, forgetting that the bishop had just travelled 200 leagues. "I do not deceive myself," replied the prelate, "an advice from you is an order. I am your prisoner, and must obey." "My prisoner," observed the Prefect, "no; only I shall not give you a passport unless you pledge me your word that you will not cross France again, if ever you endeavour to join Don Carlos." "You deem that you are doing your duty," replied the Bishop, "and I shall also do mine, by refusing such promise, because to me every promise is sacred, and I neither will nor can enter into such an engagement." The wish to get rid of as soon as possible of so inconvenient a visitor, caused his resistance to be overlooked; the Prefect gave the Bishop two hours to cross the frontier. The Bishop crossed the Bridge of Kelp at eight in the evening.—Quotidienne.

Horticultural Society.—On Saturday the first exhibition of flowers, and first distribution of prizes for the season, took place at the society's gardens at Chiswick. The extreme fineness of the day, especially after the late long period of unfavourable weather, attracted one of the most numerous and fashionable assemblages which ever graced the gardens. The exhibition of flowers was one of the best we have witnessed for a long time, and called forth the admiration of all present.

Game of Chess.—Amongst the novelties of the season an exhibition just opened at the Lowther Rooms deserves especial notice. It is a game of chess played on a board of considerable dimensions, with living characters, dressed in appropriate costumes, and arranged in sizes, with proper attention to their relative importance. To the lovers of that scientific game, we strongly recommend a visit to the Lowther Rooms, fully assured that it will afford them considerable interest. Those also who do not understand the game will derive much amusement from the novelty of the exhibition. The whole of the dresses are of a costly and elegant description.

The approach of the registration for the ensuing year, and the rumour of a dissolution, have excited so much interest among the Conservatives of the county of Middlesex, that they have determined on holding "high festival" in the ensuing month.

Robert W. Hall Dare, Esq., representative in Parliament for South Essex, died at Cranbrook-house, his residence in the country, yesterday morning.

"It is true," says a Brussels paper, "that on Sunday last, in a church at Brussels, the congregation were advised from the pulpit to provide themselves with holy water against the eclipse?" We can hardly believe it.

Sailors' Home, and Destitute Sailors' Asylum.—The conductors and supporters of these institutions, which, though now under the same management, are still separate establishments, held their annual meeting yesterday in Exeter Hall. A number of gentlemen of the Royal Navy and Merchant Service were present. Lord Radstock, R.N., was called to the chair. The Hon. Capt. Maude, R.N., moved the adoption of the report. Capt. V. Harcourt, R.N., seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously. Several resolutions were then moved and spoken to by Sir Henry Hart, R.N., Capt. Saurin, R.N., the Rev. N. Jones, and the Rev. S. Robins, &c., after which a collection was made, and the meeting separated.

Grand Fete Champetre, Regent's Park.—Although this week will be crowded with various amusements for the host of fashionables now in town, and although there will in most of these amusements be considerable attraction; yet we think that few of them will be able to compete with the splendid fete to take place in Mr. Jenkins's grounds on Thursday and Friday next. The company alone who are expected to be present will be sufficient to stamp it with a very high character, and the entertainments provided will be of the first order.

Epsom Races.—The weather has been colder at ever been equalled, certainly never surpassed—the weather was glorious, the company on Thursday and Friday brilliant in fashion and number. The race-ground was fitted up much in the old way, the Grand Stand being, as it ought to be, the focus of attraction to all who preferred "good society;" it was literally full. Tuesday—The Craven Stakes of 10 sovs. each, won by Sir L. Glyn's ch. c. Recruit. The Shirley Stakes of 25 sovs. each, won by Mr. Phillimore's Lady Anna. Sweepstakes of 30 sovs. each, won by Sir G. Heathcote's c. Lupus. Handicap sweepstakes of 10 sovs. each, won by Mr. Shelley's b. h. Airy. Wednesday—The Woodcot Stakes of 50 sovs. each, won by Capt. Williamson's b. c. The Gold Cup Stakes of 10 sovs. each, 20l added, won by Mr. Forth's Knobstick. The Ewell Stakes of 5 sovs. each, with 30 added, won by Col. Peel's b. m. Rosalie. The Epsom Stakes of 5 sovs. each, with 40 added, won by Lord Chesterfield's filly. Thursday—The Derby Stakes, of 50 sovs. each, h ft, for 3 yr. olds; colts, 8st 7lb; fillies, 8st 2lb. Last mile and a half. The owner of the second horse to receive 100*l.* out of the Stakes, and the winner to pay 100*l.* towards the expense of additional police officers. (128 subs.) Lord Jersey's b c Bay Middleton (Robinson) 1st; Lord Wilton's ch c Gladiator (Scott) 2d: nineteen also started, but were not placed. There was a good deal of altercation after the race with respect to the start, several of the jockies insisting that it ought not to have been suffered, inasmuch as the Athenian never went up to the post; the starter, per contra, declared that it was a bona fide start, and so it was decided. Lord Jersey and his friends are very large winners, and the betting men, with one or two exceptions, losers; some of the balances are so heavy on the debtor side, that an indifferent settling is anticipated. The winner is bred of a running family on both sides. The Headley Stakes, of 5 sovs. each, with 25 added, was won by Col. Peel's ch. f. Arsenic. The Croydon Stakes, of 5 sovs. each, with 35 added, was won by Mr. Cooper's ch. g. Edward. Friday—The Oaks Stakes of 50 sovs. each, h ft 98 subs. Mr. Scott's Cyprian (Scott) 1st; Mr. Houldsworth's Destiny 2d. Won by half a length. Twelve started.

A disturbance took place late on Thursday evening on Epsom Downs, which was productive of serious consequences. It appears that two rival gangs of gipsies had quarrelled and got to blows. A cry of "Murder" was raised, and a policeman named Girdler ran to the spot. He was immediately struck down, stabbed in the arm, and his head cut open. A second, named Wright, proceeded to his relief, and was stabbed in two or three places; nor was it till several other policemen arrived that their companions were rescued and the gipsies secured. A subscription has been opened for Girdler and Wright, who are dangerously wounded.

The Hon. Berkeley Craven committed suicide yesterday, by shooting himself with a pistol. The deceased, it appeared, was a loser by the Derby stakes to an enormous extent; some say as much as 30,000*l.* As soon as the result of the race became known, he was observed by his friends to be excessively agitated; and in this state he left Epsom, and arrived at his residence the same (Thursday) night. He flung himself on the sofa in the parlour in a state of mental distraction, and all attempts to solace him being in vain, the domestics were forced reluctantly to leave him, and retired to bed at a late hour. About six o'clock the following (yesterday) morning, one of the female servants came down stairs, and, on entering the parlour, a most appalling spectacle was presented to her view; the body of her master was found extended on the floor, deluged in blood, which had flowed from a frightful wound in the head, and near him lay a large duelling pistol, with which it was evident the deed had been perpetrated. He was about fifty years of age.

It was a dispute respecting the marriage settlement which broke off the marriage between Lord Villiers and Lady Mary Herbert.

Shambler, on appointment to H.M.S. Lightning; Com. Woodriff, R.N.; Capt. Colquitt, R.N.

His Majesty's next Levee will take place on Friday, the 27th inst. instead of Wednesday the 25th.

The Drawing-Room to be held at St. James's Palace, on Saturday, the 28th inst., being for the celebration of his Majesty's birthday, the Knights of the several Orders are to appear in their collars.

Their Majesties will return to St. James's on Monday, and remain in town for several days. On Wednesday his Majesty will entertain a small party at dinner; and on Friday and Saturday her Majesty will give two grand concerts. The first will include all the eminent foreign artists, vocal and instrumental, now in London:—the second will embrace the deservedly popular English singers and musical professors, to whom her Majesty has always been a munificent patron. Sir G. Smart will direct and lead the English concert. There will also be a dinner party at the Palace on Saturday, after the Queen's Drawing-Room, in celebration of his Majesty's birthday.

His Majesty's Letter Patent has passed the Great Seal, appointing Lord Plunket, the Archbishop of Dublin, and Major-Gen. Sir E. Blakeney, Commanding the Forces in Ireland,—Lords Justices of Ireland. The King has appointed F. H. Talman, Esq., M.A., one of his Majesty's Hon. Corps of Gentlemen at Arms, v. T. Reeve, resigned.

The King has appointed Samuel Gardner, Esq., to be his Majesty's Consul at Jassy.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, 16th May.—On the motion for the recommitment of the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill, the Marquis of Lansdowne declared that he would resist the Bill in its present shape in all its future stages, and that he should move the third reading merely for the purpose of affording the House of Commons an opportunity of knowing how their Lordships had dealt with the Bill which was sent from that House.

Tuesday, 17th May.—The Marquess of Londonderry presented a petition from certain inhabitants of Belfast, praying for the abolition of the punishment of death, except in cases of murder. He took the opportunity of asking Lord Mulgrave if it was his intention to appoint Mr. Finlay, the editor of The Northern Whig, to a situation in the Stamp-office? Earl Mulgrave did not intend to give place to Mr. Finlay, and for the best of reasons—he had it not in his gift. The Earl of Winchilsea presented the petition of F. Leigh, Esq., of Rose Garland, Wexford, complaining that after having been nominated to fill the office of high sheriff for that county, his appointment had been cancelled by the Irish Government, and an individual not named by any of the judges sworn in in his place, and praying the House to institute an inquiry into the circumstances. The petitioner stated that he had heard that the cause of his removal was the supposition of his being an Orangeman; but he denied being a member of that society. The Earl of Mulgrave said with respect to the petitioner he had rejected him in the firm belief that he was an Orangeman, and having previously determined, with the sanction of H. M.'s Ministers, that no one connected with secret societies should be appointed to any office in his gift. After a lengthened discussion the petition was laid upon the table.

Wednesday, 18th May.—The Earl of Clare gave notice that he should, on the 31st inst., present a petition from the E. India Company on the subject of the sugar duties. On the motion of the Duke of Richmond the despatch received at the Admiralty detailing the particulars of the late action at St. Sebastian was laid upon the table.—The Marquess of Lansdowne moved the third reading of the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill, and begged it to be clearly understood that he did so merely because he thought it right and fitting that the other House of Parliament should be apprised of the way in which their Lordships had dealt with the measure," and as that was the only course by which they could be duly made acquainted with the state of every on this great question. The Marquess of Clanricarde protested against the Bill as being an insult to the Irish people. The Earl of Haddington strongly denied that the course adopted was an insult to the Irish people. The Duke of Richmond moved that schedule A, in the first clause, be left out, and another schedule, including the towns of Belfast, &c., be substituted. The effect of this amendment would be to continue the corporations in the larger towns. A debate ensued, after which, the House divided, when the numbers were—non-contents present, 80; proxies, 61—141. Contents, present, 45; proxies, 37—82. Majority against the amendment, 59. The Duke of Richmond then proposed as an amendment on clause 31, to leave out the words, "The recorder for the county of the city of any town shall not be disqualified from sitting in Parliament." But this was also negatived without a division. Another amendment by Lord Templemore, for the purpose of constituting the town of Belfast a county of a city, for all the purposes of this Bill, was also negatived. The Bill was then passed.

Thursday, 19th May.—The Royal assent was given by commission to a great number of public and private Bills.—Lord Glenelg presented a petition from the Legislative Council and Assembly of New Brunswick deprecating any change in the timber-duties. Lord Glenelg said that there was no intention of making any change during the present session.

Friday, 20th May.—The Royal assent was given by commission to several Bills.—The Manchester and Leeds Railway Bill, the Teignmouth Improvement Bill, and the Leeds and Derby Railway Bill, were severally read a second time. The great North of England Railway Bill and the Hungerford Market Incorporation Bill were read a first time. The Marquis of Lansdowne moved that the House adjourn till to-morrow, with the understanding that to-morrow, after the judicial business is over, the House will adjourn to the 30th inst.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 16th April.—Mr. Maxwell brought up the report of the committee on the Dublin election. The committee found that Daniel O'Connell, Esq., and Ruthven, Esq., were not duly elected, and that C. Hamilton, Esq., and J. B. West, Esq., are duly elected and ought to have been returned to serve in the present Parliament for the city of Dublin. The committee specially reported that certain voters were struck off the poll as having voted from corrupt motives, but that there was no evidence that Messrs. West and Hamilton were implicated in these corrupt practices.—On the motion of Lord G. Lennox the time allowed to the committee on the London and Brighton Railway to report their report, was extended to 25th June.—Sir A. Hay moved the further consideration of the Tay Harbour and Docks Bill; upon which the Attorney-General moved that the further consideration of the Bill be postponed for three weeks, in order that the committee about to be appointed to inquire into the state of Leith harbour should have an opportunity of making their report. The amendment was rejected by a majority of 153. The numbers being, for the motion 15, against it, 15.—Mr. Bannerman moved that the Aberdeen Schools Bill be referred back to the select committee which had already reported upon it, which was seconded by Mr. R. Ferguson. Captain Gordon opposed the motion. Mr. Poulter was of opinion that the committee had gone greatly beyond their power in deciding against the principle of a Bill which had been affirmed by the House on a second reading. Sir G. C. Mr. Lefroy, and Mr. Pringle opposed the motion, and Capt. Wemyss supported it. The House then divided. For the motion, 158; against it, 107; majority, 51.—Mr. Roebuck moved that this House resolve itself into a committee to take into consideration such parts of the 31st Geo. III., c. 31, as relate to the Executive and Legislative Councils of the Canadas, for the purpose of rendering the same efficient to the good government of those provinces. Sir G. Grey contended that the House ought not to entertain the motion, the object of which was to make the Parliament of Great Britain the medium of settling the question between the Legislative Assembly and Executive Government without waiting for the report of the Commissioners of Inquiry. Mr. Roebuck cordially joined the Government in resisting the motion. Mr. Hume suggested that the Hon. Member for Bath should withdraw his motion. The motion was withdrawn.—On the motion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer a select committee was appointed to inquire into the Leith Harbour Debt.

Tuesday, 17th May.—Messrs. West and Hamilton took the oaths and their seats.—Sir C. Knightley inquired if it was intended to introduce the motion for the repeal of the stamp duties on newspapers, as it was his intention to move an amendment for the substitution of a end of newspapers? The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHE-QUER proposed that the Bill be committed pro formo be-re the holidays, in order to have it printed, and the cussion to take place on it the first Friday after the lidays. Mr. MORRISON moved "That in all Bills r railways, or other public works of that description, it made a condition, with a view to the protection of the blic interests, which might otherwise be seriously com-omised, that the dividends be limited to a certain rate, that power be reserved to Parliament of revising and ing at the end of every twenty years the tolls charge-le on passengers and goods conveyed, or the services ndered by the same." Lord STANLEY recommended e Hon. Gent. to withdraw the motion, and to move r leave to bring in a Bill imposing upon all railroads e condition that they should be subject to the revision Parliament at the end of such a time as Parliament ould think fit to fix. The motion was withdrawn, on e understanding that the Hon. Member would introduce Bill to the effect stated by Lord Stanley. The rest the sitting was occupied with the motion of Mr. WAL-ACE for a commission to proceed to Carlow to inquire to the circumstances set forth in the petition of N. A. igars, Esq., relative to the persecution and ejectment Parliamentary electors by removing them from their mes and possessions, and otherwise coercing and mal-ating them, &c. A long discussion ensued, after hich the House divided, when the motion was lost by ; the numbers being, ayes, 52; noes, 123. The use then proceeded to the consideration of the Lords' endments on the Irish Constabulary Bill, but before uch progress was made, Lord COLE moved that the ouse be counted, and there being only 31 Members esent, the House adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, 18th May.—The Port of Carlisle Dock ll, the York North Midland Railway Bill, the Dundee d Newtyle Railway Bill, the Manchester and Leeds ailway Bill, the Newry Navigation Bill, and the North England Railway Bill, were severally read a third time d passed.—On the motion for the third reading of the ver Inclosure Bill, it was moved as an amendment, at the Bill be read a third time that day six months. fter some discussion, and two divisions, the amend-ent was carried, and the Bill consequently lost.—Mr. ACLEAN inquired if any account had been received the Admiralty of the number of killed and wounded board H.M's ships in the recent affair at St. Sebas-an, and was informed by Mr. WOOD that no loss what-ver had been sustained.—Sir A. AGNEW moved the econd reading of the Lord's-day Bill. Mr. WARD oved as an amendment that it be read a second time at day six months. On a division the numbers were—r the amendment, 75; against it, 43; majority against e second reading, 32. The House went into commit-e on the Tithes Commutation Bill. On sect. 76 being ad, Mr. T. DUNCOMBE moved, "That from and after e passing of this Act, all tithes of fish or of fishing, or personal tithes, shall cease and determine." The mmittee divided—for the amendment, 50; against it, ; majority, 46.—The Irish Constabulary Force Bill as agreed to, after a struggle made by Lord COLE and r. SHAW, to have the members of the Friendly Bro-ers' Society excepted from the operation of that clause the Bill which prevented members of secret societies tering the constabulary force.

THURSDAY, 19th May.—The Municipal Corporations reland) Bill was brought down from the Lords. Lord HN RUSSELL stated his intention was to move that e amendments be read a first time and printed, and hen printed, their effect upon the principle of the easure would be fully and clearly understood. He was illing to make every concession consistently with jus-e and the dignity of the branch of the Legislature hich he was addressing, but he would not be a partici-tor in depriving the people of Ireland altogether of unicipal government. Sir G. SINCLAIR said there was public assembly at this moment in the empire which joys a larger share of the confidence, respect, and gra-tude of the religious, moral, and intelligent classes of e community than the House of Lords. Mr. HUME oped that the House would never rest satisfied until it ad carried through the Legislature measures of equal stice to Ireland. Let collision come when it might, the ouse of Commons had not sought it. Sir JAMES GRA-AM said that the concessions already made to the people of reland had not had the good effects expected from them, nd the time had arrived when they ought to pause. A ery spirited debate ensued, after which the amendments ere ordered to be printed, and to be taken into consi-emtion on Wednesday the 1st June.

FRIDAY, 20th May.—Mr. O'Connel took the oaths nd his seat for Kilkenny, and gave notice that on the 21st June next he should move for leave to bring in a Bill to reform the House of Lords.—The Trinity Harbour Bill was read a 3rd time and passed.—Mr. TOOKE moved the 2d reading of the Gravesend Pier Bill. After some discussion the House divided, when there appeared for the Bill, 14; against it, 90; majority against the Bill, 76.—The Hungerford Market Bill was read a 3d time and passed. The House at its rising adjourned to the 30th.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence

SPAIN.—Madrid, May 9.—The news from St. Sebastian, with details of the decisive victory gained by the British Legion over the Carlist forces in their fortified position on the heights of Ayeta, has spread universal joy among the well-disposed of this capital. The Gazette publishes Gen. Evans's despatch. "The Spanish and English troops," he says, "rivalled each other in valour and perseverance in overcoming the difficulties which this military operation presented." Gen. Evans pays a very just tribute to "the efficient and opportune co-operation afforded by the ships under the command of Lord John Hay." The service rendered by the Phœnix, Capt. Henderson, is described as of the utmost importance.

The Espagnol states the force of the Carlists at 3,000, their loss at 600 or 700 killed and wounded, among whom were 80 officers. All accounts concur in describing the resistance of the Carlists as most determined. In one part of the field of action, measuring not more than 25 square yards, it is said that not fewer than 75 bodies were counted.

By the last accounts, it seems that Cordova had marched from Murgaia, in the direction of Villalba de Fasa, distant 13 or 14 leagues from Murgaia. A letter from Bayonne, in the National, states that the British Legion is demoralised and discouraged by its victory.

Carlist Account.—"The arms of the King have obtained a new victory in the person that has been given to the British Legion under Evans, on the morning of the 5th, before St. Sebastian. As many as 6,000 men sallied forth from that place at four in the morning, and were several times vigorously repelled: but receiving re-inforcements from the steamers, so as to complete 9,000, and favoured by the fire of the British ships, our troops, not 3,000 strong, withdrew to the heights of Oriamendi, where they remain, in good order, and with little loss. That of the enemy is more than 1,000, including 52 officers—one a Colonel. His Majesty's government im-mediately ordered reinforcements to proceed towards St. Sebastian yesterday. They must have reached Hernani, with the Com.-in-Chief at their head. This glorious affair, which will ever be celebrated by loyal Spaniards, nevertheless cost us a painful sacrifice in the loss of the brave and meritorious Gen. Sagastibelza, deeply lamented by his Majesty as well as all who knew him and valued his services. The King and the Infante, Don Sebastian, continue in the enjoyment of good health, &c.

"JUAN B. DE ERRO.

"Elorria, May 10, 1836."

HOLLAND.—It has been decided by the royal resolu-tion that the maximum of the pensions to be granted to persons in office, belonging to the old pension fund, as well as to the widows and children, shall not exceed 4,000 florins.

BELGIUM.—The Belgians are now bestirring them-selves in commerce. A society of Antwerp merchants have lately purchased in England a fine steam-vessel of 500 tons, called the Princess Victoria, which now runs regularly between Antwerp and London, and for which the society have obtained the privilege of the Belgian flag.

AUSTRIA.—The Emperor and Empress have returned to Vienna, after a visit to the capital of Hungary. They were received by the people there with many demonstra-tions of attachment. The Session of the Diet was closed by the Emperor. The Empress spoke her Latin answer to the address with great propriety and elegance. The Archduchess Maria Louisa is daily expected at Schoen-brunn. She will remain there till next autumn, and will accompany the imperial family to Prague, for the solem-nity of the coronation. The Dukes of Orleans and Nemours are expected at Vienna at the beginning of next month.

PORTUGAL.—The Prince Royal of Portugal has re-cently been indisposed, with symptoms of a malady very closely resembling that which proved fatal to his prede-cessor. This coincidence had naturally produced a great deal of speculation, and not a little alarm, for the patient has made himself very popular. He has, however, mas-tered the attack, and is now in a safe way of recovery. The complaint of both the Royal consorts was in the chest; but the living one, with better fortune, declined the prescriptions of the Portuguese Court physician, and trusted altogether to the adviser whom he had brought with him from Germany, and who has been successful in bringing him through.

GREECE.—The troubles in this kingdom are now said to have been everywhere put down, and the Government appears to have gathered strength from their suppression. During King Otho's absence upon a visit to Munich, where he is expected on the 15th or 20th of the present month, the government will be administered by Count Armensperg.

Theatres.

LYCEUM.—A melo-drama, called [The Smuggler of St. Brieux, was performed on Monday evening, and re-ceived with more favour than its merits entitle it to. This piece was performed a few years since at Covent Garden Theatre, under the title of The Smuggler Count, and was laid on the shelf after a run of a few nights. Its reproduction was uncalled for; it is not an effectly drama, nor is it as well played as it was when first pro-duced. The only parts worth notice, were those sus-tained by Mrs. Keeley, Mrs. Matthews, and Mr. Mc Ian. Oxberry was miserably imperfect in the little he had t do, and Serle was never more out of his element than in the part of Paul. We wish Mr. Keeley and Mr. Wilson were added to this company.

STRAND.—This theatre has been crowded to suffoca-tion during the week, in consequence of the decided hi of a burlesque called Othello, a travestie on the traged of the same name. The piece is from the pen of Mr. Dowling, the Superintendent of the Dock-yard Police Liverpool, and has been played in the provinces wit great success. It abounds in humour and fun, and is very complete parody on the principal situations in th tragedy. The parts of Othello and Iago were cleverl sustained by Mr. Hammond and Mr. Hall; they were highly comic and effective, and sang the songs allotted t them with considerable humour. The other characters were well played by Benson Hill, Mr. Atwood, Mr. Simpson, and Miss Daly. To those who wish to enjoy a hearty laugh we recommend a visit to the Strand Theatre. The Married Rake has been produced, and i a decided favourite, though by no means so well acted a it was at the Queen's Theatre.

Mr. O. Bull's grand concert at the King's Theatre, this evening, promises to be the richest musical treat of the season.—Miss Faucitt and Mr. Kemble are to appear a Covent Garden, in Knowles' play of The Wife. This play has not been acted these four years. We trust there will be a crowded house, as it is for the benefit of the valuable public servant, Mr. Nutter, the Box-book keeper.

EXPERIMENTING.

SOME years since, when the late Lord Orford, who was well known in Norfolk as "the Lord Orford," and "the eccentric Lord Orford," was raising in that county a considerable corps of Militia, or volunteers, (which, by the way, he dressed in a very singular and grotesque uniform,) his choice for the officers necessarily fell upon county gentlemen and yeomen, who, devoted to agricul-tural pursuits and field sports, were generally men of little education and refinement, either in mind or man-ners. Good-hearted, honest fellows, undoubtedly they were, but inimitably vulgar, and perfect in their provin-cial idiom. Amongst these Cymons shone conspicu-ously a Mr. G——tt, who in process of time became Lieut.-Col. G——tt, and used frequently to dine at Lord Orford's table with his brother officers. At one of these official dinners, balloons, and their capability of applica-tion to military purposes, became the subject of conver-sation, when Lord Orford directed the attention of the party to parachutes, then a recent invention, relate several experiments that had lately been made with them and particularly explained their use in bringing living creatures unharmed to the ground. Colonel G. listene with profound attention to this discourse, and said nothing; not, however, as it afterwards appeared, "from want of thought," since, dining subsequently with Lord Orford, he suddenly broke out in the middle of dinner in his uncouth way of laughing and speaking, with "Haugh! haugh! haugh! my lord, 't won't du, 't won't du at all, I tell yoo, for I've tried it."—"What won't do and what have yoo tried, Colonel?" asked his lordship —"Why that there experiment o' yours, the pair o' sheets experiment to be sure; but I knew all the while you was talking about it, 't wouldn't du, and 't won't."—"And how have you tried it?" asked Lord Orford.—"Why when I got home I thought a good deal about what you said, and without letting my wife know a word of the matter, I pops her tortoise-shell cat into a pair o' sheets, and a pair of our finest too, and souses her down from the top of our church steeple, fully expecting, after all your fine talk, to find her alive and merry when I went to look. But lo, and behold! there laid the pair of sheets, and, untying 'em, there laid the cat too, poor creature, trig—trig—trig, in the agonies of death; she died, my lord, in a few minutes after, and, lauk! I've never been able to look my wife in the face since!"

An eccentric gentleman, well known some years since to the literary and philosophical world of Edinburgh, once took it into his head to make experiments on the centripetal and centrifugal forces. Being in the country he caused a stout post to be firmly fixed in the ground, and attached horizontally upon its top a large cart wheel, which, by a simple mechanism of pulleys and ropes, we

…ade to revolve on its axis at his own pleasure with …nazing rapidity. His prime idea was to try the effect … those forces, by which the planets are kept in their …aces, upon the human system, and he prevailed at …ngth upon a simple rustic to become the subject of his …periment. Our philosopher accordingly bound his …ctim upon the spokes of the wheel, with his feet touch…g the nave, and his head reclining upon, or hanging …er, the rim. Now, the effect of this arrangement was, … cause the man, had he been laid unbound upon the …heel, to fly off it at a tangent, as soon as it was set in …ntion, by the power of the centrifugal force, the attrac…on of his own body, and the rim of the wheel being … sufficient counteractives to keep him upon it. This, …d much more of philosophical and scientific, our specu…tor had not considered, so when the unhappy peasant …as bound, whirr! whirr! whirr! went the wheel, and …ound and round spun the man, at an inconceivable rate, …ttle aware that he was in the extremest danger of going …ther further than the experimentalist intended; fortu…ately, however, after a few rounds, our philosopher …ought he might as well observe and inquire what had …een the effect of his experiment, and therefore stopped …e wheel, when, to his infinite dismay, he beheld the …apless rustic black in the face, senseless, motionless, …d, to all appearance, dead; the centrifugal force, …hich could not cause a bound man to fly off the revolv…g body to which he was attached, had, nevertheless, …cted by violently impelling all the blood in his body to …s head, and a turn or two more must inevitably have …ent him to the country from whence is no return, in a …t of apoplexy. Our worthy instantly apprehended the …ause of this mishap, and as instantly devised a remedy: …uick as lightning unbinding the man, he reversed his …osition, placing his head at the nave, and his feet on the …im of the wheel; then, fastening him as before, he again …ent it swiftly round, and lo! with such infinite success …as this mode of performing the experiment attended, …het it is credibly asserted when the man of science next …topped the wheel, and looked at his patient, he found …im perfectly recovered, and quite unconscious that any …hing particular had befallen him, setting aside the vertigo …hich necessarily resulted from this novel mode of taking …xercise.

Literary Notices.

The Despatches, Minutes, and Correspondence of the Marquess Wellesley, during his Administration in India. Edited by Mr. M. Martin. Vol. I. John Murray.

We are glad to add this to the standard works of refer…nce for Indian history. The present volume commences …ith Lord Mornington's correspondence from the Cape …f Good Hope in February 1798, while on his voyage to …ndia to assume the Governor-Generalship, and it closes …ith the fall of Seringapatam: thus embracing the origin …s well as the termination of the eventful war in Mysura, …erhaps the most important period in Indian history. The next volume will be the Mahratta war. The work …s compiled with that skill and industry Mr. Montgomery Martin has displayed in his several literary undertakings.

Narrative of a Journey to the Zoolu Country, in South Africa. By Capt. A. F. Gardiner, R.N., undertaken in 1835. W. Crofts.

A missionary spirit induced the author to undertake the journey and to publish the book. He says—"His single aim, he trusts, has been the glory of God, and if, after the indulgent perusal of the facts he shall narrate, a more ardent zeal for the instruction of our fellow-creatures in the truths of Christianity, and a more sincere personal devotion of time and energy to the cause of Christian Missions, especially in Southern Africa, shall be induced, he shall deem that he has not written in vain, but thank God, and take courage." The work, though sketchy, is in many respects interesting; but the religious object of Captain Gardiner would, we think, have been more advanced, had he not introduced an abundance of very second-rate pious poetry, which has no connexion with the remarkable history of the Zoolu country, and ill assorts with our view of the Missionary character.

Charges against Custom and Public Opinion. By the Rev. H. Jeffreys, A.M. Smith, Elder, and Co.

The reverend author is a determined supporter of the "Temperance Cause;" his exposure of the mischief arising from intemperance—that it endangers the property of the rich, debars the poor from rising in the world, and is at all times demoralising to society, may, and we hope will, lead many to relinquish the pernicious habit of indulging in ardent spirits. The little tract contains some excellent reasonings.

The Art of Cookery. By John Mullard. Whittaker and Co.

This is a new edition of an excellent a cookery book as any that we know of. Those who have visited the Beulah at Norwood appreciate highly the catering of the Maitre d'Hotel, John Mellerd, and he may justly expect that his friends will not be averse to receive the receipts for those dishes they have so often welcomed when set before them. We further recommend the work for two of the best reasons; the most frugal may consult it on the score of economy, and the most ambitious cook, for the sake of a guide to scientific principles and refined luxury.

The Priors of Prague. By the author of "Cavendish." 3 vols. John Macrone.

We have before had to do with Mr. Johnson Neale, and we are not sorry to meet with him again, for though in his Naval Novels there was much to blame, still there was talent which placed him considerably above the level of the herd of novelists. The present work is an assumed autobiography of the son of Lady Mary Wortley Montague: it is extravagant in the extreme, full of extraordinary adventures and improbabilities, but related in that off-hand, gay, and lively style, that must render the volumes piquant to all who can find time to read works of this character. Mr. Neale, it appears, has not forgotten his sea life, and he gives us a vivid picture of a shipwreck, which we shall transfer to our columns, as calculated to interest many of our readers.

"In a few minutes our guides halted, and we distinctly beheld the form of a fine large cutter, over which the sea was breaking with resistless impetuosity. She lay only a few hundred yards from the shore, and as the light of the moon occasionally brightened amid the cloud, we could perceive all that was going on upon her deck. . . . The topmast and bowsprit were carried away, but the mainmast and its rigging still remained secure. On the lee-side of the latter were crowded a number of human beings; a few also were crouching down on the forecastle, to shelter themselves behind the butts and bulwarks. From those, as each sea broke over them with terrific fury, we heard a dull cry of agony, as if men, worn out in vain contention with death, could not yet fall its victim without the involuntary utterance of horror. . . . For a while the objects of our fears became obscured from view in the mass of towering foam, and this as suddenly falling back to the sea, streamed off from their unhappy bodies, and exposed them to the piercing blasts of the bitter wintry wind. . . . As this horrid spectacle was presented to our eyes, it was in vain that we consulted as to any means of saving them; that any boat could have lived in such a surf was utterly impossible. I proposed that we should make a raft, and try and push off to them on that, but courageous as Dutch seamen are, they assured me the project was equally futile. . . . I then considered the possibility of getting a hawser out to the vessel. This, in the teeth of a gale of wind, was found utterly impracticable. The only hope then that remained, was to hail them, and desire them to bend a rope round an empty cask, fling it overboard, and let it drift on shore. By this means, a hawser might have been hauled from them, although one could not be sent to their assistance. We had brought a speaking trumpet with us, and each in turn now hailed the unfortunate vessel, endeavouring to make them comprehend our plan. . . . Here again the wind was directly against us, and we received no answer to our call, but the short and awful wail that decreased in strength as each successive sea poured over them. . . . Thus, then, we were compelled to stand silent and helpless spectators. It was suggested among us that the tide would soon begin to fall, and gradually leave the vessel dry. This appeared our only hope, and all that was left for us was to watch in horror and await the result. . . . We had been standing on the shore thus planning and debating half an hour, when we observed the doors of the after companion hatch open, and one or two gentlemen, seemingly passengers, make their way upon deck. . . . The moon had been gradually brightening, and we could now observe far more minutely all that took place on board the wreck. Scarcely had these men emerged from the hatchway, when a terrific sea poured full upon the decks of the devoted vessel with a dull heavy beating sound, that reached us even where we stood. . . At first we imagined that the passengers must inevitably have been washed over board, but as the sea swept across the slant of her deck, we perceived them breasting the surge, and manfully maintaining their hold. The force of the water at one blow demolished and carried off the whole of the glass and railwork which surmounted and protected the cabin; and its defences being swept away, the water rushed down in one vast volume. . . . A scream, never to be forgotten by those who heard it, was now borne along the tempest. No male voice ever could have given utterance to such a sound, and the whole of us at once exclaimed, 'There are women in her!' The words had barely passed our lips, when the inside of the vessel filled, and overflowing with this tremendous flood, a jet of water burst from the cabin sky-light sufficiently strong in volume to bear up a small trunk which floated overboard, and was gradually washed to our feet. . . . The three or four men who had issued from the companion hastened forward to find protection in the rigging or on the forecastle, while one of the seamen made his way aft and looked down into the cabin skylight, as if to enquire whether anything could be done to save those whom we supposed had perished below. . . . Nothing, however, was to be seen but the dark waters bubbling up and swelling over on the deck, as if in mockery of the many lives they had just swallowed."

Observations on the Present State of Naval Architecture in Great Britain. By James Caulfield Beamish. T… and W. Boone.

This may be called an ingenious pamphlet. The author advances two propositions, both erroneous, and having raised his giant, proceeds forthwith to demolish him. He asserts that the ships constructed by the present Surveyor are leaner than others in the counter or run, and that owing to their sharp flooring they cannot stow the same quantity of provisions, stores, &c., as ships of the like displacement; and the necessity for placing the greatest bulk in the full bow not being counterbalanced by weight abaft, causes an uneasy motion. Now as regards the first point (and we perceive that others beside Mr. Beamish have fallen into this error), the ships in question are not so lean or sharp at their extremities as most others; and, secondly, and in proof of the first, they do stow considerably more than other ships of the same tonnage, of which he may readily satisfy himself, if he chooses to make the inquiry, or refer to the contrasted statements which have been so often published. Most of them will carry six months' water, provisions, and stores, under hatches, evenly distributed; enough in all conscience for any purpose. The ingenious design of competition, and mode of assigning the premiums, has the merit of originality at least, and places the School of Naval Architecture in a better position than they have hitherto attained by the success of their productions. We think, however, that Capt. Symonds's principle is a well defined, from the brig to the first-rate, and, spite of all the calumnies which have assailed it, has undergone such tests, as to have satisfied those who have access to the official reports, of its great superiority over others; that unless some better mode could be shown, there is but little probability of a repetition of experiments being adopted with six eighteen gun brigs, at the cost of 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.* in premiums, and the expense of the squadron for four or five months, in order to discover that which has been already ascertained. We would recommend those gentlemen who continue to undertake to elucidate the difficult subject treated on in this pamphlet, and who cannot get access to the ships themselves, to inspect the models of each arranged at Somerset House, where any person connected with nautical affairs can have ready access to them on proper application. By adopting this precaution, and inquiring of naval officers who have served in, or in company with the ships, the character and performances of the Surveyor's ships, their capacity for stowage, stability under canvas, behaviour in bad weather, weatherly qualities, speed, &c., they will avoid wasting their arguments for the remedy of faults which only exist in the imagination of those gentlemen who "sit at home at ease," and from mortification at their own want of success, would be just as ready to traduce any plan brought forward by Mr. Beamish, as they have fruitlessly endeavoured to mislead the public by false statements, and to resist conviction as long as it was possible, by any means, however unworthy, as regards the Surveyor of the Navy. The pamphlet is worth the attention of those interested in the subject.

THE DUTCH ROYAL DOCK-YARD.

This establishment is situated on the island of Kattenburg, and connected with the town by a bridge. The principal building was erected, in 1665, on eight thousand piles. It is two hundred and twenty feet long by two hundred broad. An extensive range of magazines have since, at different times, been added. There is a spacious dock on the west, in front of the building slips, and the great Nieuw Dyke, which with ample quay room, on the pile-fenced islets of Kattenburg and Oosterburg, (on the latter of which stands the buildings of the ci-devant East India Company,) may be considered as forming an immense, safe, general dock.

The royal dock-yard itself appears somewhat larger than that of Deptford; and as to the arrangement in regard to the ground plan, the magazines, forges, and safety of launching, I would say that of Amsterdam claims superiority; in other respects there is very little difference. The dock-yard at Portsmouth, from its greater extent, its block-making machinery, and its iron and copper forges certainly claims pre-eminence over all others. Having had occasion to visit, in America and in Europe, the principal naval yards, and, having made myself tolerably well acquainted with those establishments, I may perhaps, take upon me to say, that the English, Dutch and American dock-yards are arranged, as nearly as may be, on the same plan; that in carpentery, the Dutch and English may be considered as equal; and the Americans as generally finishing their ships with more elegance, as having made improvements which give more room on the decks, and expose less perpendicular surface to nemy's fire. In the French dock-yards, the spirit of rderly arrangement appears sadly wanting. Much time is onsequently lost, and altogether we cannot help observng the absence of that steady, quiet, straight-forwardning work which characterises the naval yards of Engnd, Holland, and America.

While we were visiting the different magazines of arine stores, the arsenal, forges, the riggers and sailakers' lofts, the carver's shop, the ships on the stocks, e boat-builder's yards, and rope walks, accompanied by officer who very courteously showed and explained verything, no one lifted their heads or hands from their ork, except the head of each department, to give us such formation as we might desire. Every article was ranged in its respective place—no confusion, no workan running in the way of another; each knew his place d business, and all bespoke the highest degree of regurity. The sheds covering the ships are handsomer, and think a little higher than ours; along the sides are galries for the convenience of spectators to see the ships unched. The ships on the stocks, or whose keels are id down, are:—the Van Tromp, 74 guns (nearly nished); the Holland, a double-banked 60-gun frigate nearly planked); a large corvette, ready to be launched; 74-gun ship, in frame; a 74-gun ship, laid down; a -gun frigate, in frame, and another laid down; in all ven.* A small new sloop of war lay in the dock. hese ships have all round sterns, and modelled exactly ce British round-stern ships. On remarking that this as Sir Robert Seppings' plan—"Yes, Sir," politely plied the officer who accompanied us, "he introduced but it was Dutch from the first; there has not been a aliotte constructed from time immemorial in Holland, t exactly on this same plan." Such is the fact, and, hatever merit may be due to Seppings for introducing e round sterns, we have only to go down (but few will ke the trouble) to the docks of London, Liverpool, or y other port, to see a Dutch galiotte, and satisfy ourlves that Sir Robert had no claim to the invention.

The ships of war built at Amsterdam are towed down e northern canal to the Helder, at the arsenal and dockrd of which they are finally equipped for service, in ke manner as the ships of war built at Rotterdam are t Helvoetsluis.

According to an official document I have a few days go received, the Dutch Navy in January, 1835, was onstituted, including one 74 and one 60, and smaller essels on the stocks, as follows:—Ships of War—2 of 4 guns; 6 of 74; 1 of 62; 3 of 60; 16 of 44; 6 of 32; 2 of 28; 4 of 20; 10 of 18; 4 of 14; 12 of 12; 3 of ; 4 steam-boats; 4 transports; total 76 ships of war, exclusive of the ship used for exercise as a Naval School, nd 50 gun-boats. Officers—1 Admiral (Prince Frederick); 4 Vice-Admirals; 7 Rear-Admirals; 26 Captains; 2 Captains-Lieutenants; 71 First Lieutenants; 171 econd Lieutenants; 89 Cadets of the First Class†; 4 urgeons-en-chef; 50 other Medical officers.—Macregor's Note Book.

* The Navy of Holland, in 1799, consisted of 40 ships of the ne, of from 50 to 74 guns; 40 frigates of from 30 to 44; 10 tters or sloops of war of from 12 to 34 guns, besides numerous n boats.

† Prince William Frederick Henry is among the Cadets. The gistered seamen of the Navy amount to about 6,000 men Steam v. Horses.—It would require 12 stage coaches, rrying 15 passengers each, and 1,200 horses to take 80 passengers 240 miles in 24 hours, at the rate of ten iles an hour. One locomotive steam-engine will take al number, and go two trips in the same time, consequently will do the work of 2,400 horses! Again, it ould require 30 mail-coaches (six passengers each) and 000 horses to take 180 passengers and mail 240 miles 24 hours, at the rate of ten miles an hour. One locomotive steam-engine will take that number, and go two ips in the same time, consequently will do the work of 000 horses.

A Queer Cat-o'-nine-tails.—Robert of Gloucester says at Queen Elfrida used to whip her step-son Edward, on to King Edgar, with wax tapers, so that, when he rew up, he "hated the sight of a candle." Few, erminly, would make light of such a flagellation.

Scientific Pun.—A gentleman was showing a friend a alloon of ox-bladder inflated with oxygen. "But (observed the friend) if the oxygen should escape, how can ou get it into the bladder again?" "That is not the ifficulty (quoth a by-stander), it is not how to get the xygen into the bladder again, but how to get the bladder into the ox-again!"

Steam Marriages.—It may be important to state, that the Preston and Glasgow Railway passes through Gretna Green. It will be easily possible to travel from London to the forge matrimonial and back again to London on they same day; and what is, perhaps, of still greater consequence in an elopement, the rail-road trains cannot overtake each other, so that pursuit will be vain.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—Capital, £500,000,

With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of 5*l.* each. Deposit, 1*l.* per Share. The remaining 4*l.* to be paid in two Instalments, namely, 2*l.* per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro. tem., No. 30, Essex Street, Strand.

Secretary, Mr. W. Montagua.

The object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are of themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration," and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, 5*l.* per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7½ per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

W. Montagua, Secretary.

FULLER'S FREEZING MACHINE, by which Four Different Ices can be made in a few minutes, and repeated as often as required. The Freezing Apparatus, by which Ices can be made by artificial process, also the Ice Preserver, in which Rough Ice can be kept three weeks in the warmest season, to prevent the necessity of opening the Ice House, except occasionally. Ice Pails for Icing Wine, Water, Butter, &c.—Fuller's Spare Bed Airer. This vessel is constructed upon philosophical principles, and will retain its heat for sixty hours with once filling.

The above articles of scientific discovery may be seen only at the Manufactory, Jermyn-street, Six Doors from St. James's-street, London.

WITHOUT INJURING the HAIR or SOILING the SKIN.—INFALLIBLE HAIR DYE.—The only article that has stood the test of experience is AGID HASSAN'S CIRCASSIAN HAIR DYE, which will in a few hours change light, red, or grey hair to a rich auburn or jet black, or any shade between the two, with a fine glossy appearance, without injuring the roots or discolouring the skin or linen. It will also be found invaluable to Cavalry Officers and Gentlemen of the turf in removing "white stockings," and giving to every spot of the horse any colour required. Sold by the Sole Agents, William Day and Co., at their Old Italian and celebrated Fish Sauce Warehouse, 98, Gracechurch-street; Hannay and Co., 63, Oxford-street; and by all the principal Chemists, Perfumers, and Booksellers, in town and country, in bottles, at 5*s.*, 10*s.*, and 15*s.* each, having directions for use, with a fac-simile of the signature of Agid Hassan; also that of William Day and Co. All others are spurious and counterfeit.

TO PREVENT FRAUD.

THORN'S POTTED YARMOUTH BLOATERS, for Toast, Biscuits, Sandwiches, and Wine,

in Pots, 1*s.* and 2*s.* each. The high repute, and immense sale of this delicate preparation has induced several would-be tradesmen (who not having an idea of their own) to attempt an imposition by labelling a pot exactly like his, thereby to deceive the public and injure him, (having actually applied to his printer for that purpose;) well knowing they cannot prepare the Fish, the receipt being an old family one, and the secret in the curing of the Herring, by which its rancid qualities are destroyed, and it becomes so delicious a relish. It is easily detected by observing his signature, Alex. Thorn, on the side, and on the top, Proprietor of the celebrated for Fish, Game, Steaks, Wild Fowl, and all Made Dishes, imparting a zest not otherwise acquired—the most economical now in use; in Bottles, 2*s.* and 4*s.* each, warranted in all climates. Wholesale at the Manufactory, Thorn's Oil, Italian, and Foreign Warehouse, 225, High Holborn; also of all wholesale oilmen and druggists; and retail by all respectable oilmen, grocers, and druggists in the United Kingdom.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 69, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2*s.* 6*d.*; pints, 4*s.*, quarts, 7*s.*, being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE

for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From Joseph Henry Green, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

(Signed) "Joseph Henry Green.

"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From Bransby Cooper, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 19, 1835."

From William Henrich, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "William Henrich.

"Greville-street, Hatton Garden, April 15, 1835."

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL

unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviating in successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed in Rye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the decay of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprived of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minutely a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3*s.* 6*d.*, 6*s.* 6*d.*, and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12*s.* each.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. Van Butchell,

Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Fore-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

32, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, and No. 10, Ludgate-hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with the celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH. INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so

established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Broilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 6, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Co., Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Vellé, Haymarket; Burgess and Strand.—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or other Sauce.

RECOLLECTIONS of the STORMING of the CASTLE of BADAJOS, 6th April, 1812, by the Third Division of the British Army, under the command of Lieutenant-General SIR THOMAS PICTON, G.C.B. A Personal Narrative.
By Captain MACCARTHY, late of 50th Regiment, Assistant Engineer, Third Division.
Having been informed by a friend, who had read the "Memoirs of Sir Thomas Picton," in which the author's name was mentioned, and that a private letter of his to Sir Thomas was inserted in the Appendix, he is, with other inducements, impelled to narrate authentic occurrences interesting to the Army, and redounding to the honour of the gallant General and his division, not before published.

"We assure our readers that we do not employ the least exaggeration when we say, that this appears to us the very cheapest, and the most splendid work published in Numbers, that even this age can boast of. The strictly Linnean parts are introduced to the reader by several well-written essays, connected with the subject of Natural History, which require for their own merits, as well as for a preparation for what follows, to be carefully studied. We prognosticate that when this undertaking shall be completed, it will form the best book upon Natural History in the English Language."—Metrop. Mag.
"This promises well, the descriptions are written in a clear and unaffected, yet sufficiently learned style, it may be received by the scientific, and instruct and gratify the general reader. A number of illustrative anecdotes follow each chapter, the production is therefore rendered highly amusing; we recommend its introduction into schools and families where knowledge is sought, but where employment is also essential."—New Monthly Mag.
"This is the very first work of the kind, both in its composition and leading features, as well as in the universality of its details, which has yet appeared before the public. Each number appears to be an improvement on its predecessor, and the entire series is managed with admirable skill and taste. Admirable as the plates are, however, the letter press continues to interest us still more. The translation of Cuvier, with the illustrative notes, appears to us a masterly work. It is of itself worth more than the price of each number."—Edinburgh Evening Post.

MESSRS. DELCROIX & CO., Perfumers to their Majesties and the Royal Family, beg leave to inform the Nobility and Gentry that they have now completed their SPRING STOCK of NEW and FASHIONABLE PERFUMERY, and have also just imported, from Paris and the South of France, a choice selection of the most approved articles of the day. They respectfully recommend the following esteemed preparations to the attention of their Patrons and the Public:—
Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs, for the pocket handkerchief.
Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.
Delcroix's Pommade Regeneratrice, for the growth and preservation of the hair.
Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Vegetable Soaps.
Delcroix's much-esteemed Old Brown and White Windsor Soaps.
Delcroix's long-approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and gums from decay.
Delcroix's Cremo de Sultanus, for softening and beautifying the complexion.
Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bears' Grease and Huiles Antique.
Messrs. D. and C. have recently obtained Injunctions from the Court of Chancery preventing certain parties from selling a spurious imitation of their Esprit de Lavande aux Millefleurs and Vegetable Extract, both of which will in future bear their signature on the labels, and their address, 158, New Bond-street, on the back of the bottles.

LIEUTENANT BEADON'S PATENT BOAT SAFETY.—The Gentlemen and Members of the Yacht Club, and others attached to aquatic recreation, are invited to an inspection of this highly important invention, by which the capsizing of sailing vessels and [illegible] in squalls is prevented. The invention is contained in a small ornamental case, and consists of a reel of the simplest construction. By the use of this invention thousands of lives may be spared from a watery grave, and the pleasures of sailing enhanced by perfect security. One of the Boat Safety's may be inspected daily at the Adelaide Gallery, Strand. Gentlemen wishing to purchase will have the goodness to forward the size of the main-sheets of their yacht or boat to Mr. Jones, Optician to the Board of Ordnance, Charing-Cross, where one may be seen. Any person wishing to treat for the sole Agency for the sale of the "Boat Safety," may apply to Messrs. Newton and Berry, at the Office for Patents, Chancery-lane, London, and Town-hall Buildings, Manchester, who have also one of them for inspection.

MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS.—The superiority of this Patent over all other Inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers and Gentlemen of the Civil Service. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 176, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED, and where all other descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied on the lowest Terms.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. the East India Company.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 28, King William street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention in their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 10 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

E. JOHNSON invites the attention of Naval and Military Officers, Cadets, Surgeons, Writers, and Passengers, proceeding to India or the Colonies, to his Improved PATENT METALLIC EXPANDING BEDSTEADS, forming Ship Sofas and Swing Cots, which for Cleanliness, Economy, Lightness, and Convenience are unequalled. Also to his new Ship Sofas, either in Rosewood or Mahogany, which may be used as Ship Sofas, Swinging Cots, or Camp Beds, forming at the same time a convenient and elegant piece of Drawing Room Furniture.

A large assortment of Brass and Iron Camp and House Bedsteads, Spring, Stuffed, Recumbent, and Easy Chairs, Mattresses, Carriage Seats and Cushions, Mahogany, Camp, and House Drawers, Wash-hand, and other Tables, Wardrobes, Canteens, Liqueur Cases, and every description of Portable Furniture, whether for the Camp or Cabin, all at Wholesale prices for cash.

OFFICER'S BEDSTEADS, with Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, and Curtains complete, only £6 6s.

An inspection of the above articles is earnestly and with confidence requested at the Manufactory for every article of Travelling and Camp Equipage, 155, Leadenhall-street, only four doors from Cornhill.

LADIES' OUTFITS TO INDIA.—Messrs. THRESHER and CO., 152, Strand, next door to Somerset House, respectfully acquaint those Ladies and Families who are preparing for India, that Entire Outfits, embracing every article necessary for the voyage, and for use in India, may be obtained at their establishment, all of which are so arranged as to insure every comfort during the voyage, and an ample supply on arrival. Every article is made in the neatest and most fashionable manner, of materials manufactured expressly for the climate, and are prepared, packed, and shipped without any trouble to the parties.—Ladies waited upon at their own residence, and lists of articles, with the number of each required, sent to all parts of the country.

N.B. Gentlemen's Outfits prepared in the most careful manner

EAST INDIA SERVICE.—Officers of the King's and Company's Service, Civilians, Ladies, and Families, Writers, and Assistant Surgeons can be completely Equipped at a Month's Notice, if necessary, at MAYHARD & CO., 27, Poultry. The articles supplied at this Establishment are uniformly of good quality, correct as to uniform, both for the CAVALRY and INFANTRY, and on the most reasonable scale; samples may be seen, with prices, at the Warehouse.

PLATE, PLATED ARTICLES, CHINA, GLASS, SADDLERY, HARNESS, &c., supplied at Wholesale Prices.

The CAMP COUCH, forming a SOFA, SWISS COT, or FIELD BED for INDIA will be found the best adapted for its objects of any yet in use. A NEW PORTABLE DOUBLE COUCH is just introduced, to which the particular attention of Families is invited. MAYNARD and CO., 27, Poultry.

Royal Marine Office, May 21, 1836.

GENERAL ORDER.—The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, having been pleased to abolish the office of Inspector-General of Royal Marines, all reports and communications heretofore made to Major-General Sir James Cockburn, Bart., G.C.H., are in future to be addressed to Col. Sir J. B. Savage, C.B. K.C.H.

Major-General Sir James Cockburn cannot quit the command with which he has so long been honoured, without expressing to the Corps of Royal Marines, the gratification which he has, upon all occasions, derived from it, and assuring them that he shall ever consider the period of his connexion with the Corps, as one of the proudest and most satisfactory of his life.

He leaves them, impressed from long experience, with the deepest sense of their quality, discipline, and professional value; and, confident of their upholding in all after times, the high and distinguished reputation, which they have already so deservedly attained.

He requests they will accept the assurance of his lasting best wishes and regards, and that he shall never cease to feel the liveliest interest in their welfare, prospects, and renown.

By command,
(Signed) J. WILSON, A.A. Genl.

The Terror, bomb-vessel, which was strengthened for the purpose of going in search of the ice-bound whalers, is now fitting for another northern voyage of discovery; Capt. Back, who has been appointed to command her, intends to go up Weger River as far as he can, from which point he anticipates he can complete his survey of the northern shore of the American Continent, from Cape Turnagain, which he reached in his first expedition to Victoria Head-land, the point where he made the sea in his last expedition.

Official dispatch of Lord John Hay, respecting the attack on the lines near St. Sebastian,—

"His Majesty's Steam Ship, Phœnix,
"San Sebastian, May 5, 1836.

"Sir,—I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, that, at daylight this morning, her Catholic Majesty's forces, consisting of the British Legion, about fifteen hundred Spanish troops, in all six thousand, under the command of Lieut.-Gen. de L. Evans, marched out of the garrison for the purpose of attacking the insurgents in their intrenched positions. I conceive their Lordships will not expect from me a detailed account of the various movements of her Catholic Majesty's troops during these operations, which are at this moment only imperfectly known to me. I cannot resist, however, stating the proud gratification I experienced in witnessing the gallantry displayed by the British Legion on this occasion; the intrenched positions of the insurgents appeared impregnable; but one after the other were stormed by these brave men in a manner that created an universal feeling of admiration. It is impossible to report with any accuracy the amount of killed and wounded; but, from the most accurate accounts I can obtain, it is from five to six hundred, and a very large proportion of the superior and other officers wounded. The insurgents' loss must have been considerable. Four pieces of artillery and a stand of colours were taken from the insurgents. His Majesty's steam-vessels, Phœnix and Salamander, were enabled to render her Catholic Majesty's forces most essential service. The precision with which the Phœnix directed her fire on the insurgents' lines destroyed one angle of their principal redoubt, which enabled two regiments of the British Legion to enter.—I have the honour to be, &c., (Signed) "John Hay, Commodore.

"Charles Wood, Esq., Secretary, Admiralty."

We believe the port recommended to the Admiralty by Captain Evans, as the most eligible for the contemplated packet station on the Irish coast, is Beerhaven.

The Lady Kennoway sailed from Deptford to embark male convicts for New South Wales, and the Captain Cook is taken up at the same place for similar service.

It is confidently reported the Deptford (Greenwich) railroad averaged over one thousand pounds a day during the fair, and to-day being the King's birth-day, there was a very interesting sight at Greenwich Hospital, the pensioners being paraded and supplied with an extra allowance of meat and strong ale; the officers will dine together to celebrate the day.

There will be splendid doings on Trinity Monday and Tuesday at Deptford; the dock-yard there will be, as usual, thrown open to every one, through the kindness of Sir John Hill, and the fair on the above days at Deptford will have every thing to attract and deserve notice.

It is generally reported that two frigates will be put in commission next week. There are now a vast number of seamen in the Port of London, occasioned by the numerous arrivals within the last fortnight, and the crews will doubtless be speedily enlisted.

It is rumoured, that should the line of battle ships fitting out, form a squadron, and assemble at Spithead, (of which there is little doubt,) the Howe, if she can be manned in time, will repair to this anchorage, with the flag of Vice-Admiral Fleming.—Hampshire Telegraph. [It is more than a month since we informed our readers that the assembled squadron would be commanded by Vice-Adm. Sir C. E. Fleming; by this arrangement the expense of hoisting another flag will be saved. Should the destination of the fleet be the Baltic or the Black Sea, however, another Admiral will be appointed for this special service.—Ed.]

The Admiralty have had under consideration the severe case of the Master Assistants, and decided that in future H.M.'s ships are to bear as follows:—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Line of battle ships | - - | 3 Master Assistants. |
| Other rated ships | - - - | 2 ditto ditto |
| Sloops | - - - - | 1 ditto ditto. |

And that in default of Captains applying for the same, the Admiralty will appoint that number to each ship in commission, from amongst the most deserving.

Letters received from H. M.'s st.-ves. Medea, dated Aocoee, 20th April; we extract the following:—We have been cruising round all the islands of Greece with the King of Bavaria, and we are now waiting for answer to know if we are to attend on his Grecian Majesty—it is likely we shall be with him all the summer. Nothing new—all quiet.

CAVALRY.

3d Drag. Gds.—On Thursday week Capt. Huntley's troop left Limerick for Cork.

2d Drags.—The three remaining troops arrived at Dublin from Liverpool on the morning of 17th inst. A squad. moved on 17th to arrive at Belturbet on 24th, and remaining troop to arrive at Dundalk on 19th. One troop moved from Dundalk on 24th, and arrived at Belfast on 27th.

3d Lt. Drags.—Capt. Phillipps' troop, with Lts. Yerbury and Greene, have taken up their quarters in the New Barracks at Limerick, under command of Maj. Tuite, and Capt. Congreve's troop 3d, will join next week to complete the squadron.

8th Hussars—The 1st Div. (3 troops) arrived at Dublin on 21st inst. on board the Earl of Roden and Cumberland st.-vs., and occupies Barracks in that garrison.

14th Light Drags.—A Division (3 officers and 39 men) embarked at Belfast on board the Arab st. on 17th. Another Division (2 officers and 40 men) embarked on board the Mercury st. on 18th. The 3d Division (1 officer and 19 men) on board the Tomars. Another on 19th, the 4th Div., (2 officers and 47 men) on board the Rapid on 20th inst.; and the 5th Div. (3 officers and 35 men) embarked on board the Arab on 21st and sailed for Glasgow.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot. 1st Batt.—3 cos. and head-quarters moved from Templemore on 24th, to arrive at Limerick on 26th. The co. at Killenaule to arrive at Limerick on 28th. Remaining 3 cos. at Templemore to arrive at Limerick on 27th. The detachment at Guldeo (withdrawn) to arrive at Limerick on 27th. The co. at Roscrea on 28th. The co. at Thurles to arrive on 1st June.

1st Foot, 2d Batt.—The 3d (last) Division of service cos. embarked on 20th inst. on board the Innisfail st., and sailed for Cork.

2d—Gen. Sleigh, commanding the Poona Division, inspected this corps at Poona, and expressed himself pleased with its state. It was expecting a route for Belgaum on the arrival of the 17th from N. S. Wales, which was looked for daily.

8d—have arrived at Meerut.

6th—The right wing landed early in January from Guzerat, the left wing had halted in Deesa, till the arrival of the 40th. Capt. Bonamy had been appointed by Sir William Keene to the depot King's troops in Calabar Island, vice Millar of the 40th, ordered to join his regt., proceeding to Deesa on the N.W. frontier.

18th—The detachment at Shanoon harbour moved to Athlone on 23d inst.

19th depot—to embark at Liverpool for Dublin. The Maitland tr. will proceed to W. Indies early in June to bring home the service cos.

20th—were in orders to volunteer immediately; no the 17th head-qrs. reached Bombay.

22d depot—were embarked at Liverpool for Dublin.

30th depot—will embark at Dublin for Liverpool on the arrival of one of the depots from Liverpool (22d or 59th).

34th depot—on board the Erin st. arrived in Dublin on 19th inst, and occupied barracks in the Pigeon-house. The depot of this regt., under the command of Major Greaves left Carlisle on Wednesday morning last for Dublin. They marched to Port Carlisle, where a st.-boat was waiting to convey them to their destination. This fine body of men were in a state of discipline that would do honour to any corps in the British Army, and conducted themselves during their stay in Carlisle (just a year) with the utmost decorum; in fact, no set of men, soldiers as well as officers, ever left that city with more heartfelt wishes for their individual welfare, or whose remembrance is more likely to remain in the recollection of the inhabitants. We understand that the gentlemanly conduct of the officers has been the theme of general conversation in the higher circles.

35th—On Monday week, Maj.-General Sir T. Arbuthnot, with his Aid-de-Camp, arrived at Fermoy from Cork, and proceeded to inspect this regt. under Col. Keightley. They went through several movements in splendid style, after which the appointments of the men were minutely examined, as were also the internal arrangements in barracks, with all of which the General was highly pleased.

40th—marched for Deesa in December last.

43d depot—is ordered to embark at Cork for Devonport.

44th—Bt. Maj. Johnstone has obtained 2 years' leave to England on private affairs. A General Court Martial has been sitting at Barrackpore for the trial of Capt. Horne for "wilfully absenting himself from parade," &c.

47th depot—Head-qrs., including Captains Michell's and Skipwith's co-s, with Ensigns Longmore, Rooke, and Assist.-Surg. Fox, marched into Limerick on Thursday week from Castlebar, under command of Maj. Sadleir, en route for Buttevant.

52d—The Parmelia tr., having on board the remaining 3 service cos., sailed from Cork on the 16th inst for Gibraltar.

59th—This depot was inspected on Southsea Common, by Major-Gen. Sir T. M'Mahon on Monday.

60th, 2d Batt. depot—The Katherine Stewart Forbes tr. having on board the depot, sailed from Cork harbour on 15th inst for Jersey.

66th—is expected from Canada the latter end of this summer.

68th—depot was inspected on Wednesday on Southsea Common, by Maj.-Gen. Sir T. M'Mahon.

73d depot—A detachment was sent from Birr to Shanoon harbour on 23d.

76th—Depot cos. under command of Maj. Hutchinson, from Paisley, have arrived at Edinburgh Castle.

81st—Maj.-Gen. Sir T. Arbuthnot on Tuesday week inspected the service cos. under Col. Maclean, and highly approved of the state of discipline of the corps.

83d depot—embarked at Dublin for Liverpool on the 21st inst.

84th depot—Capt. Franklyn's co. (49) moved from Limerick to Rathkeel and forts on 23d. The depot were inspected on Saturday by Sir James Douglas.

86th depot—Stationed in Cashel, under the command of Capt. Creagh, were inspected by General Douglas on Thursday week, who was highly pleased with the appearance of the men.

90th—A comp. (54) moved from Tralee on 23d, to arrive at Newcastle on 25th.

94th—Maj.-Gen. Sir J. Douglas made his half-yearly inspection of the reg., under Lieut.-Col. Paty, in the square of the New Barracks, Limerick, on Wednesday week, when he was received by the entire line with the usual salute, and immediately proceeded to inspect the ranks in open column, after which Lieut.-Col. P. put the reg. through a variety of batt. and light inf. movements which were executed in capital style, and the General next called upon Capts. Tulloch and Pipon to manœuvre the corps, which both officers evidently did to his satisfaction. The reg. then formed solid square, and Sir James addressed the Colonel, Officers, and men, telling them what pleasure he felt at the result of his inspection in fact that he could not say more of the conduct and discipline of the reg., than he had expressed at the preceding half-yearly inspection. The General examined the books, messes, hospital, &c., and in the evening the officers entertained Sir James, his Staff, and all the officers in garrison to a sumptuous dinner. 2 cos. and hd.-qrs. from Limerick, to arrive at Templemore this day, remaining 2 cos. on 30th; the comp. (40) at Ballingarry, Tarbert, and Carrick Island arrived at Killaloe on 26th a comp. (44) at Limerick moved to Roscien on 24th, and the comp. (44) at Newcastle to arrive at Thurleeon 30th. Ensign Vaughan goee on sick leave for a few months.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.—Lieut.-Col. Gamble, appointed to the command at Plymouth, will leave Woolwich for that station next week. The batts. at hd.-qrs. went through a drill field day on Wedneeday, and several cos. on Mondsy and Tuesday practised mortar and howitzer firing, both at the high and low engle. Similar prartice has also tsken plaec in the marshee at Plumstead. Two other cos. will shortly embark for foreign service. A deputation of officers belonging to the corps waited on Sir R. Ferguson on Tuesday last by appointment; the particulars will be given next week. The body of Lieut. Cadet Smith (whose unfortunate death we recorded last week, son of the late Capt. Sir W. Smith, Kt.) has been conveyed from Woolwich to Dublin on board a steamer, under charge of a Bombadier. Lady Smith, whose melancholy bereavements have the strongest sympathies of her late husband's brother officers, has left Woolwich also for Dublin.

YEOMANRY.

The "Queen's Own" Oxfordshire Yeomanry, under the command of their Lieut.-Col. Com. Lord Churchhill, completed their annual period of eight days' training and exercise on Saturday, at Woodstock, when they were inspected by Col. Hill, R. Horse Guards (Blue), in Blenheim Park.

GRAND REVIEW AT WOOLWICH UNDER THE INSPECTION OF THE PRINCE OF ORANGE.—On Saturday last the Prince of Orange, accompanied by his two sons, Prince Ernest of Hesse Phillipstall, as well as a numerous train of officers, the Master-Gen. of the Ordnance, Sir Hussey Vivian, and a distinguished assemblage of British Officers of all ranks, escorted by a troop of Life Guards and Horse Artillery, (the latter had been in waiting on Blackheath,) arrived at Woolwich. H.R.H. was received by the Heads of Departments, and a royal salute from the mortar battery where the royal standard was immediately hoisted. He then proceeded with this brilliant cortege to view that capacious emporium of the materiel for martial achievements, the model room, and foundery, &c., &c., which were inspected with much interest; they then passed through the Plumstead Gate, and entered the marshes, where parties of Foot Artillery were stationed at the recochet, the three-gun battery, and an erection to represent the ports of a ship-of-war, where there are two carronades and a sixty-four pounder (which is loaded with 9lbs. of powder), upon a very improved principle, the invention of Maj.-Gen. Millar, Commandant of the 4th Batt., and Director-Gen. of the Field Train. The Horse Brigade, Rocket Troop, and Field Batteries, were also in attendance, but were drawn off (except the Rocket Troop), as they were subsequently to exercise on the common. An order had been issued that carriages were not to be admitted, which was adhered to, with the exception of the Dutch Ambassador and three or four others; otherwise there was free ingress for all respectable persons. The rocochet battery fired three rounds with admirable precision, when the Master-Gen. remarked to H.R.H. "en badinage," they could not afford any more powder, and the Rocket Troop exhibited their skill in discharging ground rockets; the three-gun battery did not fire, and the Princes, with the train of Officers by whom they were attended, returned to the carronades, where Maj.-Gen. Millar received the Royal Party, and, having dismounted, the Prince of Orange singled out of the assemblage several old Officers whom he recognised and greeted as his companions in arms in many a battle-field with the greatest condescension, and with the cordiality of an old friend. Two rounds were fired from the carronades which threw the ponderous projectiles to the foot of the target 1270 yards distant in succession, while several groups of England's fairest daughters were within a few paces of these mighty engines of war, unawed by the thunder of the great guns, viewing their tremendous effects with curiosity and admiration. A splendid dejeuné a la fourchette had been laid out in the beautiful mess-room of this gallant corps, in which hospitality and elegance were blended, and to which the Princes and cortege sojourned while the band played some delightful airs. Subsequently the R.H. was attended by the Master-General to the Academy, where he was received by Col. Drummond, C.B., the Lieutenant-Governor, Col. Parker, C.B., the 2nd Captain of the Company of Gentlemen Cadets, Lieut.-Col. Gravatt, &c., &c., during which the mortar battery had been repeated, and H.R.H., with the splendid groupe en train, returned for the purpose of inspecting what advance in skill we had made in this essential branch of military tactics since he served under our colours. The usual signals having been made by beat of drum, the first shell thrown from a howitzer, under the direction of Bombadier Morton, of the 3rd Battalion, at the distance of 600 yards, cut down the flag-staff. This so pleased Sir Hussey Vivian that he instantly gave him a sovereign, and several other Officers were similarly liberal during the interval of setting up another staff. Subsequently several round shot and shell were thrown within a few inches, but did not carry it away. There were also three volleys of round shot fired at the low angle, which is altogether a new practice, and was exhibited for the first time on this occasion. The Royal Party then made for the Military Repository and grounds as the object of attraction, where gunners had been stationed at different guns, &c., to illustrate their utility in mounting and dismounting heavy ordnance. Bell's gun (the invention of a N.C. Officer of the corps named after him) was much admired for its simple construction, combined with great strength. The Horse Brigade and Field Batteries were drawn up on the common, and received H.R.H. with a general salute and trumpets sounding the march. H.R.H. preceded by the D.A.G., Sir A. Dickson, rode down the line formed by this fine body of men, and was followed by at least 200 equestrians, whose diversity of uniform produced a coup d'œil seldom surpassed, and, on his return to the flag-staff, the Horse Brigade and Field Batteries, marching past at a walk and trot, the Heavy Brigade returning at a gallop and retiring to the rear Field Batteries, which advanced in line at the gallop, and, after performing several manœuvres in brilliant and efficient style, firing blank cartridge with almost incredible celerity, marched off the ground, the Heavy Brigade advancing in fine style down the hill; several movements were then executed which vied with the preceding of the Field Batteries in effect, but an accident of a nature never before witnessed by the oldest veteran on the ground, somewhat prematurely closed the review. The mounted gunners in advance covering their guns which were in column, when, having arrived within a certain distance of the staff, an order was given to countermarch to the rear, by the inward and outward face of the two divisions; but the drivers of the right gun on the left division did not take a sufficient circle, and so completely overturned the gun, that it lay on the ground bent downwards; the rest of the Brigade were compelled to cease the exercise, from the people flocking to the spot from the flanks, and their R.H.'s with the Staff riding up. None of the men were injured, and the only damage done, was one of the wheel-horses being slightly kicked in the face; order was quickly restored, and, advancing in line, the order was given for the Brigade to halt and dismount the limbers; in a few seconds the whole of the guns were laying on the ground, with the gunners reclining on the wheels, &c., as if totally hors de combat. The effect produced was beyond expression unique, and withal gratifying, when, in less than three minutes, on the word of command being given, the artillery were blazing away at the supposed enemy, "action to the front;" and, making an echellon movement to the rear, advanced in line, and closed the review with a general salute. Before the Field Batteries left the ground, H.R.H. advanced to Lieut.-Col. Whingates, C.B., who commanded, and whilst paying a well-merited compliment as to the efficiency of the corps he had exercised, shook the Colonel very heartily by the hand as an old Waterloo Hero, who had shared the glory and danger of that eventful day with himself. It is needless to add that very high eulogism was passed upon the skill evinced; the Princes returned to their carriages under a royal salute, highly gratified with the exertions of the gallant corps for their amusement. H.R.H. wore the uniform of a British General, decorated with the Grand Cross of the Bath, and several other orders and medals, conspicuous among which was that of Waterloo. Prince Ernest of Hesse Phillipstall wore a Prussian uniform, and the young Princes Dutch with orange sashes. The whole of the Staff-Officers of the Royal Artillery were in full dress.

It is said that Sir Edward Blakeney has received orders from the Horse Guards to detain at Cork the 1st Royals and 85th Reg., which are to wait special orders from the Com.-in-Chief. The presumption is they are to be sent to Spain. A detachment of the 99th Regt., at Hasler Barracks, about to proceed to reinforce the Regt. at the Mauritius, has also been countermanded.

As it is not at present intended to send any regts. out to the West Indies, in lieu of the 19th and 86th, both of which will be home in a few months, two regts. will ere long become available for the East Indies.

At the close of the half-yearly examinations at Sandhurst on the 19th, the following officers were presented with first class certificates of qualification:—Lieut. J. G. H. Holmes, 62nd reg.; Lieut. F. Lushington, 9th ditto. In consequence of the very superior talents and acquirements displayed by Lieut. Lushington, in the highest branches of mathematical science, a special honorary addition was made to that officer's certificate; and the following gentlemen cadets who had completed their qualifications for commissions were recommended to the general commanding-in-chief for appointments in ensigncies in the line, without purchase:—James M. Fowler, William W. Horner, Thos. J. Hawker, Frederick D. Lister, Henry E. Loogden, Rich. H. Currer, Henry Needham, William G. Robun, Henry J. Coole, Wm. H. Kirby, Francis H. Crawford, Wordsworth Smith, Arthur H. Elton, George Molle, Isaac H. H. Gall, Henry F. F. Johnson, and Robert Owen.

The Sovereign transport arrived at Cork Harbour on the 19th inst., and the draft of the 84th, 43rd, and 63rd Regts. were embarked on board that vessel on the 21st for Nova Scotia.

General Order by Lieut.-General Sir R. W. O'Callaghan, Commander-in-Chief at Madras.—The Commander-in-chief has derived much gratification from his Inspection of the troops at Bangalore, and has noticed with great satisfaction the clean and soldier-like appearance of the men and their steadiness under arms as evincing their efficient state of discipline. His Excellency particularly observed the excellent order of the horse artillery under Captain Seaton, H.M.'s 13th Light Dragoons under Lieut.-Colonel Brunton, H.M.'s 39th regiment under Maj. Poolman and the 4th and 12th regiments of Native Infantry. In the separate inspections made by His Excellency of the two corps of H.M.'s service, their high state of order particularly attracted his Excellency's observation, as fully supporting that long established reputation which he has personally known each to maintain, and as highly creditable to their respective commanding officers.

RECRUITING IN THE FOOT GUARDS.—Recruiting has commenced for a large number of young men into the Foot Guards; but in consequence of the difficulty experienced in obtaining men of the height of five feet eight inches, the Commander-in-Chief has issued an order authorising the recruiting serjeants in the country to enlist men of the height of five feet seven inches.

We hear that desertions have been very numerous at Chatham from the depots of Indian regts., particularly the 9th, caused probably by the cadaverous appearance and horrid yarns of the old soldiers of the 38th quartered there. It is a great error to let our recruits think and say "to this complexion we must come at last."

The Medical Officers of the Grenadier Guards having recently been excluded from the Royal parties to which the other Officers of the Regiment were invited, the circumstance has been severely commented on by a Medical contemporary.

ST. HELENA ROCK, March 8.—I cannot allow the Maitland to quit, without sending you a growl from Napoleon's tomb; here am I doomed to live upon a Subaltern's pay on this Island, where meat is half-a-crown a pound, and a small cabbage a shilling: the consequence is, we cannot keep a mess, but are compelled to live in our rooms, and must do so until Government gives us an allowance, or makes such an arrangement that we may get a regular and cheap supply of other provisions than salt beef and salt pork from the Cape of Good Hope. This Island has hitherto been garrisoned by the E.I.C.'s Infantry and Artillery, the whole of which are now to be sent to England to be disbanded; and to make it beneficial to some of your English parishes, they are to take their wives and children with them, about 150 women, and perhaps 400 children. Some of the women are native blacks, and some of African birth. The officers of these troops are generally natives, and are the sons of traders and inhabitants of the Island, and, with their military duties, mixed up other employments. These gentlemen, without having rendered one hour's service to the country, are now to be pensioned off at the Government charge, in a manner highly insulting to the army, and many of them anticipate to receive India Cadetships, with liberty to hold also the Government pension which is to be given to them, a scale of which I subjoin. They have never seen an hour's service beyond a Ladder Hill sham fight, and the greater part have been receiving numerous advantageous emoluments, in addition to their bountiful regimental pay and allowances. Contrast the pensions of these St. Helena heroes, who have no possible claims on the country, with the half-pay of our meritorious old Army and Navy Officers, who have actually and faithfully served their King for years, and have gallantly fought and bled in defence of his cause.

| Officer's Rank, St. Helena regt. | Full pay granted to each Officer serving on the Island. | Officers' retired Pension granted and paid by Government. |
|---|---|---|
| Lieut.-Colonel commanding the St. Helena regiment, native of the Island | 900*l.* per ann. | 650*l.* per ann. |
| Maj. of St. Helena regt., a native | 512 | 420 |
| Capts. ditto, 10 to 14 yrs. serving | 400 | 255 |

The order to furnish infantry regiments with belts in place of belts hitherto worn in the ranks is general.

The officers of the Scots Greys, while at Leeds, presented a handsome gold-snuff-box to their late Chaplain, the Rev. W. C. Wallack.

* Of the junior Ensigns, native boys, several retire on a greater pension than Military and Naval Officers of 30 years' rank as Lieutenants.

East India Intelligence.

On Saturday the Directors of the East India Company gave a grand dinner to Sir F. Maitland, on his appointment as Commander-in-Chief at Madras. Lord Hill, the Duke of Richmond, Lord G. Lennox, Lord Saltoun, Sir J. Hobhouse, Gen. Sir T. Dallas, Sir J. Macdonald, Sir W. K. Grant, were among the guests. The Chairman of the Company presided.

An arrival from India by way of Marseilles, announces the arrival at Bengal of H.M.S. Jupiter, with the Governor-General and suite on board on March 3d. This left Bombay 18th March, but we have received neither letters or papers by it, but merely shipping details.

H.M.S. Spitfire has also arrived from the Mediterranean, bringing three Parsian Princes, cousins to the reigning Shah, with their suite, and other passengers, in all 45 persons. The object of their visit to this country has not transpired.

The Commander-in-Chief having concluded his inspection of the troops at Cannanore, expressed his approbation of their general state of good order and discipline, especially of H. M.'s 57th reg., which he reported favourable to the General Commanding-in-Chief of H.M.'s Army.—Madras Gazette, Jan. 2.

The greatest confusion continues to prevail in the Bazaar, on the subject of the Pice, and the Gazette of January 2nd, regulating the value of the new coin, seems only to have made matters worse.—Madras Gazette.

Orders have been received from the Political Secretary of the Agra Government by the magistrate of Agra, to make over Hookum Chund and Futty Lall to Major Alves, whenever he may demand the delivery of them to the Jeypore Durbar.

Sir C. Metcalf on his removal from the Supreme government is, they say, to be provided for at Madras from which Sir F. Adam is to be recalled.

A recent communication from head-quarters announces that all Artillery officers have been granted full tentage in all situations, in the same manner as to officers of Native cavalry and infantry, in consequence of the frequent calls for the movement of Artillery officers. This tardy measure of justice has been obtained in consequence of a representation from Col. Lindsay in his own behalf, and that of his fellow officers of Dum Dum.—Bombay Courier, Jan. 23.

The following morceau came out on the recent trial of Capt. O'Hanlon: that Lord W. Bentinck, on removing Col. Reid from his regiment, prohibited him from joining the corps he was posted to, giving him at the same time permission to reside in any part of India.—Agra Akhbar, Jan. 2.

The attempt of the Indus steamer to ascend the Indus had failed, owing to the shallowness of the river. She had lightened herself every way possible, but had not been able to proceed beyond Sihla. Another attempt had been made by the company's cutter, at Nerbudda, to enter the river, but it had failed.—Overland.

Sickness had prevailed to an alarming extent in Lahore, and many families had, in consequence, encamped on the banks of the river Zareh.—Overland.

The Repulse, now on the eve of departure for Calcutta, will carry out as passengers the Projector and Superintendent of the Calcutta and Saugor Railway and Harbour, for the purpose of commencing the important undertaking.

Signs of Amelioration.—We feel happy in congratulating our military readers upon the recent instances that the Court of Directors have displayed, of returning consideration for the feelings and interests of their officers. The general order of Lord William Bentinck of 1834, confining the appointments of Deputy Adjutant General and Deputy Quarter Master General to the ranks of Lieutenant-Colonel and Major, has been rescinded, by orders from England, and the regulation of 1824,—by which Captains and Subalterns of twelve years standing are eligible—again revived. The Court of Directors has also ordered the issue of full tentage to artillery officers at half batta stations. The effects of these amendments have already commenced; but there is, however, we learn from an English contemporary, The Naval and Military Gazette, another proposition, and one of more general benefit, on the tapis;—it is a regulation for granting pensions according to the length of service, instead of by rank; by which means the slowness of promotion in any particular corps will not place the members of it similarly in arrear with regard to their pensions for service. This we have long considered a measure absolutely necessary; and when we see a Cadet of 1810 promoted to Lieut.-Colonel and superseding about 70 Majors and 160 Captains; and when we see a Cadet of 1818 a Major, and exalted over the heads of above 140 officers of superior standing, some of whom are 12 years his senior, and others of whom are still regimental Lieutenants, we are still more confirmed in the opinion that the alteration is imperatively required.—East India United Service Journal.

Theatres.

Drury-Lane.—A young man of the name of Paumier said to be son of a Colonel in the army, has been gratifying his mania for theatricals at rather an expensive rate, having paid the lessee of Drury-Lane theatre three hundred pounds for being allowed to amuse himself by attempting to perform the parts of Hamlet and Richard the Third. This wholesale plunder is disgraceful—it is an insult to the public, and degrading to the theatre.

Covent-Garden.—After the tragedy of Macbeth on Monday evening, we had a new romantic drama of enchantment, called, The Steel Pavilion; or the Charcoal Burners of the Hartz. As a drama the only merit we could discover is in the scenery exhibited, some portions of which is extremely beautiful. The opening scene, a view in "the Brockenburg in the Hartz Forest," is an imposing and finished painting, wild, bold, and effective, and worthy a far better piece. The plot of this drama is quite unintelligible. Some portions of this piece are of the comic pantomime order; but in the scenes or comic it does not possess one scene which awakens the slightest interest, and as a drama it is unworthy critical notice. The scenery saved the piece. Mr. Macready's benefit at this theatre on Thursday evening proved what the theatrical world anticipated—a bumper. We scarcely remember to have witnessed a more crowded, or more fashionable audience on the night of a benefit, for we may with truth assert that half the leading men at the bar, from the judge down to the barrister, were present on this occasion, to witness the first performance of Mr. Serjeant Talfourd's tragedy of Ion, and to greet the leading tragedian of the day, for whose benefit it was played. We have two translations from Euripides of the tragedy of Ion, one by R. Potter, having the date of 1781, and another by Michael Wodhull in 1782. In the former play Ion is said to be the son of Apollo, and educated in the temple of Delphi: the scene of this tragedy is laid before the temple of Apollo at Delphi. The plot of Mr. Talfourd's play differs entirely from either of these. Ion is represented as the son of Adrastus, king of Argos. The time of the action of this tragedy is during a plague, which it is foretold will not cease to ravage the island while one of the race of Adrastus lives. As a dramatic poem Ion will stand among the foremost of the present day; it is beautifully written throughout, and lacks only strong and powerful situations to rank it as the first of our modern acting dramas. It is a splendid poem, comprising many qualities which conduce to tragic excellence—simple pathos—and a noble degree of self-devotion, are alike prominent features of it; while for diversity and contrast of character and the sublimity of the catastrophe, it has not been surpassed by the most fervid imagination of our best of modern authors. The poetry of this play is full of genuine passion, of high-toned virtue, of lofty grandeur, sufficient to make a levelling world respect, and not revile it. The accomplished author of this tragic poem can, and, we trust, will do more—he has powers; he has genuine perception of the poetical, and if he will but condescend to study situation and stage effects, which are always more strongly pourtrayed by action than they can be by the most touching poetry, brilliant success and profit must attend his labours, and a brighter dawn may yet arise on theatricals. Our only regret is that we have not space to enter more fully into the merits of this delightful poem, should it fall under our notice for review, in our literary capacity we may indulge more freely. In the part of Ion Macready performed wonders; we thought his death scene rather too extravagant; his exertions throughout the play received reiterated peals of the most deserved applause. Mr. Dale's Adrastus was a very uneven performance; it was not without merit, but it had many defects; he was by far too violent, which occasioned him to murder one of the finest speeches in the play. The acting of Bennett, Wallack, and Pritchard, is entitled to our warmest commendation; they exerted themselves carefully and diligently for the success of the tragedy. Miss Ellen Tree did as much as could be done for the part of Clemanthe; she looked beautifully, as she always does. At the conclusion of the tragedy Mr. Macready reappeared to thank the audience for their flattering approbation of Ion, and, we regret to add, that he stated "it was probably the last play he should be the means troducing to the stage. Mr. Serjeant Talfourd was udly called for—he bowed his thanks from one of the ivate boxes.

STRAND.—The great success of the burlesque of thello has, we fear made the managers indifferent to the odnction of other novelties. The two new pieces oduced on Monday are in every way unworthy this eatre; the new mythological burletta, called The Sea-, is like the weather, most unseasonable, was never t out a more tame and spiritless affair. The burletta Venus in Arms has nothing new or amusing to recom-nd it. It is a miserable patch-work, produced for the rpose of showing off Mrs. Nisbett in the old blue frock t, blue cap, and blue inexpressibles. The house was wded, and the audience greatly disappointed with all entertainments of the evening, except the Othello, ich will have a long run.

COURTS-MARTIAL.

AT a General Court-Martial, assembled in Fort William, 21st Dec., 1835, Lieut. Sem. Boileau and Cornet mes Irving, of the 1st L. C., were arraigned on the lowing charges:—For conduct unbecoming the character of officers and gentlemen, in having at Meerut, on frivolous and unjust pretences, refused to make equate reparation to Lieut. Wm. Martin, 52nd N.I., er he had acknowledged himself to be the writer of etter signed "Vindex," in the Meerut Observer of 2d ly, 1835, whom Cornet Irving had designated in his ly to that letter, published in the Meerut Observer, July, 1835, as a "coward," who, sheltering himself der the imagined bulwark of a false signature, hesitated t to launch forth his venomed falsehoods. The Court on the evidence before them finds both prisoners t guilty of the charge, and they do accordingly ac-it them.

BEFORE the same Court-Martial, on 24th Dec., 1835, eut. Wm. Martin, 52nd N. I., was arraigned on the lowing charge:—"For conduct prejudicial to good ler and military discipline, in having written and sent Cornet Irving a paper containing the following ex-essions:—'I hereby denounce him as a cowardly pol-oon, and desire that he will consider himself as posted d horse-whipped'"

The Court upon the evidence before them finds the risoner guilty of the charge brought against him, and ntence him to be reprimanded in such manner as the Commander-in-Chief may be pleased to direct, but taking to consideration the great provocation given by Cornet rving, recommend him to the attention of the Com-ander-in-Chief.

Remarks by the Commander-in-Chief.—He unwillingly tems to the recommendation of the Court, because the risoner has fairly and honourably acknowledged himself be in error. He much disapproves of the conduct of sist.-surgeon Tweddell, who appears to have acted as eut. Martin's friend. Had he proceeded with more-tely good judgment he must have felt that as "Vindex" s the aggressor. "Vindex" ought to have been the st to have contradicted what he said. ## BATTLE OF ST. SEBASTIAN.

MY DEAR ——,—On the night of the 4th, the army lied out of the gates of St. Sebastian at 3 o'clock. The y of the morning saw the first lines of the enemy taken. t many of our brave comrades lay stretched on the field. e light brigade, consisting of the 3rd, 6th, and rifles, then acked the centre. This was a tremendous position, of urse. The enemy had no cannon, or the thing would ve been impossible; but every house on each side of the ad, which was the object of contention, was transformed to a battery, filled with infantry; every window loop-led and bricked up. Colonel Tupper led up the 6th to e attack; they stood as long as they could, but were re-lsed with great slaughter. ——, in charge of a com-ny, behaved as gallantly as ever soldier did, and fell ounded in front of his company after two hours hard fight-g. About 200 or 300 men fell before this position; still remained untaken. The Irish brigade, consisting of the h, 9th, and 10th regts., attacked the left flank of the emy's position, and gallantly took the first lines, though ith great loss: the 1st regiment (the only one of our bri-ade that had landed) accompanied them. The second lines, owever, firmly resisted. The 1st charged the battery three mes, and were three times repulsed: the 10th the same; he 9th then attempted it, were repulsed, and refused to eturn. Every one now despaired; though the Phœnix steamer had opened a breach, the men were disheartened. At this critical moment the Salamander steamer was seen ter the port, having the 4th and 8th on her decks. They disembarked, and company by company, as landed from the boats, marched along the sands, ascended the heights, joined the army, and formed. The honour of attacking the battery was given to the Fusiliers. The Adjutant-General came up to them, and addressing them told them that every regiment had been repulsed, and that the honour of taking the battery remained for them. They gave one loud huzza! and, disdaining to fire a shot, rushed up the hill at the point of the bayonet, burst through the breach, and in a moment the battery was ours!!! So great haste, and much bugle blowing, Z.

COAST GUARD SERVICE (LETTER XII. & LAST).

I have already made known the tremendously harassing duties the men have to perform, nor have they much encouragement given them to a vigilant and faithful discharge of those duties. It must be obvious to every one at all conversant with the nature of this service, that upon their integrity mainly depends the protection of the revenue. I would, therefore, make the Coast Guard Service one of promotion, and every man in it eligible to become a Chief Officer. Following up my plan, then, the district of a Lieutenant should consist—say of three stations, the day-pay of the three would, of course, at the present rate of pay for a Chief Officer at each, amount to twelve shillings, independently of half-pay. The aggregate of his salary, with half-pay, would amount to 310*l.* per annum; 30*l.* of this sum I would take away, and give 10*l.* to each chief boatman in his district deserving promotion to a chief officership, in addition to what he now has. The Lieutenant would then have left 280*l.* a-year, out of which he should be obliged to keep a horse, the Government finding him one, as it does for the Mounted Guard, and paying those taxes which it does for the Inspecting Commanders. The active duties of the Blockade were entirely performed by the District Lieutenants—I mean as respects visiting the stations by night, &c.—and although that service was a very expensive one, it was most efficient. This I mention to show that Lieutenants are quite competent to the duties I propose for them; and, as regards those subordinate to them, I hold it, Sir, to be an undoubted axiom in life, and one which will hold good in this service, that the greater confidence you place in men, the higher you raise them in their own esteem, the better you make them, and the more cheerfully and indefatigably you induce them thereby to do their duty. Hence, I conceive that were good men put to do Chief Officers' duty under the control I have named, there would be an undoubted stimulus to exertion, which would most materially benefit the service, and make it a popular one. I would, in proof of my argument, instance the moral control the non-commissioned officers of the Army have over the men, arising from the confidence placed in them by their superior officers, and the well-regulated control they themselves are under to those superior officers.

In divisions composed entirely of Naval officers, the alterations above proposed would, of course, have the effect of removing two Lieutenants out of every three; but those who have held their appointments for periods extending far beyond five years, could not, with any show of reason, complain on that score; and the appointments in future being only for that period on one tour, instead of permanent, all officers desirous of holding them would receive them in rotation, which would, unquestionably, be much fairer to all parties than the present almost exclusive system; besides which, this very plan would, in due course, bring back to these situations those individuals who would, if it were adopted, (as I hope for the good of all that it will be,) be superseded.

With regard to any additional expense being created through the change I propose by Lieutenants being appointed to the command of districts where some of the old civilian chief officers now are, this might be met by the more economical arrangements as to cutters which I shall presently suggest, or by the removal of those officers in the manner hereafter pointed out; add to which, all occasions should be taken advantage of to appoint them to eligible situations in the Customs as they fall vacant.

I will now revert to the Divisional Captains and Commanders.

The emoluments of these officers (independently of their half-pay) I would have guaranteed to them to the same amount as those of the present Inspecting Commanders (including, of course, that allowed for night visits, which, as I before suggested, I would remit), save and except the deduction, if necessary, to which I have already alluded. By my plan (I do not lay claim to it as an original one) the Commanders' divisions would be lengthened, as they would have nine stations (three districts) instead of seven, which I believe is now the average number; nothing, therefore, more than what I have hinted at, should be taken from these officers' incomes.

I have said I would assimilate the command of a Divisional Commander to what it would be on board a vessel of war; it should never be less, and seldom or never greater, especially where those commanded by them stand in so near a relation to themselves, and have consequently a proportionate respect and consideration due to their rank and standing. Following up, then, the suggestions contained in the seventh paragraph of this letter, I am of opinion that Divisional Captains, not Commanders, should be appointed to those districts on the Coast of Kent and Sussex where the officers and men are so very numerous. If the data I have before me be correct, there are upwards of twenty Lieutenants in the district of Commander Sherer, and taking all the force together, inferior officers, mounted guard, crews of cutters, &c. upwards of 300 persons. Now, Sir, if this be not an unnatural and improper command for a young man who is now only six years and four months a Commander, after being five years and two months in this service, I am, indeed, in error. I boldly maintain that no officer under the rank of a Captain should hold it; and could I adduce no other reason for a re-organisation of this service, I humbly conceive that, in the opinion of experienced officers, this one would be amply sufficient. Other districts on the Coasts I have named are equally thickly officered and manned; the pruning knife, therefore, is required in all of them.

(To be concluded next week.)

THE DISPARITY BETWEEN THE PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY AND THE NAVY.

SIR,—Every naval officer will, I am sure, feel deeply indebted to you for the irrefutable statement which appeared in your paper of the 14th inst., and every right-minded officer of the army will likewise, I am confident, unite in this expression of satisfaction, because he must see by it that all you seek is to obtain for both professions the same advantages in every form. That the Navy merit this consideration, no man in these kingdoms will, I am positive, deny, and the astonishment of all must be, that this boon which they now ask, has been so long withheld from them. In confirmation of the existence of the vast disparity which you have alluded to, I will beg leave to state an example or two which have come under my own observation, and which cannot fail of convincing even the most sceptical on this head. In the year 1807, I was a Lieutenant in a ship in the Mediterranean, when I well recollect the gallant officer whose case you have particularly referred to as having been advanced to the rank of Major-General in 1825, though he did not enter the army till about 1806 or 1807, then an attaché in the suite of Sir Arthur Paget, and when he was a fine handsome lad, about eighteen years of age, being at that time, as I understood, from those who were intimate with him, a Cornet in, I think, the 4th regiment of dragoons. In 1812 he became a Lieut.-Col., and in 1815 a full Col., and in 1825, as you have stated, a Major-General.

Knowing as I do, the distinguished conduct of this gallant young man in the Peninsula, under the illustrious Duke, I freely admit that he has most fully deserved all that he has gained, but my object is to show that in the sister profession, it was impossible, under the regulations of the naval service, for an officer to have risen in anything like the same degree, let his merits be what they might. In proof of this, I will suppose a Midshipman to have entered the Navy in 1807, he could not possibly have attained the rank of Lieut. till 1813, and that of Commander till 1815, even supposing his father had been the Prime Minister all this period, nor that of Captain till 1816, and when, supposing he had then the highest interest advanced thus rapidly, he would still be, in the year 1836, (eleven years after the military officer had become a Major-Gen.) 422 down the list of Post Captains; so that the chances are, he will not obtain the corresponding rank of the officer of the army, till the year 1855!

Again, we find other examples of the justly complained of disparity in the cases of different General Officers, though not so great as the one above alluded to. I will name two of these—the late Maj.-Gen. Lord Frederick Bentinck, and Maj.-Gen. Neil Campbell, and I could point out very many more were it necessary. Each of these officers entered the army as Ensigns in the year 1797; when they thus commenced their careers in the service, LORD MARK KERR, SIR EDWARD BERRY, the present ADMIRAL MURRAY HUSSEY, and others were Post Captains, in the actual command of frigates or ships of the line, and yet these military officers attained the rank of Major-General two years before the naval Captains were advanced to the corresponding rank of Rear-Admiral. These are FACTS which cannot be controverted, and which, I trust, will, through your able exposition of their existence, cause that assimilation between the two professions, in every way, which is so anxiously and so rightfully demanded by the officers of his Majesty's fleet. CONSTANS.

SOLDIERS' MARRIAGES.

SIR,—I cannot resist making the following strictures on the annexed cautionary notice, which appeared in the Times of the 18th May, 1836:—

"It is very desirable females marrying soldiers should be made aware that unless such marriages are previously consented to by the Commanding Officer of the regiment to which the soldiers belong, agreeably to an order issued from the Horse Guards to that effect, the female will neither be permitted to live in garrison nor to follow the regiment. Clergymen ought on no account to perform the marriage remonial, without previously satisfying themselves of the gularity of this procedure; for it is plain that, by doing , in the absence of any evidence to this effect, which ight always to appear on the certificate of the proclama- on, they inflict a cruel injury on the female."

1. This would appear a stretch of power and despotic le assumed by the military to restrict the decree "to in- ease and multiply," and so repugnant are the clergy * to y reference being made to the Commanding Officer of any giment, that I maintain one half would throw such a paper ide, and its absence prove a stimulus to join in indis- oluble bonds a couple whose happiness is delusion, and ratchedness the sequel of such a union.

2. Six women per hundred men is the proportion on em- rkation, unless for the Cape of Good Hope, and eastward fit, when the number is increased to eight. The lot is et—the Pay-Serjeant is released from this miserable state f excitement, but the others are doomed to draw the future estioy of their wives and children. Those who are fortu- ate enough to accompany their husbands are provided with ations (on a stoppage of six-pence per diem), however rge their families—even the infant has a gill of spirit— hilst the unfortunates are passed through the country under e vagrant act to the parishes of their husbands; those for cotland and Ireland being furnished with certificates ranting free passages, and thus ends their indiscreet and elancholy compact.

3. By the preceding article it will appear that a good oldier, who has been married eight or ten years, has no tore advantage than a recruit after a servitude of as many onths.

4. This is an act of cruelty, for the soldier would gladly ceive the issue of the ration; and often the Captain of the ompany has offered that, should the private die, he would e answerable that his widow should not prove an incum- rance; but all this is of non effect, a severe rap on the anckles is wound up by the philippic of "attend to His ajesty's regulations."

5. The Commanding Officer can have no power to with- old a soldier's marriage. He may prevent his sleeping ut of barracks, which is, I grant, nearly tantamount hereto. Mixed up, therefore, as these poor people are, it always prudent on the part of the officer, and his duty trictly to perform it, to inquire the character of the woman he soldier is about to marry, otherwise a worthless hussey ay creep in, and become thereby a nuisence to the very any praiseworthy wives of the soldiers of the present ay.

6. So hard is the order in the colonies on poor creatures tting out by stealth, that Governors or Commanding Offi- ers are ordered to re-ship them to England on their arrival, nd all this for saving a few pounds of Irish pork and the mainder of the allotted ration. I believe this severe de- ree emanated from the representations made by the Trea- ury to the Duke of Wellington.

7. During the war, the Duke of York (that widows' riend and orphans' father) formed the Asylum at Chelsea; his unfortunately led to marriages, under the hope of pro- iding for the offspring of the soldier; after a time its being nly open to orphans was made general to all children born o the regular army, and very often the result proves un- atisfactory; indeed, the females were removed to South- mpton in consequence, which was supposed to be more ut of the way of vice than so near the metropolis.

8. The best recruit is the husbandman, in his smock frock nd loutish exterior.

I have thus endeavoured to come to the point by not fol- owing the milk-and-water suggestion of the preamble. Indeed, I doubt whether a clergyman would be justified to efuse the ceremony to a soldier who is a citizen, unless he were a Chaplain under the bayonet. It is a pity the House f Commons do not interest themselves more about the com- ort of a good soldier, than caring whether the bad are pro- erly punished or otherwise. In the West Indies black women are obliged to be employed, in consequence of the mall proportion of women with the regiments.

London, May, 1836. ARISTIDES.

* Judge Mansfield says, "I will correct a strange mistaken notion which has taken place, that, because men are soldiers, they cease to be citizens. A soldier is gifted with all the rights of other citizens." And again, "It is highly important that the notion should be corrected, which supposes that an Englishman, by taking upon himself the additional character of a soldier, puts off any of the rights and duties of an Englishman."—Vide Term Reports of Common Pleas, 4, p. 449.

BRITISH PACKETS AT RIO DE JANEIRO.

SIR,—Through the medium of your valuable paper, I wish to call the attention of the proper authorities to the circumstance of the great delay and repeated postponements which take place here with the "British Packets," in the hope that steps may be taken to prevent such shameful occurrences as have been common here for a long time, but particularly of late.

It may be asserted that there is a more proper and regular course to the object in view,—viz. by petitioning through our Consul to the resident Minister, and so to the Government; but from the little consideration, or contempletion of British interests, which has on several late occasions been manifested, by keeping the mercantile community in a state of suspense and uncertainty, highly prejudicial to its interests, and of their friends in England, particularly referring to the case of the "Eclipse," a few weeks ago, when she was posted for a certain day, after having been detained twice, when at 3 o'clock, which is after business hours here, she was again postponed for two days, although up to that hour it was given out at the Packet Office that she would positively sail on the following day. I say, judging from such proceedings and the constant occurrence of them, I am forced to the conclusion, that, however well-disposed our Minister may be to the interests of the British community, he must be authorised to overlook the practices I complain of, out of deference or courtesy to the Brazilian Government, at whose instance, it is said, the postponements take place.

At foot, I send you a copy of, or an extract from, a letter received per packet from Buenos Ayres, which will convey an idea of the general feeling on the subject there. Here it may be summed up and considered general, that except for occasionally bringing us out later intelligence than the Merchant vessels, they are of no service to the mercantile body, but on the contrary, an annoyance.

If the Brazilian Government have a claim, or if political circumstances in which our Government is concerned, demand it, it should be done (the postponement) only upon notice given 48 hours previous to the period before appointed, and on no account repeated, so as to protract the sailing of the Packet beyond 48 hours after the stated period of 14 days after arrival. I remain, dear Sir, your most obedient Servant, CARTER T. BEETMAN.

Rio de Janeiro, 12th November, 1835.

Extract from a Letter received from Buenos Ayres.

"We have heard it suggested, since the arrival of this Packet (Hornet), that we should all give up writing by her, for it is perfect folly to do so. Letters have been received, via Havre de Grace from this, with dates up to the 20th May, and our letters of the 15th August state, they were looking anxiously for the April Packet, making a difference of about 45 days. We learn that the letters which left here in August, would be detained in your place about 35 days; it is a very serious evil to us, when we are relying upon our orders for Insurance getting home; there is no wonder at us saving this same Insurance at times, however, we know a most glaring exception to this; a friend of ours wrote for Insurance by the Packet, the letters were detained in Rio about a month, the vessel on which he had ordered Insurance, knocked her bottom out in the river, and a vessel that sailed about 14 days after this happened, took home the news in about 76 days. We must have these Packets out direct, they must, on calling at Rio, not be detained, in the way they were formerly, or the Government may take them away altogether.

"Buenos Ayres, 22nd Oct., 1835."

DISTINCTIONS OF THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.

SIR,—Allow me to ask why the Royal Artillery, who take the rank of His Majesty's Guards, are placed at the tag end of the army list? Also, is it because true merit is dumb, that they have not at the head of their columns the battles they have ever distinguished themselves in from Minden to Waterloo? The merely placing the last sanguinary fight, and to me troop "Leipsic" had better be left out, for it is only a fractional part of a whole, and since every Gazette is now teeming with honorary distinctions to regiments of the line, why is this fine old corps so constantly neglected. EPROUVETTE.

Woolwich, May, 1836.

[The Royal Artillery are certainly misplaced by the compiler of the Army List; but the motto "Ubique" may indicate the varied and distinguished services of this splendid corps.—ED.]

SERVICES OF THE SERJEANTS ROYAL ARTILLERY.

SIR,—When an individual voluntarily steps forth to detract from long and faithful services, and has made your valuable columns the vehicle of his invidious feelings, by reason of your commendable impartiality, it is an imperative duty to the corps and to the injured parties, that the allegations of such as those of your correspondent Pipe Clay, should be rebutted by authentic facts, thus weighing sterling truths in the balance against anonymous vituperation. The following is a rough but correct sketch of the places in which the meritorious non-commissioned officers "black-balled" by Pipe Clay have served with a degree of honour and credit to themselves, and redounding highly to the discrimination of those gallant officers who recommended them for the appointments they now fill to the satisfaction of their superiors. Serj.-Maj. Peter Grey, Egypt and Lincelles, &c.; Quart.-Mast.-Serj. John Powers, Denmark, Walcharen, France, Spain, Portugal; Quart.-Mast.-Serj. W. Aitkin, Walcheren, Portugal, Spain, France, and in Canada; Serj.-Maj. Robert Bayfield, Denmark, Portugal, Spain, France, and America; Serj.-Maj. Fleming, Portugal, Spain, France; Serj.-Maj. A. Alexander, Portugal, Spain, and France, &c., and a few years since had a sword presented to him by Sir John May of the H. B., in the name of the officers as a slight testimonial of their approbation; Serj.-Maj. W. Sheppard, America, &c. Band Master Mc Kenzie certainly has been 46 years on the home station. As for Quart.-Mast.-Serj. Bawman, Serjts. W. Rudd, and J. Knight, I have not had time to ascertain accurately their foreign duty, but have confined myself to those I can strictly vouch for.

THE RAPID ADVANCEMENT IN THE ARMY OVER THAT OF THE NAVY.

SIR,—I mean not to censure the recent appointment of Lord Brudenell to command the 11th Dragoons, on the contrary, I deem that that nobleman had just reason to complain of his dismissal from the 15th, without trial because I hold that no man should be condemned unheard in his defence. My only object in thus addressing you is to shew the rapid promotion in the one profession, over the other. A young friend of mine entered the navy in 1824—in the very same month, I believe, that Lord Brudenell entered the army as a Cornet. In 1830, even before the poor Mutiny had completed his time (and who, though a the eldest son of a peer, was of noble descent), Lord Brudenell had advanced to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel and attached; and at this moment, when this military officer is again placed in command of a regiment of dragoons, my poor naval friend is still but a Midshipman! Here is a fact that must carry conviction to every dispassionate mind, that our sailor defenders are sadly behind their gallant soldier brethren in promotions, as in every other way, but JUSTICE will, I feel assured, be rendered them, if an independent PRESS does but continue to urge their claims to the nation's regard.

INSTRUCTING THE APPRENTICES IN DOCK YARDS.

SIR,—Having repeatedly read in the pages of your valuable and influential Gazette, that a plan has lately been brought into operation at the Dock-yards for employing the apprentices belonging to those establishments, on the idle day (Saturday), in obtaining useful information in the different branches of their professions; may I trouble you to spare me a corner for the following observations on this important subject.

The plan, it appears, originated with Mr. Josh. Burdwood of Pembroke Royal Dock-yard, who observing the loose habits assumed by these youngsters, from being totally disengaged on Saturdays (the days on which our Naval arsenals are closed), proposed, some time since, to the Admiral that they should be had into the Dock-yards on those days and receive a course of instruction, as well in reading, writing, arithmetic, and the rudiments of mathematics, as in the theoretical department of their trades. The double object would thus be obtained, of keeping them out of mischief and devoting one-sixth of their time to the theoretical while the remaining five-sixths would, as usual, be given to the practical study of their respective arts. The receipt of this was duly acknowledged by the Board, and a series of letters passed on the business; yet strange to say, in the order which directs the plan to be brought into execution the invention of it is ascribed to the Portsmouth officers!

Now, Sir, if there is any merit in the idea, and that there is, appears evident from its adoption, I call upon you, ever ready as you are, to advocate the cause of justice, to give Mr. Burdwood an helping hand, for "Palmam qui meruit ferat."

When we reflect on the moral influence unemployed or mis-spent time super-induces, we cannot too strongly urge the necessity of continually occupying the mind and attention of youth; for as the poet justly says,

"Satan finds some mischief still For idle hands to do."

Besides all this, a decided improvement in the intellectual acquirements of these youths must take place. Shipbuilding, like all other arts, can not be instructive. Practice alone makes perfect, and hence the modes of Captain Symonds, from his extensive observation and experience, greatly excel those of the parties crammed, with what they erroneously call the scientific knowledge of construction. Scientific! How can the science of the resistance of fluids be brought into calculation, seeing a ship's body does not, one instant, present the same surface to the "Weve's tempestuous motion."

As well might the leopard change his spots, or the Ethiopian his skin, as man attempt the solution of such a theorum. Mathematics may assist in forming, but never can create a perfect ship-builder. Little x, multiply big Z, divide by plus one, minus eight, will look very well on paper, but like the vessels constructed on such data, too often vanish in the end "leave but a wreck behind." What do those veteran master ship-wrights, Roberts, Stone, Hawkes, and Bla know of algebra, and yet where are there better builders than these, or men who understand more fully, the form a ship ought to assume? But I am rambling and intruding on your columns.—Adieu. PHILOTECHNOS.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1836.

It appears by a Parliamentary Report, on the State of the Post Office, just published, that the recommendation, which the evidence had prepared the way for, and which we assured our readers would take place, has been formally announced, namely, that assigning the Home Post Office Packet Establishment to the management of the Admiralty. This is one of the economical and beneficial measures which a brief space from party strife has produced, and we doubt not, in the organisation of so extensive a design, their Lordships will be governed by the principle of making the Post Office Service a nursery for producing future officers and men competent to the management of steam-vessels. We hail with pleasure the adoption of any system calculated to give employment to officers of either service, especially the Naval, whose profession requires constant application, more particularly in a period when steam navigation bids fair to supersede the old mode of navigating whenever it can be practically applied. Besides, with due regard to the present Post Office Commanders (many of whom are highly respectable men, and not a few amongst them Naval Officers) we consider that all duties connected with the sea are more ably performed by those who have made that service their profession, and have before them the stimulus of promotion for good conduct, and the certainty of disgrace by dismissal and loss of half-pay for bad; in fact, who are actuated by those motives which govern all mens' conduct, the hope of praise and reward, or the dread of disgrace. It is not the least of the merit of this plan, which the Government will certainly adopt in the recommendation of the Committee, that the new arrangement will cause a considerable saving to the country. The pay and emoluments of Commanders of Post Office Packets we have heard account in some cases to from 700*l.* to 1,000*l.* a-year, and the evidence has divulged a system of carelessness in the mode of keeping and auditing the accounts, which we were certainly not prepared for under the management of the Post Office, which once boasted the merit of being the best conducted public department. It is said, that the vessels will in future be commanded by Lieutenants with 10*s.* per diem in addition to their half-pay; with a Clerk, whose office it will be to provide for the passengers, &c.; and we would recommend, that these latter situations should be invariably bestowed upon Pursers, the commend and the pursership continued for the term of five years, which is not too long a period for this service, when the expenses it will involve, in the shape of outfit, are considered. We would also suggest, that a liberal portion of Mates should be employed in these vessels, and the men entered to serve in the Royal Navy, should occasion require it, by adopting this precaution, and fitting each vessel with a gun (the heaviest she can sustain), such gun to be afterwards landed, and with the necessary Ordnance stores kept in readiness for immediate replacement, we might in twenty-four hours, develope a steam flotilla of considerable force, on any given point, with no other preparation, or exertion, than the embarkation of a party of Marine Artillerymen in each vessel along with the gun and stores, the mails being carried, pro tempore, by private steam-vessels, of which there are always plenty available. We need hardly refer to the importance a number of these steam auxiliaries would be in the best appointed fleet; and the line-of-battle ships might even appropriate a great part of their stowage to fuel, when they have the certain means of reaching stations where they can replenish their provisions within a given time. In fact, a line-of-battle ship should never move in war without a couple of steamers, and present the simile of the shark accompanied by his attendant little pilot fish. We shall have much more to say on this Post Office arrangement (which we hail with great cordiality on behalf of our Naval brethren) in future numbers.

In stating the tardy reliefs of Infantry Regiments in India, we purposely avoided all mention of the Cavalry, which serve fully as long in that distant and dangerous climate. The circumstances in which the Infantry and Cavalry of the King are placed are neither similar as regards the nature of their services nor their quartering. The four Cavalry Regiments are stationed, and most properly so, in the very best districts at each Presidency, and do not, like the Infantry, move from one unhealthy quarter to another. Indeed, at Madras and Bombay the Cavalry never change station from the day they land till they embark, unless a force takes the field. Compare the case of Infantry corps, who circle round all the country, and encounter the varying, but alike baleful, climates of Guzerat, Bengal, Myaore, and Tenessarim.

The authorities at the Horse Guards must be quite at a loss for regiments to effect the reliefs, when four corps of infantry and two of cavalry have been serving in India since 1819. This long period of service, however be[illegible]on the Cavalry, is still more so on the Infantry, as in all the foot corps more than one-half is composed of men who (having served some years in regiments before ordered home) had extended their services for a bounty, but who are thus enjoled into serving all their days in India; for few, very few, ever live twenty years in that climate. Let us look at the case of the Indian soldier. Can any thing be more desperate? He leaves his native land for India, perfectly certain that nothing but sickness, or a service of nearly twenty years, can relieve him. Indeed, many of the dreadful crimes committed by soldiers in India arise from this conviction, and they are found to purchase relief from that wretched climate at the price of their health, character, or life. Many men prefer to be sentenced as felons for life, to New South Wales, rather than remain in India. But, it will be said, many volunteer on their corps being ordered home. True; but what sort of men are they? men who, from the distant prospect they had of returning to their own country, have formed connexions with native women, and are sunk into utter depravity of mind and debility of body. No man, who has served in India, will say that volunteers are not the plague spots in every regiment newly arrived, as they introduce to the sound sober, and steady soldier the evils which are most to be shunned. If a soldier, on enlisting for India were confident that his regiment would be relieved in fifteen years, he would embark with the hope of returning, and this hope would be still stronger in each succeeding draft, after the head-quarters had landed there. But soldiers become brutalised by the long residence they now make in India; and from finding themselves in a hopeless situation at first, they run into gross excess to kill care, and when they are lured to volunteer by a few rupees they find themselves still deeper sunk in despair.

It would be more pleasing to see our Members of Parliament advocating a fair relief of our Indian regiments, than urging the Government to forego the power of corporal punishment. It is mere talk, to make speeches about meliorating the condition of our soldiers; and absolute cruelty teaching them to look upon their officers as inflictors of punishment, so long as they leave their countrymen wasting their lives in hopeless exile in India. Let the well-wishers of the Army in Parliament come forward and solicit attention to the grievances which we have stated. They will find no opposition we promise them from Lord Hill. He will gladly hail any means afforded him, of relieving the regiments in India. We have only stated what must often have crossed his mind, and we trust that in these remarks we have been conveying to the public sentiments universally felt by the Army also. Some of the military members should move for a return of the services of our regiments from the embarkation of their head-quarters for foreign service, up to this date, classing them by Colonies. If a return of the number of officers tried in each regiment in India, since 1825, were also called for, the state of regiments there and elsewhere might be seen, by comparing it with an equal number of corps in any other station abroad. In short, a return of the number of officers and men tried there would astound the public; and could the nature of the offences be also shown, horror would succeed. Here is a field for our friends in the House. Much as the disclosure would vex a few corps and commanding officers, it would operate for the general benefit, and draw attention to the sad and neglected condition of our Indian regiments.

The question of removing part of the Foreign Packets to a Port in the south-west of England, has, we observe by the Cornish papers, excited much attention in the town of Falmouth, where those possessing property in the immediate neighbourhood naturally desire to retain the whole of the Packet establishment for their own individual advantage; but the point at issue is a NATIONAL one, and consequently it cannot be supposed that the government of the country will be influenced by half-a-dozen or a dozen persons, who may interestedly seek to continue these vessels at Falmouth, when the inhabitants of all our great commercial cities, like Birmingham, Manchester, &c., must be sure to derive such important benefits through the proposed change, whereby their correspondence with foreign countries on the other side of the Atlantic, would be conveyed to and fro full ten days earlier every voyage. This has been clearly shown by the evidence of the experienced Hydrographer of the Admiralty, Captain Beaufort, before the Committee, and which testimony we consider incontrovertible; and as our sole object is advocating this measure has been the PUBLIC good, we earnestly hope to see it carried into effect an early period.

Never since India became subject to the British sceptre has it been in such imminent danger as at present, and that from the most dangerous of causes—internal fever and discontent, amounting to almost convulsion. In the heart of the Army of the East, entirely brought on by a series of as unwise and unjust acts as ever were introduced. Should a foreign power (and Russia, with her giant arm, is anxious to grasp it) succeed in conquering India, the British nation will ever have cause to mourn the day of misrule.

Would any high-minded man have come forward the willing executioner of as dishonest an act as ever tarnished the name of one who broke through the sacred bond of right? But how are we to palliate Lord William Bentinck's conduct, when he descended to be the instrument in the hands of the Court of Directors in carrying into effect the Half-Batta order? And what has been the result?—a paltry saving per annum, at the immense, nay, incalculable loss of the confidence of as gallant and devoted an Army as ever bore the name of soldiers. His Lordship had not the plea of ignorance to cloak himself under, neither was he deprived of wise, virtuous, and talented counsellors to guide him. He well knew that the great, the noble, and good Marquess of Hastings positively refused to carry the order into effect, which robbed the officer of part of his regimental pay and allowances, which had been guaranteed by the Court of Directors, and sanctioned by the Ministers of the Crown. That high-minded nobleman—that intrepid General—that soldiers' friend—spurned the idea of wounding the feelings, far less the interests, of the soldier.—Lord Amherst declined to obey the order.

The gallant Lord Combermere was Commander-in-Chief at the time the natural indignation of the Bengal Army rose so high; he addressed Lord W. Bentinck on the subject, pointing out the danger of forcing an unjust measure, and expressing his apprehension that, by persevering in such a course, the spirit and discipline of the Army would be impaired: nothing could be more soldier-like, or more friendly to the Army, or more just and enlightened to the Governor-General, than his letter, but if it was treated more with defiance and slight than respect and thankfulness. Lord W. Bentinck's answer we have seen: it gives assurance that he himself thought the Batta order reprehensible, for he says, "It will afford me sincere gratification if the Court of Directors shall see fit to reconsider the whole question." Then why do evil if he wished the order to be rescinded? for surely what is morally wrong cannot be politically right, and no one is bound to enforce an unlawful act. In another part of Lord William's letter is a most inconsistent reason given, as it were, why the officers of the Bengal Army should have their feelings wounded, and their pay reduced; he says—"The honourable conduct of the officers of the Bengal Army, during a long course of years, their gallantry in the field, their subordination in peace, is a sufficient guarantee for their future conduct." Does this really mean that without a murmur they are to be reduced, till pay and allowances entirely vanish? We well know that the moral force of the Bengal Army will keep its physical power in subjection as long as any Army in the world; but it must be remembered that a departure from a solemn engagement or pledge on the part of the governing power absolves the allegiance of the governed; and that unmerited insult and aggression unresisted, form no part of civil or military law; and tacit acquiescence but invites the repetition of injuries. Lords Lake, Hastings, and Combermere, Generals Gillespie, W. G. Keir, Adams, Scott, and many others we could enumerate, have borne ample testimony to the bravery and zealous attachment of the Indian Army; and is it not therefore deplorable that such a force should be driven nearly to the brink of distraction?—that Army, too, of which the Duke of Wellington said (and he gathered laurels with that Army)—"He had seen the armies of every nation, but to none did the Indian Army yield in point of discipline and valour;" and Lord Combermere declares it to be his "deliberate opinion that the Bengal Army has the qualities for which the best armies in Europe are conspicuous." We know with certainty the condition of the Indian Army; there is an universal, powerful, and justifiable feeling of resentment and alarm, of past injuries and present neglect, which should be redressed and soothed; and a voice is heard which says, "Beware of resentment, render justice, and forbear further insult and injuries; the Army have been supplicants, but may be asserters of their rights." We have heard it said, the Army is broken-hearted; God forbid! Misfortunes may depress, sorrows and griefs may bow the sternest breasts, but wrongs, insults, and injuries never!

CAPTAIN ANSELM GRIFFITHS, Royal Navy, has just published an able and interesting pamphlet, on the case of the Senior Captains on the List, and their claims for promotion. It is a subject on which we have so frequently expatiated, that we have left the gallant Captain, or ourselves, nothing new to state. We believe there exists the best feeling, on the part of the Government, to bestow the boon so justly due, and so long called for, by both Services,—a Brevet and Flag Promotion,—but it is a difficult matter to accomplish, in the face of the recommendation from the Parliamentary Committee; and, as we have frequently assured our readers,—although loth to damp hopes confidently indulged,—there is no chance of such an event occuring this year. It is, however, the general belief, that the intention will be proposed to Parliament next Session,—we mean that the sum necessary will be moved for in next year's estimates, and, as we trust, it will be granted. We may suppose this desirable event is intended to give eclat to Her Royal Highness the Princess Victoria attaining her majority, and add to the many heartfelt rejoicings which will celebrate that desirable event. To return to Captain Griffiths' pamphlet, which will doubtless be read with avidity by old officers, we must do him the justice to say, that he has performed a very difficult task most delicately, we mean that of putting forth the claims of his brother officers, and contrasting them with soldiers of equal rank, without indulging in observations on the comparison, to which we grieve to say some of our ablest correspondents are prone, and which we have frequently had occasion to deprecate. We have here the proof, that the claims of the Navy can be set forth in temperate language, and supported by incontrovertible facts, to elucidate which considerable labour appears to have been incurred, without detracting from the merits or rewards of the sister service, which all men admit are little enough to compensate the toils and privations of an arduous profession. We hope to see this generous spirit, of which the gallant Captain has given so good an example, followed up with brotherly feeling in future disquisitions respecting the United Service.

UNDER the head of correspondence will be found a letter, signed Corineus, and another signed Cato, confirming some of the statements we made in our number of the 14th instant; indeed, it has gratified us to learn that the facts we then gave have met the approval of the Service generally.

By the letter of Corineus, we are shown that, although it has been possible for a MILITARY Officer to rise from the rank of Ensign to that of Major-General within nineteen years, and part of this period in Peace, yet that a NAVAL Officer cannot, under the existing regulations, look to attain the corresponding rank of Rear-Admiral under forty-five to fifty years! and the letter of Cato proves that an Officer can become a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Army even before a Midshipman of the Navy can become eligible for the commission of a Lieutenant! Surely, then, this cannot be deemed to be fair or right, and as we have already observed, we must again repeat that in every form and shape that it is possible to be done, these two honourable and distinguished professions should be assimilated and placed side by side, for both equally deserve their Sovereign's favour and their country's protection.

VIEWING, as we do, the welfare of our Fisheries as an object of vast importance in this maritime nation, we have regarded with much pleasure the patriotic efforts of the gallant Member for Brighton, in bringing in a Bill for the correction of the many abuses which are now so generally complained of, particularly as connected with the Fisheries in the Channel. The first and principal of these is that which is committed daily by the numerous trawl vessels dragging their trawl-nets close along the shores at all seasons, and thus breaking up the ground whereon the different species of fish have deposited their spawn, as well as by their using nets of a mesh that a shrimp even would not go through. Whilst we have been thus regardless of our Channel Fisheries, which formerly produced some of the very best and hardiest seamen for our Fleets, FRANCE has wisely directed her close attention to the improvement of this great nursery for her Navy, both at home and abroad. By an ordinance of the French Government, no nets of any kind can be used within three leagues of the shore from between the 15th of April and the 1st of September, nor within two leagues at any other season of the year. We would seriously call CAPTAIN PECHELL's attention to this salutary regulation; and we would also submit to the Government the propriety of directing that the CUSTOM-HOUSE and COAST GUARD OFFICERS, together with those in the REVENUE CRUISERS, should make it part of their several duties to see that the laws regarding our Fisheries be duly and closely observed, giving in those officers the fines that might be levied on all offenders. This regulation can alone, we feel satisfied, secure the fishery laws from being violated, and we therefore strenuously urge its adoption.

WE have lately noticed in some of the Port Journals, a statement that the situation of SUPER-TENDENT in our Dock-yards and Hospitals, together h every other under the Admiralty, is positively ncefor*ward* to be limited to FIVE YEARS. A asure so just, so equitable, and so fair, no one with reason object to: our columns have unsingly pressed its adoption on the attention of Government, and we shall hail with sincere isfaction a regulation which will give in succession to every meritorious officer upon the list opportunity of benefiting his family by holding one of these advantageous appointments for stated period.

We have again to announce the promotion of three and highly meritorious mates to be Lieutenants, and Assist-surgeons to be Surgeons. The invariable artiality of the Earl of Minto's promotions and appointments is the theme of general congratulation through the Navy. There never was a time when merit was re appreciated, and patronage more disregarded than present; and we cannot sufficiently applaud the em now acted on, when officers' claims are patiently minutely scrutinised, and the most meritorious preferred. The gentlemanly and urbane behaviour of the vate Secretary, Mr. Tufnel, to those numerous individuals who have occasion to put their cases in his ds for the First Lord's consideration is also highly ken of.

We have never witnessed a better conducted sailing ch than that of the Royal Thames Yacht Club, which k place on Thursday. The arrangements were adrable, and the Club had provided the City of London on vessel for the accommodation of their friends and tors, on board of which an excellent band of music s provided for the enjoyment of the votaries of rpsichore, and refreshments were served up in a most eral style of elegance and abundance under the direcn of Mr. Harrison. The match was uncommonly ll contested, and the freshness of the breeze at st obliging the vessels to reef occasionally, as well the accidents to spars, &c., attendant upon carrying a ss of sail, by producing frequent changes in the sition of the yachts, made the race exceedingly inresting. Some little delay occurred at starting, in nsequence of the committee waiting upon the gallt veteran Sir Thomas Hardy, the governor of Greench Hospital, who is one of the Vice-patrons of the lub, and takes a warm interest in its concerns. But is preliminary having been accomplished, about a quarafter 11, at 12 o'clock the following yachts started from reast of Greenwich Hospital, to sail round a boat with ag moored off Gravesend.—Princess Victoria, 25 tons, Barron, Esq., owner; colours white, with the inrial crown in the centre. Telemachus, 21 tons, J. illiams, Esq., red and white dingy. Ada Jane, 17 s, Messrs. Sweeting and Malby; blue with a star. ert, 16 tons, W. Lyon, Esq.; white with blue cross. b Roy, 16 tons, J. Southam, Esq.; black and red ckered. Lady Louisa, 13 tons, T. Smith, Esq.; e. The odds at starting were in favour of the Princess Victoria, the freshness of the breeze giving a vessel her tonnage a presumed superiority. The Louisa took lead, but could not long maintain it, being obliged to , and also carrying away the cleet of her boom, this bilcot threw her completely out of the race, which s now admirably contested by the Victoria leading, lowed close by the Ada Jane, the Alert, and Rob Roy, t a short distance astern, Telemachus having evidently chance. The bets were now in favour of the Victoria, race becoming extremely interesting, owing to the en quality of the sailing and the admirable manageit displayed. In Long Reach, however, the favourite t with an accident to her bowsprit, and she lost conerably before she could refit her jib. The Ada took lead, and rounded the boat at Gravesend at 3 h. 27 m. sec. P.M., followed by the Rob Roy at 3 h. 31 m., and Victoria, which had recovered considerably, at 3 h. m. We did not observe when the Louisa rounded, d the Telemachus had abandoned the contest. During e race up the river the Ada maintained the lead, and ssed the winning boat at 5 h. 45m.; the Victoria being tle more than 17 seconds astern, the Rob Roy and lert about ten minutes after. The ceremony of preenting the cup, which is a very handsome one, and alued at sixty guineas, then took place amongst the eers and congratulations of the company. We believe o accident occurred to mar the enjoyment of the day, nd we think that no amusement can be more rational r national than such a sailing match as that which occurred on Thursday, conducted as it was with such gentlemanly taste and hospitality on the part of the stewards of the Club. Doubtless the Victoria must have won the race had not she carried away her bowsprit and, and had the distance been a little more it is probable she would have accomplished it afterwards, owing to her superiority of size enabling her to carry on when the smaller yachts were obliged to reef. There was some considerable betting, but everything went off pleasantly.

The election for South Essex will take place on the 22nd June, at Chelmsford. The only gentleman who has yet addressed the electors is Mr. G. Palmer, of Nazing, a Conservative. Mr. Conyers, also a Conservative, is talked of as likely to oppose him; and the names of Mr. Long Wellesley, jun., and Mr. Branfill, have been mentioned; indeed, placards were on Saturday issued, calling upon the electors to reserve their votes for the latter gentleman.

We could only notice on Saturday the abolition of the office of Inspector-General of Marines. It was held by Sir James Cockburn, Sir George's brother, who lately figured in the Orange correspondence of Col. Fairman. The duty will be carried on by the Deputy-Adjutant General, who is a marine officer. Great dissatisfaction was felt amongst the marine officers when Sir James Cockburn, who was a civilian, was put over their heads in military command of the corps, for which purpose the military rank of Major-General was given to him. The office was quite unnecessary, as there are no more duties to be performed now by the marine staff in London than were performed by the Deputy-Adjutant General and his Adjutant before the creation of the office of Inspector, and there will be a saving of 1,000*l.* per annum to the public, when the retiring allowance to which Sir James Cockburn's services entitle him, falls in.—Morning Chronicle. [We noticed this abolion three weeks since, and we have given this day the farewell order of the Major General.—ED.]

On Monday Prince Charles Ferdinand of the Two Sicilies was united at St. George's Church, according to the rites of the Protestant church, to Miss Penelope Smyth now Princess Charles of the Two Sicilies and Capua. The ceremony was performed by the Dean of Carlisle, the rector of the parish. The congregation of St. George's Church were asked on Sunday, for the third time, whether any of them knew any just cause or impediment why a marriage should not be solemnised between Charles Ferdinand de Bourbon and Penelope Smyth? The inaudible response was "No;" but the bans on the Sunday preceding were forbid by the Neapolitan minister, Count Ludolf, attended by his Secretary, who advanced to the pulpit and said, "Yes." A communication took place in the vestry room between the count and the rector, at which the former said it was the will of the King of Naples that the marriage should not take place; but the Rev. gentleman refused to entertain the objection. A ludicrous circumstance occurred during the ceremony; the Prince's valet, who had been entrusted with the ring, was actually shut out by the beadle, and a ring was therefore borrowed on the spot from a bystander. This is the fourth celebration; the first at Rome by Cardinal Weld, the second at Madrid, and the third at Gretna-green.

The town of New Ross offers a wager of 100*l.* that a handsomer lady will be found therein than in any other town in Ireland.

There exists at present an active demand for the precious metals for exportation to the United States, where a very great pressure for money is felt.

Lord Mulgrave has left town for Ireland.

The Right Hon. Edward Ellice, M.P. embarked at Portsmouth on Saturday last, on board the Samson, American line of packet ship, and sailed for New York. The Right Hon. Gentleman has considerable landed property in the United States and in Canada.

Highland Property.—The estate of Geanies in Ross has been sold to Col. Hugh Baillie, M.P. for Bristol, for the sum of 60,000*l.* The late proprietor at one period refused the sum of 90,000*l.* for this estate, and when it was proposed lately to sell it by lottery, the value of it was estimated at 80,000*l.*

Greenwich Railroad.—An immense number of persons availed themselves both on Monday and Tuesday of this means of conveyance for travelling half the distance to the fair. The trains took as many as 150 at a trip, and such was the celerity with which they travelled, that fresh trains started every ten minutes.

On Thursday the Marquess of Anglesey gave a sumptuous entertainment in Old Burlington Street, to the Prince of Orange, the Commander-in-Chief, and a distinguished party of military officers, many of whom, including the Illustrious Prince, were the gallant Marquess's companions in arms at the battle of Waterloo.

Malibran receives 20 guineas for singing a single song at a concert, and 25 guineas for attending private parties; besides a check for 370*l.* from the lessee of Drury-lane Theatre, every Monday morning, prospectively—that is, for work to be done in three nights only during the week! It is calculated that Malibran receives about 600*l.* a week.

The Morning Herald states there is a report from the clubs "of a decisive intimation having been given from the highest authority, that if a certain legal case is brought into Court, the defendant in the action will not be allowed to hold his present situation." Now the sentiments entertained and expressed by the highest authority are, unmingled disgust on account of the dastardly attempt to drag before the public private disagreements and family feuds, and to circulate slanderous reports merely for political purposes.

Extraordinary Circumstance.—One night during the last gale a pilot yawl, sailed from North Yarmouth, with nine men, in pursuit of a vessel homeward bound, with the intention of putting a pilot on board, to conduct the ship into port. When about 6 miles from the shore, the yawl was upset by a sudden gust of wind, which took her a-back and she instantly sunk. The men swam on their oars until benumbed with cold and worn out with fatigue. One man only who was an excellent swimmer, observing all his companions pass into eternity and finding no alternative for himself if he remained, took out his knife from his pocket, cut off all his clothes, and then swam for the shore, at the same time not aware how to steer, but at last caught a glimpse of the Lowestoff light, and steering towards it he arrived successfully on board a vessel which lay at anchor about a mile from shore, about 12 o'clock at night.

A meeting took place on Sunday morning between an Irish Member of Parliament whose name has been recently before the public in connection with certain transactions at the Turf Club, and Captain S——, of the —— Reg. of Foot. The quarrel arose out of observations made by the latter on the conduct of the Hon. Member, and all attempts at accommodation having proved fruitless, the parties met, and preliminaries being arranged, they fired, when Mr. R——'s ball struck the watch of his opponent, without effecting further injury. No second fire took place, but the friend of Capt. S. having repeated the offensive expressions, personal chastisement was immediately inflicted upon him by the insulted legislator. Without much parley the second took the place of principal—the pistols were again loaded, and at the first fire Mr. R.'s ball took effect in his opponent's hip, but happily without any fatal consequences. The affair thus terminated, and the gentlemen left the ground without any explanation.

A meeting took place on Monday morning off the Uxbridge-road, between N. A. G—h—n, Esq., and Capt. ff—t—n, the former attended by J. N—t—n, Esq., the latter by P. W—k—s, Esq.; on the first fire Mr. G. was hit very slightly, Capt. H. severely, but not dangerously. The seconds having interfered, the parties left the ground reconciled.

The Prince de Montfort, Jerome Bonaparte, has just left Switzerland, and is going to Rome to regulate the affairs of his late mother's property.

Mr. Stanley Stokes, a proctor of Doctors' Commons, committed suicide at Brighton on Monday morning under peculiar and melancholy circumstances; and on Wednesday Mrs Anne Colson, aged 71, a lady of great respectability, residing at Highgate, destroyed herself under circumstances of a very afflicting nature.

It is stated that the Bishop of Leon, accompanied by his Secretary, Antoine Pelvier, took his passage for London on board of the Batavier steamer, which left Rotterdam on 24th inst. The Bishop travels under the name of "Palarin."

Sir John B. Pechell, Naval Aide-de-camp to the King, and his Lady, niece to the Duke of Norfolk, set out next week for the waters of Carlsbad, which have been recommended to him by his physicians.

London Improvements and Steam Excursion Extraordinary.—Thursday last, a party, to while away an afternoon, embarked at Hungerford stairs on board the Greenwich steam packet, started at 2 o'clock precisely against a stiff breeze of wind and wave; landed at Greenwich Hospital before 3 o'clock, took a view of that noble and truly national establishment; entered the chapel where the brave sons of the battle and the breeze bend with humility before the throne of Grace, those foreheads which would yield to no foe not be dismayed by any danger. A veteran with one arm, in which was a long small wand, explained the beautiful altar-piece by West, and other objects in the chapel deserving of notice, and on returning, this veteran, with an apparent blush upon his manly countenance at the humiliating offer, asked with a low and trembling voice "to be remembered," and while he received the trifling gift in his one hand, he was obliged to lay down the wand to deposit the money in his pocket. Is this a position in which to place a brave and honest man? Is not this noble institution sufficiently supported by the nation? What a reflection upon this rich nation, that after viewing with true British feeling those emblems of our glory, our spirits and lofty sentiments of the greatness of our country are depressed with shame when your veteran guide asks for charity. After a view of Greenwich Park and passing through the remains of the Fair (being the day after the Fair) which exhibited woeful traces of its demoralising effects on the whole population within its immediate vicinity, the party reached the Rail Road at Deptford, and in six minutes were laid down at Bermondsey, accompanied in five carriages, by at least 70 passengers, all wishing it had been a hundred miles; so easy, so comfortable, so rapid was the journey. The party thence proceeded to that stupendous master-piece of human genius, the Thames Tunnel, and there also steam is the moving power which draws the earth from the workmen to the winch, and then hoists it to the surface. Here the party went 600 yards under the bed of the noble Thames, on whose bosom they had been sailing only two hours before. It is this singular circumstance which has induced these observations:—sailing upon the Thames, and walking under the Thames in less than two hours.

Lord Charles Lenuox Kerr has resigned his appointment of second Aid-de-Camp to Lieut.-Gen. Sir John Keane, at Bombay, and returned to England.

The Hon. Berkeley Craven.—The balance in his betting-book upon the Derby amounted but to 7,000*l.*; the difference, which was of course the real loss, only to 5,000*l.* The horse he chiefly backed was Gladiator—who came in second—and although he lost all that he had betted upon Gladiator's being the first in, he won proportionably of the losings of the field against his being second. Again, the Oaks day was all in favour of the deceased, who backed the Yorkshire Filly—the winner—upon whom he had 3,000*l.* in one bet. Altogether it is computed that he would have netted about 200*l.* by the recent two days. We believe his principal loss upon the Derby was to the eldest son of a gallant Marquess.

The recess of ten days in the Parliamentary session seems not to have had any visible effect on the fashionable world, in sending members and their families into the country; in addition to which, the parties interested in the Railway Bills, now under discussion in the House of Commons are all kept in town and on the qui vive for the assembling of the various committees, particularly in the Brighton Railway, upon which the committee are to meet on Tuesday by adjournment to decide on the evidence which they have been hearing for some weeks. It seems that the contention for the best line in this committee has rested principally between Stephenson and Sir John Rennie's lines. The latter has now become the favourite, and since the engineer's evidence has closed, and the counsel have summed up, the effect on the public has been manifest. The circuitous line has fallen, whilst the direct line has been rising daily. The latter is to Brighton, whilst the former is to Shoreham, and by a branch terminates at Brighton. There can be no doubt that the citizens of London and the inhabitants of Brighton are entitled to a direct line.

One of Mr. Colburn's earliest Windsor publications is to be a little volume from the delightful pen of L. E. L. called "Traits and Trials of Early Life." The young, in particular, may anticipate much gratification from this new production by the fair "Improvisatrice."

The Duke of Gordon.—Several of our contemporaries have not only reported the death of this gallant nobleman as occurring on Thursday last, but have also published biographical sketches, &c. His Grace is seriously ill, arising from an attack of influenza; but from the answer to inquiries at his residence in Belgrave-square, we may still hope that his constitution will rally.

King's College.—The distribution of prizes in the medical school took place on Saturday, and was a very gratifying ceremony.

BRITISH LEGION IN SPAIN

General Orders.

Head-quarters, St. Sebastian, May 17, 1836.

The time requisite for obtaining the reports from the commanders of brigades and regiments, enumerating the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men who more particulary distinguished themselves in the glorious action of the 5th inst., and the necessity of classifying the names of those so reported, has obliged the Lieut.-Gen. to postpone till the present moment the duty so grateful to his feelings of expressing to the troops his deep sense of obligation for their noble and admirable conduct on that day. The enemy's defences, after five months of preparation, had become screened on either flank by a river and a morass, and defended by what may be termed a garrison of 8000 men.

Before day-light our three columns of Spanish and British troops, under Brig.-Generals Chichester, Reid, and Shaw, ascended, attacked, and carried in the most prompt and excellent manner the enemy's first line of entrenchements. A series of barricades, some deep ravines, and, for the moment, insurmountable obstacles presented themselves to oppose any further immediate progress against the enemy's centre and right. What we gained, however, in that quarter was firmly maintained till the proper moment arrived for a farther advance. In the meantime the 1st and 2d brigades, and the Spanish corps attached to them, still pressing forward, carried in brilliant style that part of the second line in their front, where the 7th, 9th, and 10th regiments established themselves, although continually exposed to a very heavy cross fire.

The whole of the 1st reg., with some detachments from the 7th, 8th, 10th, and Segovia reg., continuing in the same direction their triumphal career, soon bulged themselves, notwithstanding all the difficulties of the ground, close under the enemy's third and last line of defence—the redoubt or battery of Loguiz. From this point some heroic attemps were made to climb over the enemy's parapets on the summit, led by Col. Ellis, accompanied by Majors Freestun, Hicks, Thompson Capt. Seaman, and other officers. These efforts, which were for a time ineffectual, owing to the steepness of the ascent, but still more to the extreme fatigue and exhaustion of the troops from previous exhaustion, redounded in the highest degree to the honour of those engaged in them. One of the chivalrous onsets referred to was headed by Capt. Knight, A.D.C. to Gen. Chichester, a gallant officer, who never went into action without achieving distinction, and whose loss is a source of the utmost regret to the Lieut.-General and his companions in arms.

At length the admirably-directed fire of his Britannic Majesty's ships under Commodore Lord J. Hay, and especially that of the Phœnix, Capt. Henderson, destroyed a part of the enemy's defences. The 4th and 8th regts. of the Legion, under Lieut.-Colonels Harley and Godfrey, just disembarked from H. M.'s ships now mounted to the assault through the breach thus made, and with the most cool and splendid intrepidity, without firing a shot, rendered themselves masters of this long-contested point.

At the same moment the Saragossa and Oviedo regts., the distinguished volunteers of Guipuzcoa, the mobilized company of National Guards, the 3d, 6th, and Rifles of the Legion, penetrated the centre, carrying in rapid succession several fortified houses, and capturing the enemy's cannon in that part of the line. At this point the rebel standard, erected in the centre of their works, indicating their intention of giving no quarter, became the prize of the Westminster Grenadiers, under Lt.-Col Churchill. Here also fell, mortally wounded, the rebel chief Segastibelza. On the other hand, it was in this last charge that Col. Tupper received his wounds. He was leading on his men with that daring ardour which those who knew him can conceive. He met the fate of a brave soldier, and his honoured remains now rest beneath the spot ennobled by his fall.

The victory was gained—the enemy fled utterly routed in all directions. The first proper fruit of this memorable action was the destruction of the enemy's works erected against this interesting city, and of placing it and its important bay in a state of permanent security. This preliminary is now nearly accomplished, and shortly the Lieut.-General has no doubt but that further successes await the troops. The Lieut.-General has now but to endeavour to express his sense, though inadequately, of the merits of those whose conduct shone most conspicuously on the occasion. For himself he claims nothing but that of having been the senior officer present. It was an affair of straightforward fighting, and the end was distinctly gained by the intrinsic valour of all ranks, officers and men—Spaniards as well as British.

The extensive experience, superior ability, and unbounded zeal of Brig.-Generals M'Dougal and Reid are so fully known and appreciated, not only in this corps, but in the British army, that the Lieut.-General need only say, that to their advice and assistance on every occasion, and to their indefatigable exertions in forwarding the executive parts of the service, he is more indebted than it is possible for him to describe. To Brig.-Gens. Chichester and Shaw, for their constancy, unrivalled practical skill, courage, and fine example, in directing throughout the day the first and second brigades under their command, the Lieut.-General will ever feel the deepest sense of gratitude. The prominent and conspicuous claims of those four officers in particular to a high and honourable consideration for their great share in the issue of this hard fought contest are submitted to the government, and will not be unattended to. To the Governor of St. Sebastian, Don Ramon Rebollo. To Col. Don Joaquim Maria Bellosa, commanding the Oviedo reg., and for a time succeeding to the command of the Light Brigade; Cols. Don Tiburcio Saraged, of the Saragossa reg., Don C. Mellendiz, of the Segovia reg., Don N——, of the Jaen reg., Don Fernando Cottoner, commanding the volunteers of Guipuscoa, Don Jose Resusta, commanding H. C. M. Marine Forces, Lieut.-Col. Don Manuel Menendez, Segovia reg., Capt. the Baron Burgueld, San Fernando reg., and Lieuts. Don Francisco Serrano, Carbineros of the Real Hacienda, and Don Luis Gautier, of the Rl. Engineers. To Col. Colquhoun, whose well-known ability and energy in command of the Artillery were of the greatest service, and to the following officers commanding regiments of the Legion:—Lieut.-Colonels Ellis, Churchill, Harley, Ross, Swan, Godfrey, Fitzgerald, O'Connell, and Fortescue, the very best and highest acknowledgments are due. In this list of brave and excellent chiefs it would indeed be difficult and invidious to make any selection. To the officers of the General and Personal Staff, to the Quartermaster General, Brig.-General M'Dougall; to the Adj.-General, Brig.-General Le Marchant; to the Military Secretary, Col. Considine; my A. D. C. Lord W. Paget; Lieut.-Cols Cotoner and Lezama; Majors Espelero, and Hermann, and Shelly, and Don Ignacio Gurrea, the three last named of my A.D.C.'s having been wounded, and to all of whom, for their devoted zeal and remarkable efficiency, he offers his sincerest thanks. And he has only again to reiterate to the whole of the troops—officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of both nations, this heartfelt testimony of his admiration of their conduct. In the brief and hurried despatch which the Lieut.-Gen. transmitted to Government at the close of the action, pressed for time, and nearly overwhelmed with fatigue, he felt unable to enumerate at the moment more than a few indeed of the names of those who had distinguished themselves, and he therefore thought it more just not to do this partially, but to embody the whole, as he now does, in one record, which will be transmitted to the General-in-Chief and Minister-at-War. The whole of those named in this order, as by law, receive the decoration of the military merit of St. Ferdinand, and the non-commissioned officers and privates for their conduct also in the field of battle, according to the recommendations sent in, receive the decoration of Isabel the Second:—

Third Class of St. Ferdinand.—Brig.-Generals M'Dougall, Chichester, Reid, Shaw.

Second Class of St. Ferdinand.—Brig.-Gen. Le Marchant, Cols. Ramon Rebollo, J. M. Belloso, Tiburcio Saraged, José Resusta, chief of Spanish Marine, Colquhoun, Considine, Lord W. Paget, Capt. Henderson, R.M. Phœnix; Lieut.-Cols. Fernando Cotoner, Fitzgerald, Godfrey, O'Connell, Churchill, Ellis, Harley.

Lieut.-Colonels—Alex. Cruise; 9th reg. Staff; Malcolm Ross, 6th reg.; M. Fortescue, Rifles; J. Thompson, 1st reg.; J. Hicks, 1st reg.; W. F. Campbell, 3rd reg.; Cannan, 4th reg.; C. Shaw, 10th reg.; B. Mitchell, 8th reg.; V. Lezama, 7th reg.; A. Losack, 4th reg.; G. M'Cabe, 7th reg.; A. Jackman, Staff.

Clarke, 6th reg.; J. Newcombe, Rifles; P. Ramsey, 4th reg.; W. Shields, 6th; P. M'Knight, 8th reg.; George Talbot and Edward Bethune, 1st reg.; W. L. Freeston, 3d reg.; Don Raphael Scudere, A.D.C. to the Lieut.-Gen.; G. F. Herman, Rifles Staff; Don Ricardo Shelly, A.D.C. to the Lieut.-Gen.; P. Thoreau, Artillery.

Captains.—T. Edge, 7th reg.; W. H. Fitzgerald and T. Parke, 10th reg.; E. W. Thompson and F. B. Street, 9th reg.; Andrew Mackie and J. Sheppard, 9th reg.; C. Gilway and Count de Ralling, 10th reg.; R. Reed and J. Regg, 3d reg.; J. Shaw and C. Wood, 6th reg.; E. Costello, H. Atkyns, and Jeffries, Rifles; Baron de Burgueld, Spanish Army, attached to Light Brigade; P. Allez, 9th reg.; R. Wright, 10th reg.; Don Vicente Goenaga, Volunteers of Guipuzcoa.

Lieutenants.—Don Ignacio Gurrea, aide-de-camp to the Lieutenant-General; C. Townly, M. Xumines, 1st reg.; M. Chadwick and James M'Intosh, 3d reg.; Walter Carey, 6th reg.; E. de Burgh and John Courtney, Rifles; Serrana attached to the Light Brigade—W. Phelan and Alexander Duncan, 7th reg.; Lieut. J. H. Hamilton, Artillery; J. J. Sparrow, 9th reg.; Felix Prado, Volunteers of Guipuzcoa.

Ensigns.—J. C. Byrne, 9th reg.; H. O'Donnell, 10th reg.; Volunteer Dillon, 9th reg.

Dr. Lacy Evans, Lieut.-General.

By command, J. Gaspard Le Marchant, Adjutant-General.

Brig.-Gen. Evans and Capt. L. Dickson.—The fol…wing letter was on Wednesday sent by Brigadier-Ge…ral Evans to the Secretary to the Junior United …rvice Club:—

"Hokes' Hotel, Duke Street, May 25, 1836.

"Sir,—As I no longer wish to belong to the Junior …ited Service Club, I request you will be so good as to …e my name out of the list of its members. I am, &c.,

"R. De Lacy Evans,

"Lieut.-Col. F.L.C. Service, Brig.-Gen. B.A. Legion.

"To T. Hatch, Esq. Sec. Junior United-Service Club."

After the very strange conduct of the committee of …e Junior United Service Club, the step which Brig.-…en. Evans has taken will occasion little surprise.

Some time after the affair between Gen. Evans and …apt. Dickson, a printed account of the proceedings of … Court of Inquiry, on a statement reported to have …een made to Lord F. Somerset by the latter gentleman, …as put into our hands. It is always with reluctance …at we enter on questions of this nature, and after the …nfortunate turn which the dispute had taken, we deemed … on the whole advisable to publish ourselves nothing … any way calculated to revive animosities. As, how…ver, some of the documents inserted in the account have …een transferred to the columns of our contemporaries, …nd as reports have been circulated at variance with …uth, we are induced to lay the following particulars be…re our readers:—

In The United Service Journal for this month appear… a statement made by Capt L. Dickson, which was …rwarded to Sir H. Taylor for the purpose of being … him submitted to the King. In that statement Capt …ickson has omitted to give a very important document, …hich establishes the real cause of his resignation of the …mmission of Lieut.-Colonel in the British Auxiliary …egion. What the conduct of Capt. Dickson was, is, … think, proved in the following letter of Mr. Staff…rg. Barry, an old and most respectable medical officer … the British army:—

(Copy.) Vittoria, April 9, 1836.

"Sir,—I have just had the honour of receiving your let… of yesterday, and in reply, can have no hesitation in …ting, that the barracks of the 7th reg., while commanded … Lieut.-Col. Dickson in this city, were in a most filthy …te, and that Lieut.-Col. Dickson did not, either here or …ewhere, while the hospital arrangements of his regiment …ere under my inspection, evince that regard for the acco…modation of the sick which is always expected from the …mmanding officer of a regiment, and which is indispensa…le to the success of their treatment. Several complaints have …een made to me on this subject, both here and at Bilboa, … Mr. Fitzgerald, the late surgeon of the 7th reg.; and …nile your head-quarters were at Velunn, I witnessed a …ost deplorable proof of the utter disregard of Lieut.-Col. …ickson for the comforts, indeed the lives, of the sick of his …egiment. On one of the coldest mornings I have ever yet …xperienced, Lieut.-Col. Dickson ordered the whole of the …ick to be paraded, and kept them writhing under the in…ense severity of an easterly wind during the time that he …ad been drilling the regiment. I have, &c., (Signed) "G. Barry, M.D.,

"Staff-surg., late of the 1st Brigade.

"To Brig.-General Evans, &c."

We have also before us a printed copy of the court-…artial which tried Maj. Long for striking Capt. Dick…son, and we there observe that Capt. Dickson states on …ath that Maj. Long struck him "in the face;" while, …n his statement in The United Service Journal, he es…timate (page 92), that Maj. Long struck him, [on his back being turned, a violent blow on the side of the head. We merely allude to the contradictory nature of these two statements, for the purpose of cautioning the public against placing confidence in any statements to the pre…judice of Brig.-General Evans and the British Auxi…liary Legion from the same quarter. We trust that his Majesty's ear will not be poisoned against respectable officers of long service and well-earned reputation, by ex parte statements, emanating from a source from which the contradictory evidence above quoted has proceeded. Morning Chronicle.

T., K.H., on appoint. to Third Class Guelphic Order; Wilkinson, Lieut., on return to India.

His Majesty's next Levee will take place on Wednesday 8th of June, and in future the Levees will be held on Wednesdays as usual until further orders.

The King's Birth Day.—His Majesty's birth-day will be celebrated to-day by a grand Drawing Room at St. James's, and an evening party on an extensive scale. The Drawing-room is expected to be the most brilliant of the season.

Their Majesties and suite will return to Windsor Castle on Monday afternoon; and will not again visit St. James's until after Ascot Races. His Majesty has given very extensive invitations to the Nobility, to accompany the Royal Cortegé to the Heath during the Ascot Races. The Earl and Countess Grey are specially commanded, and will sleep at the Castle. The Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch have also been invited.

The Queen gave a state ball (the second this season) at St James's Palace on Tuesday (the anniversary of the Princess Victoria's birthday).

On Tuesday the Princess Victoria entered her 18th year: it was marked by general demonstrations of respect and attention.

The King, on the nomination of Lord Foley, has appointed Charles Dance, Esq., one of his Majesty's Honourable Corps of Gentlemen at Arms, vice Charles Bague.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence

Spain.—Cordova was on 22d near Arloban at the head of 20,000 troops, well armed. Instead, however, of attacking the Carlists openly, and in their strong-holds, he was carrying on a sort of village warfare. Gen. Evans is still at St. Sebastian, where he will remain till the arrival of more reinforcements. Don Carlos is at Villareal. As we stated last week, Isturiz reigns in the stead of M. Mendizabal. Of this there is no doubt, notwithstanding rumours that a telegraphic dispatch from Paris has arrived, announcing the recall of Mendizabal by the Queen. This has not been confirmed.

Russia.—The Emperor has seven children, amongst whom are three Princesses; the eldest is the Grand Duchess Maria Nicolaiowna, who is very handsome, and has a great desire to see France. The Court of Russia does not disapprove of her wish, and it is stated that her suite who are to accompany her have been chosen. Reports are spread in the salons of St. Petersburgh of the probability of a marriage between the Duchess Maria and the Duke of Orleans. It is likely during the visit of the Duke of Orleans to Berlin the Princess Maria will be in that capital.

Italy.—It is stated the Duke of Modena has refused the hand of his daughter to Don Miguel. The Princess is not only distinguished for her beauty and amiable qualities, but possesses a very considerable dower. Don Miguel appeared to found high hopes upon the alliance, and it is known that of all his own fortune he has saved only a few diamonds. Two of the sons of Lucien Bonaparte, Prince of Canino, killed a gamekeeper of Canino, in a hasty quarrel that arose between them. The Government immediately sent a detachment of carbineers to arrest the young Princes, who resisted by force of arms, supported by several others. On presenting the warrant of arrest, the Lieutenant, who commanded the party, was killed by a pistol-shot from one of the Princes. A general contest ensued, in which several were wounded. In the end, the armed force gained the upper hand, and secured one of the Princes; but the other succeeded in effecting his escape.

Sweden.—Stockholm, May 15.—The Staats Zeitung gives to-day the following article from the Morgenbladt of Christiania:—"According to the accounts from Sweden which have been mentioned in this paper, we may daily expect that the garrison of Christiansand and Fredericksvarn will be reinforced, to preserve those points against a coup de main of any foreign power—Russia, or, probably, England in particular, which it is conjectured wishes to have a strong point in the Baltic, or at the entrance of it. Perhaps orders may be given to arm some gun-boats."

Literary Notices.

A Home Tour through the Manufacturing Districts of England in the Summer of 1835. By Sir George Head, Author of "Forest Scenes and Incidents in the Wilds of North America." John Murray.

There is scarcely a more entertaining or lively tourist than Sir George Head, or one who can better dress up every day scenes and occurrences into playful sketches. In his present volume he gives the "impressions" he received in a desultory ramble through the manufacturing districts. From these we certainly cannot gather statistical facts or information beyond what is to be found in previous publications, but we have in their place many sportive and amusing sketches that will render the volume acceptable to most readers. Liverpool, Stockport, Manchester, Leeds, Newcastle, Hull, Sunderland, and other places are included in the tour. The description of a scene on board a packet-boat from Manchester to Liverpool is rich:—

"Among the tenants of the best cabin were a newly-married couple—if such a description can reasonably be given of two young people travelling with a little infant, their first-born, and a nursery-maid in their train. This pair presented an interesting study of nature, were it only because it led one to estimate the different degrees of that dominion and power in which mankind exult, and also because it exhibited one of the very numerous ways there are in the world of being happy. I think I never saw a couple more rich in their own conceit, or more inclined to be satisfied with themselves and the things about them—and these were all on a small scale. He was a slight, weasel-shaped man, like a stunted stay-maker;—the wife, little;—the child, by appearance, an abortion;—and the maid-servant, little,—fresh from the country, with clattering thick-soled shoes, and hair tied back, evidently on her promotion, in a little knot like a shaving-brush, the length of one's thumb. The man and wife smirked and smiled on each other, and both gloated with eyes of affection on the dear

r. The lady, anxious to shew to the rest of the pasers that she kept a maid-servant, ever and anon was eg her from one part of the vessel to another to give some trifling order. The little maid, nevertheless, ed truly happy, and the more the child cried, the more jiggled it, and the more her active eyes travelled round round, looking first at one person and then on another, e they sparkled with delight as she inhaled the pure t air. When the child dropped asleep, the mistress ediately set her to work on pieces of glazed, crackling n contained in her bag, in order that she should not be The child, too, was happy, for it was an ill-conditioned tbing, that delighted in crying, and it cried in its t's content; and the more it cried the more its papa's glistened as he suggested this, that, and t'other dy."

t Liverpool Sir George went to the Clarence Dock es a cargo of pigs unladen from Ireland, and thus the r is described:—

The pigs were, contrary to my expectation, persuaded walk out without any difficulty by means of planks ad zig zag, and leading upwards, all the way from the
. The service of attending a cargo of pigs, and reining in their company below,—when it is considered the flavour arising from their hides is so strong as to t a column of air a mile long or more, and nobody ws exactly how broad,—must be really arduous. I understood, however, that such attendance is absoly necessary, and regularly performed, in order to stir up, as the only means, the creatures being so closely ed, to prevent their suffocation. At all events, on the eet occasion, men were doing duty below manfully, in ot and corrupted atmosphere. As each pig walked up platform, Paddy behind with a small switch, whenever animal attempted to swerve, persuaded him with a delitouch on the rump. The animal, probably mistaking for the bite of a fly, gently placed one leg forward:
was no sooner set in its place, than another tickle of switch on the other side caused him to advance the r. An Irishman can certainly, in common cases, do with his pig than the native of any other country; and is, no doubt, mainly owing to his treating the beast kindness. A very short time ago I met a man leading ge boar in a string through the town of Litchfield. It sot necessary to inquire whither the latter and his genen usher were going; but I could not help stopping to a little conversation with the man, to which the boar, a playful glance of his eye, actually seemed to be ning. The creature followed his master as willingly as g, a leathern thong being tied loosely round his thick ; and I was assured that, by kind treatment alone, he boee brought to such a state of discipline as to be thohly depended on. Once or twice during the time the stopped, the boar seemed anxious to proceed; and gh he did not put forth his strength, his weight alone
d for a counteracting power. In order to stop him, man placed one foot against his flank, as a purchase, then, the other foot resting on the ground, he laid his lders to the draft, and pulled him off his centre."

We will now turn to a very different subject,—ladies ing at Southport Sands:—

The ceremony of ladies bathing is accompanied with s peculiarities. Owing to the rapid rise and fall of the they are obliged to be particularly quick in their move-ts, so that, not only those who are about to dip are as y as bees, but likewise the mothers, and aunts, and rs, and cousins, and friends, who attend them. And, aps, it is this appearance of bustle that always attracts ang of idlers, who, having nothing better to do, stand nd look on. I did not remark any specific regulations rced as to distance among the spectators, which point ned to be decided by custom and common consent to y body's satisfaction. A painted board, nevertheless, ed in a conspicuous position in the rear of a score or ards of bathing machines standing in a line, decrees those of the gentleman shall not advance nearer than hundred yards to those of the ladies; and further, that pleasure-boats are prohibited from approaching the as when bathing, within the distance of thirty yards, r the penalty, in case of contempt of the regulation, of shillings; a fine which, under the circumstances, cannot ink be called exorbitant. I am not aware how it is osed to adjust a case of disputed distance, some favour g properly due to the variation of the sleeveman's eye uch an occasion. The amount of the fine has been cal-ted, probably, by those best able to assess the damage, affords the means of turning, in these liberal days, even dy's charms to the good of the parish. The insulted one becomes a public benefactress, while the gentleman d, provided his eyes are tolerably good, has no cause to plain on the draft on his purse. The fine, moreover, ng on the boat's crew, would be paid in a kind of ad
rem rate, as the case might be—not exceeding, at all its, a few pence per naked lady. All the old bathing en at Southport (to make use of an Hiberoticism) are g men, that is to say, stout lusty fellows, under middle Whether the service diminishes the chilling effects of the water; whether it makes young men old, or old men young, is a point, they say, not yet determined; at all events, the young ladies, one and all, without hesitation, submit to their guidance, such as they are. The guide, or male personage, or what not, having taken his post in front of the door of the machine, in the usual manner, the young lady undresses within. Having disencumbered herself of her apparel, she puts on a dark blue bathing dress (in which I perceived no other difference from those commonly used, than that it was invariably fastened with strings between the ancles), and, in this costume, makes her appearance, 'albo sic humero nitens, ut pura nocturno renidet luna mari,'—(her shoulder white as the clear moonbeam that glitters on the midnight sea),—on the upper step of the sanctuary. Presenting both her hands to the guide, and supported by his grasp, she then falls backwards on the wave, receiving the embraces of Old Neptune as young ladies usually do, with the accompaniments of squeaking, giggling, kicking, splashing, and wincing."

Another lively sketch of the ladies and we have done.

"Women are terribly nervous creatures, and, somehow or other, whenever they have to deal with that rude rough animal, man, they universally put themselves into a twitter. I particularly remarked that every one of these damsels began to be fussy the moment, or rather a few moments before, her turn to be carried arrived; and invariably one and all anticipated the gallants, by stepping forward most unnecessarily to meet them, and placing each her dainty little foot in the puddle. But this action was merely preliminary, and quite trifling compared with the furious fit of the fidgets which followed on being actually lifted. This ceremony was attended by an innumerable host of little difficulties. First they would not be helped at all,—then they would be helped, but their clothes were in the way. Some found fault because the gentlemen placed their hands too high,—others squeaked because they were too low,—then they were sure they would fall forwards; and then again there was nothing at all to prevent their falling backwards; so that, finally, what with all their whims and fancies, they really, poor things, became seriously frightened, sometimes, as it wrought to a frenzy of ungovernable agitation, seizing the beau by the curly poll; at other times by an ear or a whisker. However, they were no sooner on board than their fears were all forgotten, and they became so joyous and happy, that the bloom of youth and hilarity not only irradiated their own countenances, but also shed a reflected light all round."

The History of Brazil, from the arrival of the Braganza Family to the abdication of Don Pedro in 1831. By John Armitage, Esq. 2 vols. Smith and Elder.

This is an elaborate and valuable history of the Brazilian Empire, and to which the commercial world may refer for much important information. Mr. Armitage was induced to undertake the task from having experienced, during his long residence in the Brazils, the want of any ordinary means of reference regarding the financial and political affairs of the country. He assures us that, during the execution of his work, he has had opportunities of associating with some of the most eminent political characters in Brazil. He has had access to documents and stores of information open but to few; and he has also had occasion to visit the seat of the Cisplatine war, and thus been enabled to estimate the manners and character of the wild inhabitants of that district, from personal observation. These advantages our author has turned to the best account, and his work will be consulted as the most sterling authority we have of the present state of Brazil.

Syria, the Holy Land, Asia Minor, &c. Illustrated by W. H. Bartlett, W. Purser, &c., with Descriptions of Plates by John Carne, Esq. Fisher and Co.

We have repeatedly had the satisfaction of noticing Dr. Beattie's "Switzerland," with the admirable illustrations by Mr. Bartlett; and we are glad to find the latter gentleman lending his valuable talents to this new undertaking, which promises to be of at least equal interest to the former work. Most of the places illustrated have been visited by Mr. Carne, previous to the Egyptian invasion. The first part is in every respect an admirable specimen in pictorial excellence, as well as letter-press.

Qualifications of an Adjutant General.—It requires, and always did, and always will require, an officer known to the army, and by the army admitted to be fully equal to the duties—and to be professionally respected in the army, and to have the proper influence,—the influence of opinion,—over the officers of the line, without which zeal must be degenerated by the engenderment of contempt. He should have both a head and a heart, or he will fail to win those golden opinions which can alone make him a truly beneficial public servant; and let his rank or his disposition be what it may, he must be a gentleman in his manners, or he will not be deemed the fittest to have to deal with gentlemen.

The Constable of France, Armand de Montmorenci.—Brantome says of this warrior, that every morning whether he was at home or in the army, on a march or in camp, he never neglected to receive and hear his Pater-nosters. But it was a famous saying among the soldiers, "take care of the Paternosters of Mons. the Constable," for, whilst he was muttering over them, he would throw in, by way of parenthesis, as the occasions of discipline or war demanded, "hang me that fellow on the next tree; pass me that other through the pikes, bring me hither that man and shoot him before my face; cut me in pieces all those rascals who are so audacious as to defend that steeple against the king; burn me that village; set fire to all the country for a quarter of a league round;" and all this he would do without the least interruption to his devotions, which he would have thought it a sin to defer to another hour, so tender was his conscience!

Lord Clive and Colonel Lawrence.—When his venerated commander was on the point of retirement, with a very moderate fortune, Clive settled 500l. per annum on him during life. "It gives me great pleasure," he observes to Lawrence on this occasion, "that I have an opportunity given me of shewing my gratitude to the man to whom my reputation, and, of course, my fortune is owing."

Advertisement.—Ascot Races.—These Races, which invariably present a Coup d'Œil of surpassing magnificence and gaiety, are indebted for the most brilliant attraction to the presence of a combination of rank and beauty, rarely displayed in such splendid profusion. The constellation of charms irradiating the scene with the feeling of spontaneous admiration, awakens also that of regret, that aught less balmy than the breath of Zephyr, or less congenial than the dewe of a perpetual spring, should visit the delicate tints which bloom on the female countenance; the activity of modern research has however withdrawn from their previous repose amidst the exotic treasures of the East, and transferred to a sphere of the most felicitous utility those Gems of the Toilet, Rowland's Kalydor and Macassar Oil. The former in the maintenance of its proud title of "the Auxiliary of Beauty" diffuses the delightful and refreshing coolness, protecting the face and skin from the effects of sun and dust, and decidedly averts parched skin, sunburns, freckle, &c., while the latter, ever true to its unrivalled reputation, preserves the undulating beauties of the graceful curl, uninjured by perspiration, during the ride, drive, or promenade; and together with that peculiar glossy transparency of the Hair, which alone distinguishes those who habitually use it.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—CAPITAL £500,000, With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of 5l. each. Deposit, 1l. per Share. The remaining 4l. to be paid in two instalments, namely, 2l. per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro. tem., No. 39, Essex Street, Strand.

Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one of whatever station in life who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are of themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to its equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined, for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, 5*l.* per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders holding two or more shares who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7½ per cent per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

W. MONTAGUE, Secretary.

39, Essex Street, Strand, May 12, 1836.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

Sir, I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount. I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 24th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals, also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Costly Flatulences; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 208 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations:—Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Thirlwall, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. London, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Apothecaries to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

LONDON, SHOREHAM, & BRIGHTON RAILWAY WITHOUT A TUNNEL.

An advertisement having appeared in the papers of this day, stating, inferentially, that only two projected lines of Railway between London and Brighton are under the consideration of Parliament, the Provisional Committee of this undertaking (the third line, but the only one without any Tunnels whatever) deem it right to put their Shareholders and the Public in possession of the fact that this projected undertaking is under the consideration of the Committee of the House of Commons, equally with the line proposed by Sir John Rennie, and that (as varied from this line) by Mr. Stephenson. The Committee of the House of Commons will, in due course, report upon this line, which, in the minds of all parties not prejudiced, is the best line proposed, and notwithstanding the efforts strenuously making to induce a belief to the contrary, confident reliance may be placed upon a favourable report being given by an impartial Committee of the House of Commons upon this line—the only one without a Tunnel.

By order of the Provisional Committee,

J. C. FOURDRINIER, Secretary.

Railway Offices, No. 31, New Broad-street.

GINGER WINE MANUFACTORY, Coventry-street, Haymarket, London.—Messrs. DALL CO., having for many years past continued to receive the distinguished patronage of the Nobility and Gentry for their Double Strong JAMAICA GINGER WINE, flatter themselves, from the immense stock always on hand, they can offer that article more pure and unadulterated than any house in London. The continued recommendations of His Majesty's Physicians, and the Faculty in general, for its unequalled efficacy in cases of Gout, Spasms, Indigestion, and Flatulency, induce the Proprietors to caution the public against the extraordinary puffs now taken by numerous vendors to puff off an article of inferior value. Price 20s. per dozen, or 24s., bottles and hampers included.

The Trade Supplied.

TROUSERS ON A NEW PRINCIPLE —G. WALKER, 33, St. James's-street, has discovered an entirely new principle of cutting Trousers, and offers to furnish the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, for Ready Money, with this important article of dress, admirably adapted to the display of the figure, and at the same time affording such comfort in all exercise, as to insure the highest satisfaction to those who honour him with orders. If Art can give ornament to Nature—if anything can surpass her in the contour of a limb, it is when clothed made elegantly to fit the same; then it may fairly be admitted that Art has added a charm even to Nature.—G. W. begs to state that he continues to supply Uniforms for Officers of the Army and Navy, also Deputy Lieutenants' and Court Dresses, in the most tasteful style and at moderate charges.

NO. 50, JERMYN STREET, ST. JAMES'S.—A. JOHNSON, Liqueur Merchant, by appointment, to his Majesty (late of the Firm of Johnson, Juster and Brooks, No. 2, Pall Mall), respectfully notifies the dissolution of his Partnership with Mr. A. Brooks, and that he has removed his Business to No. 50, Jermyn-street, where he solicits the Noblemen and Gentlemen who have so long patronised his house to send their orders. He assures them his Liqueurs, Wines, and Spirits, will be found of the same superior quality as heretofore, and he has much pleasure in announcing a considerable reduction in their price.

LONDON and PORTSMOUTH RAILWAY DIRECT, with a Branch to CHICHESTER and BOGNOR, terminating in capacious DOCKS at PORTSMOUTH.

CAPITAL—1,200,000*l.*, in 21,000 Shares of 50*l.* each.—Deposit 2*l.* per Share.

The Provisional Committee are proceeding with the necessary arrangements connected with the Branch advertised to Chichester, and an active survey of the line is being prosecuted for carrying into effect the original intention of this Company for constructing the intended Railway between LONDON and PORTSMOUTH by the most DIRECT and practicable line, as they have throughout acted under the conviction that any other, or more circuitous line must only entail on the passengers and transmission of goods between those places additional cost of conveyance in proportion to the extra length adopted, without any corresponding benefit being derived.

The promoters of, and the Provisional Committee of Management of this undertaking, abstain from fully publishing the result of their surveys until the results of the surveys will enable them to lay down the exact route of the main line itself, and of the respective branches in detail before the public, so that efficient means of investigation may be afforded, which can alone secure public support and the sanction of the legislature.

The proposed direct line, which will pass through Guildford and Godalming, was submitted to the attention of a Public Meeting held at Guildford on the 25th inst., at which the Mayor, J. SMALLPEICE, Esq. presided, when a Committee of the inhabitants of that Borough was appointed to take into consideration the best means of securing to Guildford and Godalming the advantages of such mode of communication.

Any information required, may in the meantime be obtained at the offices of the Company, No. 7, John-street, Adelphi, where applications for Shares will be received (if by letter, post paid) and also at the Company's Agent at Portsmouth J. N. Robinson, at Portsea, to Archibald Law, Esq., Solicitor.

J. MILLER, Secretary.

THE DIRECT LONDON and BRIGHTON RAILWAY.—The DIRECTORS think it right to lay before their Subscribers and the Public the principal points which have been proved before the Committee of the House of Common[s] by scientific and practical engineers and contractors of the highest respectability—namely, Dr. Lardner, Sir John Rennie, Mr. Rastrick, Mr. Locke, Mr. Leather, Mr. Myine, Mr. Price, Mr. Robinson, Mr. Lewin, Mr. Hoof, Mr. Plewes, and Mr. Elwall.

1. That Sir John Rennie's, or the direct line, is perfectly practicable—that it has no engineering difficulties—that it may be completed within three years, and for the sum estimated.

2. That the terminus of the direct line at London-bridge is much to be preferred to Mr. Stephenson's, or the circuitous at Nine Elms, Vauxhall, which is about three miles from the Royal Exchange.

3. That the direct line is nearly six miles shorter than the circuitous line.

4. That the journey to and from Brighton by the direct line may be performed in 50 minutes less time than the journey by the circuitous line to and from its northern terminus at Brighton, and in 18 minutes less time than to and from its western terminus at Brighton.

5. That the mechanical power which will be required to work the direct line will be 22 per cent. less than the power required to work the circuitous line, taking the northern terminus of that line, and 12 per cent. less, taking the western terminus of that line.

6. That the direct line will be worked at much less expense than the circuitous line.

7. That the gradients on the direct line are fair-working gradients, and that 1,400th part of a penny per ton per mile, will compensate for the trifling difference in the gradients on the two lines.

Should, therefore, the circuitous line be adopted, and the trains perform the journey to and from Brighton twelve times a-day, as is contemplated, they would traverse 80,000 miles a-year more than if the direct line were adopted, a distance twice the circumference of the globe; and this would impose an enormous tax upon the public, for it has been proved before the Committee of the House of Commons, that half-a-million of passengers travel yearly between London and Brighton, and, allowing only the usual three-fold increase by the establishment of the Railway, the public would be taxed more than 75,000*l.* a-year for the extra distance of the six miles, to say nothing of the additional charge for goods.

30, Parliament-street, May 26. H. DEAN, Secretary.

RELIEF FROM PAIN.
IMPORTANT DISCOVERY IN MEDICINE.

LEFAY'S GRAND POMMADE.—This extraordinary Preparation cures, by two or three external applications, Tic Douloureux, Gout, Rheumatism, Lumbago, and Sciatica, and all painful Affections of the Nerves, giving instantaneous relief in the most severe paroxysms. It has been extensively employed in the public and private practice of several French Physicians, who have declared that in no case have they found it to fail in curing those formidable and tormenting maladies. Since its introduction into England, it has in every case fully maintained its high character its unrivalled success has obtained for it on the Continent. Patients, who had for years drawn on a miserable existence, and many who had lost the use of their limbs by rheumatism and paralysis, have, by a few applications, been restored to health, strength, and comfort, after electricity, galvanism, blistering, veratrine, morphia, colchicum, and all the usual remedies had been found useless. Its astonishing and almost miraculous effects have also been experienced in the cure of nervous and rheumatic pains of the head and face, paralytic affections, contracted and stiff joints, glandular swellings, pains of the chest and bones, chronic rheumatism, palpitation of the heart, difficult respiration, &c. It requires no restraint from business or pleasure. It does not cause any eruption, and may be applied to the most beautiful skin without fear of injury.

Sold, by the appointment of Jean Lefay, the Inventor, by his sole Agent, Stirling, Chemist, No. 96, High-street, Whitechapel, who will answer any inquiries (if by letter, post paid) respecting it, and also shew letters received from numerous patients who have benefitted by its application. It can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London carriage free. Sold in Pots at 4s. 6d. each.

NOTICE.—As there is a spurious imitation, it is requisite to see that the name "J. W. Stirling," is engraved on the Government Stamp, outside the wrapper, without which security it cannot be genuine.

FURTHER CONFIRMATION OF THE UNFAILING VIRTUES OF

OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA.

January 25th 1836.

GENTLEMEN,—I regret that I have not earlier acknowledged to you the great benefit which I have derived from the use of your Balm of Columbia, which, in my own case, I have happily found to possess all the virtues you ascribe to it; I at first, and by mere accident, purchased a Bottle from one of your Agents merely as a trial; and until lately, was unaware of its justly famed and great celebrity, or of your being resident, and having a principal establishment in England, otherwise I should have felt pleasure, and a sense of duty to you and the public in making this acknowledgment before. About four years ago, I found my hair rapidly falling off, not occasioned by any bodily illness, and to such an extent was my head really bald that I was compelled to wear a wig; about three afterwards I began to use your Balm, and after the lapse of nine months, and the application of only three 3s. 6d. bottles, I was enabled to leave off the wig, finding my hair quite restored to its pristine strength, which it has retained ever since.

I am, Gentlemen, yours very obliged,
BENJAMIN BRIDGER,
St, Little Newport Street,
Leicester Square.

To Messrs. C. & A. OLDRIDGE, Balm of Columbia Establishment,
, Wellington Street, Strand, London.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM causes Whiskers and Eyebrows to grow, prevents the hair from turning grey, and on the first application produces a beautiful curl, frees the hair from scurf, and stops it from falling off. Abundance of certificates from gentlemen of the first respectability are shown by the Proprietors, C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London, where the Balm is sold.—Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba.

"48, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony to the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success.

"New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HAWKES, Esq., No. 2, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (signed) "WILLIAM HAWKES.

"Greville-street, Hatton Garden, April 15, 1835."

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,
Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outrivalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing, but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY, sustain it in curl, render it floe and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

ORIENTAL OIL DOES NOT RENDER THE HAIR GREASY, and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances misnamed Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off. For, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s 6d., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

FISTULÆ, PILES, ABSCESSES, TUMOURS, STRICTURES, &c.—Mr. S. J. VAN BUTCHELL, Accoucheur and Surgeon, for the cure of the above complaints, without cutting, caustic, or confinement in the most dangerous cases, exemplified in a long practice, offers his professional aid to those who may be afflicted, with the fullest confidence of speedily restoring them to health, by his peculiarly successful and expeditious method of eradicating these disorders, even where the usual mode of treatment has failed of remedy or alleviation. Consulted till one daily at his residence, No. 16, Percy-street, Bedford-square.—Persons afflicted may obtain a prospectus gratis, containing a few out of the many cures effected by him on applying to Mr. Cradock, Chemist and Druggist, No. 6, Store-street, Bedford-square.

32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, and
No. 10, Ludgate-hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Savage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH, INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligatures—guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Soulili, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Vendors. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly; Valli, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENCIES of the TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the gums, or age (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without extracting the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at a distance acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Tender and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay. At home from ten till five.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN and BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove:—

"SIR, For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in one way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for two or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVENT, of which I find you are the Proprietor; after using it two days, could wear shoes, in four days, one of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this time I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended the Solvent to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

D. EVANS, Surgeon Dentist."

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles at 1s 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Vendors.

60, Newman-street, Oxford-street.

MINERAL MARMORATUM for FILLING DECAYED TEETH, and INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL TEETH FITTED WITHOUT WIRES or other LIGATURES.

MONSIEUR LE DRAY & CO., Surgeon Dentists, No. 60, Newman-street, Oxford-street, continue to RESTORE DECAYED TEETH with their celebrated MINERAL MARMORATUM, filled without PAIN, HEAT, or PRESSURE, which in a few seconds HARDENS INTO ENAMEL, allaying in one minute the most excruciating PAIN, and rendering the operation of EXTRACTING UNNECESSARY. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, whether arising from neglect, the use of calomel, or disease of the gums; ARTIFICIAL or NATURAL TEETH of SURPASSING BEAUTY fixed from one to a complete set, without extracting the roots or giving any pain, and in every case restoring perfect Articulation and Mastication.—Charges as in Paris. At home from 10 till 5.

THE TEETH.

MR. A. JONES, SURGEON-DENTIST to H. R. H. the Princess AUGUSTA, and the Duchess of GLOUCESTER, has at length discovered a plan for fixing Artificial Teeth, which cannot fail to give entire satisfaction to the wearer. This skilful construction combines security and ease with the most efficient power for every requisite of mastication and articulation, also adding support to any loose teeth; neither wires nor springs are used. This plan claims attention and has already secured the recommendation of the most eminent physicians and surgeons, to whom reference may be made. The Adhesive Cement, known only to Mr. A. JONES, preserves for many years tenderized decayed teeth, allaying the pain and restoring their use.—61, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, (home from 11 until 5. Mr. Jones is totally unconnected with any other Dentist in London.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever, much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparation preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, four doors from Berners street, and sold by him wholesale and retail, and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willmott, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 3s. 6d.; pints, 6s., quarts, 11s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

BOUQUET du BOUDOIR.—E. PARKER, the manufacturer of this new and exquisite perfume, respectfully thanks the Nobility and Gentry for the high honour they have been pleased to confer on him by pronouncing it to be the most delightful for the handkerchief now in use. Its intrinsic merits have at length obtained for it the favourable notice of the leaders of the fashionable world; its fragrance, at once the most delicate and lasting; its purity and elegance, leaving no sediment, entitles it to a decided preference, either in the boudoir, assembly or drawing-room.—To be had of the proprietor, at his establishment for foreign perfumery, No. 184, Piccadilly; of Messrs. Rowell, James, and Co., Regent-street; and of every perfumer of consequence either in town or country, at 2s. 6d., 5s., and 10s. per bottle. Ask for Parker's Bouquet du Boudoir.

FAMILIES of DISTINCTION and others who may be about to make extensive Purchases, will find important advantages in the present improved style of FURNISHING at HENRY L. COOPER'S Manufactory for Upholstery, Chairs, Cabinet Work, and Looking Glasses, of quality and price that fears no competition.—33, Blank-street Within, and 57, Conduit-street, nine doors from Bond-street, left-hand side.

H. L. C. begs respectfully to solicit particular attention to this Address.

THE EMPEROR NAPOLEON.
By the COUNT DE LAS CASES.
To be completed in Four Volumes, with 20 Portraits, or other Illustrations.
Extract from the Author's Preface.—"Circumstances the most extraordinary have long kept me near the most remarkable man that ever existed. The world is full of his glory, his deeds, and his monuments; but no one knows the true shades of his character, his private qualities, or the natural disposition of his soul. This great void I undertake to fill up; and, for such a task, I possess advantages unexampled in history. I collected and recorded, day by day, all that I saw of Napoleon, all that I heard him say, during the whole period in which I was constantly about his person."

CAPTAIN BRENTON'S
NAVAL HISTORY OF GREAT BRITAIN,
From 1783 to the Present Time.
 This Work embraces the most eventful period of British Naval History. The Author possessed remarkable facilities for the undertaking, having not only been a participator in many of the memorable scenes described, but, in addition to his own extensive experience of nearly 40 years, also enjoyed the intimacy of most of the great actors who figure in his narrative, and who have zealously assisted him in his labours.
Captain Brenton first entered the Naval Service with the late Admiral Cornwallis, in 1780, and terminated his professional career, as Commander of the Tonnant, at the time of Napoleon's surrender in 1814. During this entire period he was in the habit of taking Notes of every great event which came under his observation; and, finding that the vast field of Naval History lay uncultivated by any Professional Writer, he determined to undertake the task, and has accordingly devoted himself for the last 5 years to its completion.
The new mode of Publication, in Monthly Parts, of a Work like the present, from the pen of an officer who has seen such active service as Captain Brenton, will, it is confidently presumed, recommend it powerfully, not only to the Naval Profession, but to readers of every class.

CAVALRY.

4th Dragoons.—On Sunday morning, Private Edward Tuwey shot himself through the heart. He was respected in the reg., but having given way to intemperance since he had come to Trowbridge, and being threatened to be sent to head-quarters for his misconduct, the circumstance is supposed to have preyed upon his mind. He was about 40, and had been twelve years in the regiment.

8th Hussars.—The remaining three troops and hd.-qrs. arrived at Dublin, on the 24th ult., on board the Earl Roden and Cumberland steamers, from Liverpool, have been disembarked, and occupy Portobello Barracks.

14th Light Drags.—The 6th Division embarked at Belfast on the 23d ult. on board the Mercury steamer, and sailed for Glasgow at half-past 3 o'clock in the afternoon. The 7th Division embarked at Belfast on the following day on board the Howard Castle, and sailed for Glasgow at half-past 3 p. m. And the 8th and last Division with hd.-qrs. embarked at Belfast on the 25th, on board the Rapid steamer, and sailed for Glasgow at 5 p. m.

INFANTRY.

19th Depot.—on board the Cumberland steam-vessel, arrived at Dublin on the morning of the 31st May from Liverpool, and proceeded en route for Galway. 3 cos. and hd.-qrs. to arrive on 11th inst., leaving a comp. at Loughrea. Major Campbell has arrived in England from the Service Cos.

29th Depot.—arrived at Dublin from Newbridge on 1st inst., and embarked on board the Cumberland steamer, and sailed for Liverpool.

31st.—was to march from Kernaul to Dinagpore in the beginning of February.

35th.—The detachments at Doneraile and Castlestown Roche, have arrived at Fermoy; 2 Subalterns and 40 r. and f. have been detached to Macroom; 1 Capt., 1 Sub., and 40 r. and f. to Millstreet; and 2 Officers, and 4 and f. to Doneraile.

60th, 2nd batt.—Lieut. Jones embarked at Cork the Barossa, for Gibraltar, which vessel sailed on ult.

61st depot.—It is expected will embark in the Moira week, for a passage to Cork.

74th.—Capt. Crawley has arrived in England, from Service Cos. in the West Indies.

77th.—We understand that Capt. Raines is about to b raigned before a Court-Martial, on charges pref against him, by Capt. Clerke. We believe that measure has been reluctantly resorted to by the officer, in consequence of the mis-statements in the lic papers, so unscrupulously put forth, on unfai charges. We cannot but approve of the course ad by Capt. Clarke, of treating these palpable misr representations, without notice or recrimination on part,—he would insult the common sense of the pu sion, were he to think it necessary to contradict insinuations as that his brother Officers "were prised at his, Capt. Clerke's honourable acquittal We can safely assert the direct reverse to have bee case!

81st.—The Barrosa transport arrived at Cork harbo the 26th ult., and the service cos. were embarked on that vessel for Gibraltar. The Barrosa sailed o 29th. The following Officers were on board: Li Colonel Maclean; Maj. Creagh; Capts. Dixon, Hill, Splaine, and Ward; Lieuts. Gay, Walla Perry, Bowyer, Farrant, Renoy, Hon. R. Dalzell, Sorell; Ensigns Nethercote, Denys, Bailie, and Payn. Thompson; Quart.-Mast. Patterson; A Stewart; Sarg. Reas, Assist.-Surg. Ball. Capt. Ty Ensigns M'Mahon and Thompson are on leave fro depot at Clare Castle. Capt. Orange has got lea join at Gibralter by the Falmouth packet.

83rd Depot.—arrived at Dublin from Newbridge on ult., and embarked in the evening on board the berland st.-v. for Liverpool.

85th.—By the death of Col. Warburton, Major Ma in command of Depot Cos. had succeeded to the L Colonelcy, and will proceed with the Service Co Nova Scotia in the Moira.

Rifle Brigade.—1 batt. depot have arrived at Portsmou the Katherine Stewart Forbes tr. from Jersey, und command of Maj. Gossett, and taken up their q at Fort Monkton, Gosport. They are to move to mouth when the Fusiliers quit, or the depot of 61st vacate their barracks. The Moira is to tak 85th to Halifax, and bring home the hd.-qrs. of batt. Rifles.

Royal Artillery.—Hd.-Qrs. The Concert on Fe ac'nnight, given by this distinguished Corps, was the brilliant of the season. On the same day, a detach marched in from Weedon Barracks; on Wednesday different battalions furnished men to go through a field day, but after marching past in slow and qu time, they were compelled to be dismissed, from a h fall of rain. The same morning, Capt. Stopford' 3rd batt., left the barracks at 8 o'clock a. m., pre by the band, for the river side, where they embar on board a steamer for Dover; they will j Lt.-Col. M'Laughlan's co., 2nd battalion, which return to head-quarters, on the 3rd inst. Lieut. Gambia will leave head-quarters this day, to assu command of the Royal Artillery at Plymouth.

Royal Academy, Woolwich.—The Gentlemen C commenced their exercise on the Common, on Tue last, with light field-pieces, firing blank cartridge, under the command of Lieut.-Col. Parker; and in the co week they will practise from the Mortar Battery.

Royal Arsenal.—The extra hands taken on for the riage Department, having completed the term of employment, have been discharged.

The Army Medical Board is removing to Somerset and a small saving is thereby made.

General Lord Lynedoch, or Gen. Lord Ludlow will succeed the Duke of Gordon, as Colonel of the 3rd regiment of Guards. The latter nobleman is a very old general officer; he lost his arm while serving with the Guards in Holland, and afterwards commanded a brigade of Guards throughout the campaign in Egypt. Gen. Rose, now Governor of Guernsey, is to have the vacant regiment, and Major-General Ellice is to be appointed Lieut.-Governor of Guernsey in his place.

New Army Club.—At a meeting of a few officers on the 19th ult., Lieut.-Gen. Sir Ed. Barnes in the chair, it was Resolved—1st. That a Club be formed to be designated "The Army Club," and to be exclusively composed of officers of all ranks in his Majesty's Army, and governed by such rules and regulations as the experience derived from the existing Clubs may suggest. 2nd. That the number shall be limited to ; one third thereof to be reserved for foreign stations. 3rd. That the entrance subscription on its formation shall be twenty guineas, and the [illegible] five guineas. 4th. That a Provisional Committee be formed, who are authorised to take [illegible] the management and direction of the [illegible] the purpose of carrying the objects of the [illegible] 5th. That all members be balloted for [illegible] following Regulations," till the Club is [illegible] and subject to such rules and regulations as shall be hereafter approved by a General Meeting, namely:—That the first 250 Members shall be balloted for by the Provisional Committee. That as soon as 250 Members are elected, the balloting for new Members to be made by General Meetings, to be convened by advertisement, by the Provisional Committee, as occasion requires. 6th. That upon there being 500 Members elected, "The Army Club" shall be considered as formed; when a General Meeting shall be called by the Provisional Committee, for the purpose of adopting such rules and regulations as may be deemed desirable for the final guidance of the Club, and also for electing a permanent Committee for carrying the adopted arrangements into effect. 7th. That no subscription be received till there are 500 Members, and then the payment thereof be under the direction of the Committee of Management. 8th. That any officer on half-pay who shall have retired from full-pay in consequence of any regimental proceeding affecting his character as an officer and a gentleman, shall not be eligible to become a Member; and any Member of the Club on full-pay who shall retire from the service, or to half-pay, from any cause affecting his character as an officer and a gentleman, shall cease to be a Member of the Club. 9th. That any Member of the Club discontinuing his subscription, or from any cause rendering him ineligible to be continued a Member, shall have no claim to, or be entitled to participate in, any of the effects or property belonging to the Club. [Several new Clubs are attempting to be formed, and one, "The Alliance," proposed by Captain Marshall, of Cheltenham, promises to be more successful than any that has come under our notice.]

REVIEW AT WOOLWICH.—On Saturday last the whole of the corps at Woolwich were assembled in Brigade on the common, being commanded by the following officers:—Rl. Horse Artillery, by Col. Whynyates, C.B.; Field Batteries, by Col. Cleveland, C.B.; R.B. Foot Artillery, by Col. Adye, C.B.; Rl. Engineers, by Lieut.-Col. Harding; and Rl. Marines by Lieut.-Col. Conolly. Maj.-Gen. Sir Joseph M'Lean, K.C.H., Commandant of the Royal Artillery, attended by a numerous staff, was present. The ground was kept by a party of Foot Artillery, under Capt. and Adj. Bent, and Quarter-master Gates, and the Riding School troop under Lieut.-Col. R. Jones, and Lieutenants Phillips and M'Pherson. The Brigade formed line from the East to the Western sides of the common, the H.A. on the right flank, and the F. Batteries to the left. At 12 o'clock the H. Brigade fired a royal salute of 21 guns, and the Infantry fired a "feu de joie" in succession, the F.B. following it, and the three bands, the Buglers of the H.A. and F.B. simultaneously playing the "National Anthem." Columns were then formed, and the troops marched past the General in slow time, the officers saluting; the line was again formed, and the Brigade advanced with truly admirable steadiness, the more worthy of remark and encomium when it is remembered how seldom the different corps in this garrison are in the field together, and upon the word "halt" being given, the General rode up, and by a signal from the Brigade Major the officers and men took off their caps and gave three hearty and deafening cheers for His Majesty. The corps then separately marched off to their respective private parades.

The Sovereign transport, having on board the undermentioned detachments, sailed from Cork harbour the 22nd ult., for Nova Scotia: 34th regt., Lieut. James and Ensigns Goodenough and M'Donald, 3 Serjs., 50 r. and f.; 43rd, Lieut. Oxenden, 1 Serj., 30 r. and f.; 83rd, Ens. Dercnzy, 1 Serj., 40 r. and f.

The Arab transport arrived at Cork harbour on the 22nd, and detachments embarked on board that vessel on the 24th ult., for Canada: 15th regt., 2 officers, 2 Serj., 100 r. and f.; 24th, 2 Officers, 2 Serj., 75 r. and f.

The Knightsbridge Barracks, which for nearly two centuries have been appropriated for the accommodation of the Foot Guards, are about to be taken down.

The anniversary dinner in commemoration of the capture of the French West Indies by the Army and Navy, under General Sir Charles Grey and Admiral Lord St. Vincent, took place on Saturday last, at the United Service Club.

Count d'Orsay was asked the other, at the Travellers' Club, whether he thought that the marriage between the Prince of Capua and Miss Smyth would be considered binding. "Of course," was his reply, "four negatives must make an affirmative." In the diplomatic circles this marriage has been termed "the Quadruple Alliance."

[illegible], June 3.—(From our own Correspondent.) [illegible] May 29.—The Beacon returned from the Orkneys [illegible] 40 seamen for the fleet. They have volunteered [illegible] and Hercules. The Beacon is to Harbour [illegible] be paid off.—Monday. Messenger st. returned [illegible] coast of Spain; left St. Sebastian's the previous Thursday; brought passenger Brig.-Gen. M'Dougall of the Legion, who has resigned, and two or three other officers on sick leave. There are several letters in the town, dated 26th May, from officers of Marines, stating that the battalion is only intended to garrison St. Sebastian's when General Evans moves out. No casualty had occurred among them. The Messenger has been sent to Woolwich to be repaired, taking volunteers, lists of the Quail, to join the Bonetta. Wednesday, June 1. Pembroke went to Spithead.—Thursday. Arrived Bonetta, Lieut. Bisson, from Sheerness, with seamen for this place and Plymouth: she is to return for her guns, &c., and then go to the Coast. The Surveyor of the Navy went over the Dock-yard on Monday, and afterwards visited the Vanguard, Bellerophon, and Pembroke; he also inspected Inconstant, Volcano, and Quail. The Madagascar is ordered to be brought forward for commission, and the Vindictive to be moved down to be caulked. Inconstant will be launched on the 15th, and Volcano 30th June. Capt. Searle, C.B. has arrived to take charge of the Ordinary. Ships in port—Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, Bonetta, at Spithead. Britannia, Excellent, Royal George yacht, Buffalo, Beacon, and the four transports, Maitland, Moira, Stakesby, Katherine Stewart Forbes, in Harbour; and the Seaflower and Cracker, having just arrived from Guernsey to refit.—Wind S.W. blowing hard in squalls.

Woolwich Dock-Yard, 3d June—(From our own Correspondent).—On Friday se'nnight at noon, the Lightning st.-v., Lieut. Shambler, was hauled out of Dock, and taken into the Basin, and the Alban st.-v. was to have been put in dock, but from the state of the tide it could not be accomplished until Monday. Rhadamanthus st.-v., under the temporary command of Lieut. Shambler, came up the river on Saturday, and took up her moorings alongside the Warrior hulk. Lieut. Shambler has since hauled down his pennant and resumed the command of the Lightning st.-v. The crews of the Lightning and Confiance, by whom the Rhadamanthus was manned, have returned to their respective vessels. The Firebrand st.-v., Mast. Allen, R.N., arrived here on Tuesday at eleven o'clock, P. M. from Ireland. The Confiance st.-v. has had her boilers and engines taken out and replaced by others. The Pluto st.-v. is nearly ready for commissioning, which it is not improbable may take place on Saturday. Ships in Commission in Port—William and Mary yacht, and Firebrand st.-v. In Dock, not in Commission—Alban. In the Basin—Lightning and Confiance. Not in Commission—Blazer, Echo, and Pluto.

Malta, May 4.—The squadron under the command of Vice-Admiral Sir Josias Rowley quitted the harbour on 20th ult., and has been cruising within sight of the Island since that period. It consists of Caledonia, 120; Canopus, 84; Thunderer, 84; Revenge, 78; Edinburgh, 74; Vernon, 50; and Favourite, sloop of war. Portland, 52; and Barham, 50, are in the harbour.

Royal Naval School.—The first annual general meeting, for the year 1836, of the friends and supporters of this institution was held on Thursday, at the Horticultural Society's Rooms, No. 21, Regent-street, at 2 o'clock, Admiral the Hon. Sir R. Stopford in the chair. The meeting was numerously attended, and the report of the state of the funds very satisfactory. Sir E. Codrington communicated that the King had granted an acre of land in Greenwich Park for building; and after a long discussion as to whether a large portion of the fund given to the institution by Dr. Bell should be set aside as part of a building fund, or whether a portion of the amount of its Exchequer-bills should be devoted to that purpose, it was ultimately arranged, that the whole question of a building fund should be left to the discretion of the Council of Administration.

Plymouth, June 1.—Columbine, 16, Com. Henderson, arrived from the Mediterranean on the 27th ult. Messenger st., W. King, Mast., from the North Coast of Spain, with invalids from the British legion, arrived here on Sunday, and proceeded the same day for Portsmouth. She brought no news. Ships in Hemoaze—Royal Adelaide, Minden, Cornwallis, Trinculo, Columbine, and Magpie. In the Sound—Talavera.

Notwithstanding the superiority which the Devonport folks claim for their Dock-yard, the Cornwallis, 74, which touched the ground on leaving the harbour, and returned to have her bottom examined, has been obliged to wait near a fortnight for the spring tides, before she could be taken into dock.

On Monday last, according to annual custom, the Marquis Camden, as Head Master, and all the members of the Trinity House, proceeded by water in state to Deptford. In the procession were all the barges of the Government departments, Greenwich Hospital, city of London, Marine Society, &c. &c. The Trinity yacht saluted several times during the day. On landing at Deptford they proceeded to St. Nicholas's church, and after hearing divine service, proceeded to the Trinity ground, where having been supplied with the usual refreshments, returned in similar state to the dinner and ball in London.

The Rochester lighter sailed on Thursday from Deptford for Plymouth, &c.

The Chatham yacht sailed from Deptford on Thurs for Chatham.

Beacon is ordered to Portsmouth to be paid off.

Trinculo, at Plymouth, will be paid off into Ordinary a few days.

Within a trifling number, the line of battle ships at P mouth are manned. Minden and Cornwallis no Tuesd are both, as well as the Talavera, ready for sea, and proceed to Spithead, where, it is understood, the whol the line of battle ships, recently fitted out, are to rendezv The Vanguard and Bellerophon are already at that chorage.

H.M.S. Russell, was lying in Vigo Bay on 27th Apr Tyne, 28, Capt. Lord Ingestrie, left Gibraltar for M oorca on the 13th May. On the same day, Orestes sai for Barcelona, and Columbine for Tangiers, and thence Plymouth.

Lieut. Wesley, Royal Marines, whose case and mar rial was noticed in our Gazette of 30th April last, has Adjutancy of Major Owen's battalion in Spain. The m are quartered in a large building at St. Sebastian.

A letter from Capt. Clavell, of his Majesty's s Astrea, at Falmouth, dated 31st ult., reports the return the Star, which vessel had been despatched for the relief the homeward-bound trade.

The young gentlemen of the Vanguard all mess toget to the gun-room, and a splendid show the room presen the youngsters appearing, from the great size of the sh like tom-tits whilst seated at table. The midshipm berth has been appropriated to a library and reading-roo a design which, as well as every other tending towards t comfort and convenience of the Officers and ship's co pany, has been warmly encouraged by the Hon. Capt Bouverie and his able second Capt. Currie. It is rumour that the young gentlemen intend establishing a forum society to canvass the question of Naval architecture, th "imperium in imperio," we shall have this interesting su ject discussed in the very fabric which displays the perfe rion of the art.

The Columbine, lately arrived at Plymouth, has be docked, and no defects having been ascertained, she equipping for the coast of Africa, a destination we recom mended for a vessel of her superior qualities some month ago, and where she will no doubt give a good account the slavers.

The Swift has had a trial with the Pantaloon and is re ported to have beat her; so much the better, we hope ave successive vessel which the Surveyor builds may beat th preceding one.

By a letter from Sierra Leone, we learn that on the 10 March was condemned the Spanish slaver brig the Vend loro, with 378 slaves. She was captured on the 21st Ja off the mouth of the Bonny river, before she had been 48 hours at sea, by H. M. ship Lynx, Lieut.-Com. H. W Huntley. We believe that this is the fourth prize we hav had to record as having been taken by this vigilant Office since he has had the Lynx in commission.

H.M.S. Portland, May 4th.—On Monday 19th Apri the Portland received pratique, when at ten o'clock we assembled a Court Martial, to try Lieut. Puddicomb R.M. and Mr. T. Hancock, Midshipman of that ship, f conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a ge theman. The Court sat five hours, and the charges bein proved, Lieut. Puddicomb was sentenced to lose on year's time in the service, and Mr. Hancock two. Th fleet, under the command of Sir Josias Rowley, sailed o 21st, and have constantly since then been cruising off th Island. On 1st May, Barham arrived from Barcelon having been sent with provisions for the troops. Columbi sailed on 2d May for England. Manchester Glasgow a sailed on 2d May. She takes the giraffes that were pr sented by his Majesty to the Zoological Society. M Cook, of the Portland, is among the passengers. He go to England on Admiralty leave.

Letters from H.M. ship Larne, dated Porto Cabell 31st March, state that they "expect to be in Englan about the latter end of June."

It has excited considerable astonishment, that so litt has been heard of the Rodney since she left Plymout Being a new ship, an account of her behaviour at sea w looked for with great interest. Report says she has hogge considerably, and that she rolls very deep and heavily i bad weather. She has never, we believe, had a trial sailing with a two-decked ship.

The reports about shipwrights being employed alterin the magazine of Vanguard, which appeared last week in Portsmouth paper, may be set down to the falsehoods of t day. No such alteration has taken place, the Dock-yar men being employed nailing the ports, as is usual aft receiving the guns. It is beneath us to notice any more these unworthy statements.

The late Duke of Norfolk, among whose peculiarit that of neglecting personal cleanliness, was not the le remarkable, complaining one day to Dudley North th he was a martyr to the rheumatism, and [illegible] remedy ineffectually, "Pray, my Lord," [illegible] he, "d you ever try a clean shirt?"

East India Intelligence.

AN experiment in steam navigation, on a grand scale, baut to be made under the direction and at the aola enes of the East India Company. Two vessels af largaat class have been far some timo preparing, and now naarly complated, with which it is intended, at rvals of about a munth each, that tha voyage ta Ben- shall ba made by the Cape af Good Hope. The m anginea of each vessel will be af 200 horse power. rangemonte have baan aiade for providing a supply of la at-eetated places, for which 3,000 tons have been ared, and thay are said to be so well chosen as ta allow power of steam ta he kept up with very little inter- aion daring tho whola dlatance. To what use these tels are to be put at the termination of the voyage a not appear to he yet fully aettled; but the great fea- of this grand experiment ie tha lead taken in it hy the t India Company, wha have shown all along an un- ountable reluctance in giving any assistance to the im- vement af the communications with India. The trary spirit now manifasted must lead ultimately to y lmpartant reaults.

Wa have laarned another version of the Jeypore affair, ch, lf true, throws new light an it, and proves une- vocally that tha atrocious murder of Mr. Blake, and attack on Major Alves, were planned by the public horities af the state, and executed by their connivance, ot by their direction. It states that the Rawul was hly displeased at having athers associated with him in management af the young Rajah, and the Ranee was nly oppased to tha Rawul being sole manager, ta ch she knew his ambition looked. The Rawul'e keel was heerd openly to say, that as long as Majar ves and Mr. Blake had influence at Jeypure, his ter had no chance of attaining his wishes. A jealousy wise axieted among the Ranees, under the idea that oever had charge of the Rajah would possess the con- uent authority of the affairs of the state. On the ht during which these women first proceeded to act nly against the Rance, there was a state party given to European gentlemen at the palace. In the course of evening the wife of Jysing Sowny, who was, with ny other women, behind purdahs, addressed herself to jor Alves, and, in a menacing angry tone, told him, ha would never submit to be under the influence of nea Chundrewut—that he had, under the cover uf the tish government, taken the Sambhur country, got pos- sion of the Shekawat country, and called upon him to e up Jota Ram, or punish him himself. The result chie evening'e proceedings, and the negative counte- nca given by the Rawul, caused an immediate report over Jeypore, that tha intention of massacring the ropeana was too evident to leave a dèuht on the sub- t. On the following day, Major Alves, accompanied Mr. Blake, Lieut. M'Naghten, and Capt. Ludlow, nt to tha palace to endeavuur to persuade the women to molest the Ranee and young Rajah, but to con- ue to enjoy all their former lucomes, &c., and leave airs in peace and quietness. After many inaffectual empts ta appease the growing wrath of these women, jor Alves and the whole party left the palace, with purpose of going to the Presidency. Major Alves a attacked only thirty yards from the spot where the wul was standing. As one of Major Alves' suwars proceeding to Dewsa to communicate the tidings, he s detained by the Rawul's guards at the pass, and pre- nted executing his orders of bringing up the troops to protection. The sirdars, when expostulated with, threatened by Mr. Blake, were heard to call out to ir people, "Take care be does not escape," and went the palace. These are the material facts in this state- nt. It is to be regretted that some official or ac- edited account of the affair is not put forth to stop se contradictory details.

The late Shumsoodeen's estates and other property are be sold by public auction. The Putteahlah and hitul Rajahs are expected to be the principal purchasers. The estate of Alexander and Co. will pay its creditors, March next, a dividend of three per cent. on all proved ims. The original declarations led the creditors to pect dividends of eight annas in the rupee.

The different bankrupt firms of Calcutta have pub- hed a statement of their receipts and disbursements for e past year, which show the following:—Ferguson d Co., receipts Sa. Rs. 5,54,867, payments 4,92,394; ah balance in hand of assignees 62,473; In possession ass'gnees, company's promissory notes belonging to tate amounting to Sa. Rs. 17,7,000. Macintosh and .—receipts 2,80,564, payments 1,05,987; cash in nd and in Union Bank, 1,74,577; government securi- s, 58,500; unrealized acceptances, 3,00,645; loans at terest, 41,000; total balance, Sa. Rs. 5,69,722.

By the Calcutta Gazette we perceive that five natives e been appointed Deputy Collectors, of whom three Mussulmen and two Hindoos. It is understood to the intention of government to reserve these situa- ns almost exclusively for natives.

The following news has been received from Goomsor, dated 20th Dec. Col. Hodgson is encamped one mile to the northward of tha town of Goomsur. The force is now pretty healthy; hut a short time ago it was quite the contrary, having on an average 220 men in tha hospital, principally fever. Many prisoners found with arms in their possession have been taken.

A communication from the camp at Goomsur states that there is scarcely a doubt of the Rajah's death. This will not, however, relieve us from the necessity of taking the country, and of keeping it till the whole family submit. Four incendiaries have been hanged by sentence of the special Court-Martial.

Col. Pattinger was, by late accounts, suffering from indisposition, and had determined on proceeding to Bombay.

An annual general meeting of the proprietors of the Union Bank took place January 14. The accounts exhibited a most favourable aspect of the last half-year's transactions, the profit realised being 13½ per cent., of which 10 per cent., or 125,Sa. Rs. per share were ordered to be paid to proprietars as dividend, and the remainder retained and added to the value of shares, making them Company's rupees 2,700, instead af Sa. Rs. 2,500, as formerly.

GENERAL THE DUKE OF GORDON, G.C.B.

The hopes we entertained last week when this paper went to press have been disappointed. The death of this gallant soldier took place at his house in Belgrave-square, on Saturday morning last, about ten o'clock. He was a Knight Grand Cross of the Bath; and formerly Keeper of the Great Seal of Scotland. He was Governor of Edinburgh Castle, hereditary keeper of the Castle of Inverness, Lord-Lieutenant of Aberdeen, and Chancellor of Marischall College. He was brother to the Dowager Duchess of Richmond, to the Marchioness Cornwallis, to the Duchess of Bedford, and to Lady Madelina Palmer; and brother-in-law to the Duke of Manchester; uncle to the Duke af Richmond, the Marchioness of Tweeddale to Viscount Mandeville, M.P., to the Lady af J. H. Calcraft, Esq., M.P. to Baroness Braybrooke, to the lady af Lord Eliot, to the lady of C. Ross, Esq., M.P., to Sir John Sinclair, Bart., &c. His Grace's sisters are coheirs presamptiva to the baronies of Beauchamp and Mordaunt. The title is extinct. The Earl af Aboyne, born June 28, 1761, succeeds to the title of Merquis af Huntley, and a considerable portian of the estates. Gordon Castle and the other estates go to the Duke of Richmond. The late Duke of Gordon sat in the House of Peers as Earl af Norwich. He was born Feb. 1, 1770; succeedad his father, fourth Duke, January 17, 1827; and married, Dec. 11, 1813, Elizabeth, daughter of the late Alexander Brodie, Esq. Of His Grace's military services the following is a correct record:—Appointed Ensign 35th, and Lieut. in 1790; in 1791, Capt.; and 1792, Lieut. and Capt. in 3rd Guards. He embarked with his reg. in Feb., 1793, for Holland, and was present in the actions of St. Amand, Famars, Lannoi, and Dunkirk, and at the siege of Valenciennes. On the army going into wintar-quarters he returned to England. In the beginning of 1794, His Grace, then Lord Huntley, raised the 100th, subsequently the 92nd foot, and went with it to Gibraltar. In 1795 it was ordered to Corsica, and he aerved in that island above one year. He received the brevet af Col. 3rd May, 1796; and was nest appointed Brig.-Gen. in Ireland, where he aerved during the rebellion. In 1798 he embarked for Holland; was at the landing at the Helder, and actively employed till 2nd Oct., when he was wounded. The 1st Jan., 1801, he received the rank of Maj.-Gen.; in May, 1803, was appointed on the Staff in North Britain, where he served three years; 3rd Jan., 1806, Colonel of 42nd Foot; and 25th April, 1808, Lieut.-Gen. In the expedition to Walcheren, in 1809, he commanded a division of the army. The 12th Aug., 1819, he received the brevet of General. He was removed to the Colonelcy of the Royals, 29 Jan., 1820, in succession to the Duke of Kent; and to the Colonelcy of the Scotch Fusilier Guards on the death of the Duke of Gloucester. He obtained the government of Edinburgh Castle, 15th Nov., 1827.

The remains of the gallant Duke were yesterday conveyed in great funeral pomp to Greenwich: the Fusilier Guards preceded and received the body at the Royal Hospital. The Governor and all the Officers, with some hundreds of the Pensioners, were in full dress; and the band of tha Guards performed with great effect the sublime "Dead March" in Saul. Tha coffin was afterwards removed on board the Spitfire steamer, which immedintely sailed for Scotland, where tho interment is to take place.

ON THE CIVIL APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

SIR,—An article appeared in your last week's paper, subsequantly copied into the Morning Chronicle, which erroneously gives tha Monthly United Service Journal as the authority, respecting the future intentions of the Admiralty with regard to Naval Officers holding civil appointments. As tha Naval and Military Gazette is looked upon as an authority in these matters, and I perceive you have frequent occasion to contradict the foolish reports continually concocted at the seaports, often raised for purposes of waggery, to give a little excitement in these dull times, I have ventured to address a few lines to you on the subject. You say that the report originated with the port papers, and I vanture to contradict it as wholly untrue. No such idea has aver been entertained; in fact, it would be a suicidal measure on the part of the Admiralty, because their Lordships themselves must partake of it. Besides, Sir, such a measure would eventually have the effect of excluding Naval Officers altogether from civil situations, unless, indeed, it can be proved that they are gifted to take up instinctively the duties and details of an official office, which it requires several years to gain even a comparative acquaintance with. To say nothing of the evils which are complained of by constant changes at the Admiralty Board, and the great interruption to measures designed for the benefit of the service, let me ask where are you to find a Surveyor of tha Navy avery five years from the [illegible] list; then come we to a Comptroller General of [illegible] whose duties will require some few years at least [illegible] stand, besides many others; well, Sir, what is the result? these offices become imperfectly performed, & the consequence is that they are consigned to Civilians and lost to the Navy for aver. This is not all; if civil situations under the Admiralty, held by Naval officers, are to be changed every five years, why not under other Boards? You gave [illegible] last year to a return, laid upon the table of the House of Commons on the motion of Mr. Harvey, of all Naval officers deriving any benefits from the public money in civil situations whatsoever, exclusive of their half-pay, which amounted altogether to 650, or thereabouts, and [illegible] about 300 for Pensioners and Coast Guard Service, there were found to be 360 employed as follows:—Governors and Lieutenant-Governors, Lords of the Admiralty, Grooms of the Bed-chamber and Privy-chamber, Aides-de-camp, Collectors and Comptrollers of Customs, Post-masters, Gentlemen Ushers, Chairman of Board of Stamps, Commissioners, Hydrographers, Judges, Sheriffs, Registrars of Knights of the Bath, Protectors of Slaves, Clerks in the Mint, Excise, and Customs, Consuls, Tide Surveyors, Landing Waiters, Catechists, Chief Constables of Police, Surveyors of Distilleries, Superintendents of Female Orphan Asylums, Emigration Agents, Land Revenue Collectors, Keepers of Records, Paymasters, and Hop Inspectors, cum multis aliis, and to wind up all, there is a Lieutenant of nearly 30 years standing, described as "Ensign in the Militia." Now, Sir, it is to be presumed that these one hundred varied duties are not to be attained by instinct by sea officers, and if they are to be changed every five years, the cry will soon be, every three, or every one or two, to give every one a chance who has a large family, and mark the consequences; they will soon be all filled by Civilians, who, holding them for life, or during good behaviour, will have sufficient time to take care to inform themselves of the duties, and perform them properly; and Naval officers under such a regulation will be in fact excluded from betstowing their condition by these means. This is no ideal apprehension; in the very paragraph of the Chronicle, a recommendation is put forth to abolish the governorships of Victualling-yards and Hospitals. I need not, with the disposition and talent you have ever shown to benefit the United Service, further intrude than to request you will contradict the ridiculous report, originating, as it appears, in some obscure local Journals.

MAJOR-GEN. SIR J. C. SMYTH, SIR ANDREW HALLIDAY, AND CAPT. HARPOUR, 67TH REG.

SIR,—Some time back I forwarded to you the official correspondence, charges, and judgment of the Court-Martial on Sir A. Halliday, Dep. Insp.-Gen. of Hospitals. As there was a scene enacted during the trial, in which Sir James Carmichael Smyth, the Lieut.-Governor of Demerara, acted a prominent part, it may be worth transcribing for you and your readers. It will be easily seen whose conduct was indecorous and uncalled for. The Lieut.-Governor had no authority to reprimand the Deputy Judge Advocate. A General Court-Martial is the highest Military Court, and the Lieut.-Governor was there merely as a witness.

A FRIEND TO JUSTICE.

On Sir James Carmichael Smyth, the Lieut.-Governor, attending to give evidence, the Court stood up on his entrance, and then resumed their seats, while the Deputy Judge Advocate requested the witness to be seated also. After the witness had been sworn in, and the third and fourth charges read over to him, the Deputy Judge Advocate read the first question, as follows:—

"Has your Excellency any recollection of having received information, in the month of January, 1835, that a cruel punishment had been inflicted on an apprentice labourer in the neighbourhood of Mahaica?" The Judge Advocate added, "Will your Excellency have the goodness to stand up, if your Excellency pleases, while answering a question?"

Witness.—That is a very improper way in which to address me, Sir. [We believe the witness added, that he should have been addressed by the President of the Court.]

President [standing up].—Your Excellency, every evidence has been addressed to the same way, and it was what was about to do myself.

Witness.—But I was standing, and he desired me to sit.

Judge Advocate.—I am sorry that your Excellency has misconceived me. I hope your Excellency does not think I meant to give you any offence; I meant only to do my duty; I certainly meant no disrespect to your Excellency.

Witness.—Very well, Sir, it was very indecorous and uncalled for. My good fellow, I have been too long in the Army not to know that every man must stand up while giving his evidence.

President.—Go on with the business.—The witness stood up, and the Judge Advocate repeated the question. After the witness withdrew, the following minute was submitted to the Court by the Judge Advocate:—

"His Excellency, Sir J. C. Smyth, having been requested by the Deputy Judge Advocate to be pleased to stand while answering the question, reprimanded, in an intemperate manner, the Deputy Judge Advocate for having done so, the Deputy Judge Advocate respectfully submitted to his Excellency that he intended no disrespect to his Excellency, but was merely doing what he conceived to be his duty; and which he had done with former witnesses. His Excellency, after this explanation, ended by saying the Deputy Judge Advocate's conduct was indecorous and uncalled for. The Deputy Judge Advocate respectfully submits the whole of this proceeding to the Court, and claims their consideration and opinion whether his conduct was such as to deserve the public reprimand as above stated."

Upon which the Court pronounced an opinion as follows:—"The Court having taken into its consideration the appeal made to its protection by the Deputy Judge Advocate is of opinion that the intemperate manner and language exhibited by his Excellency Sir J. C. Smyth towards the Deputy Judge Advocate was quite uncalled for by anything on his part, and only calculated to wound the feelings of that officer, at the same time that it infringed on the dignity of the Court."

To Lieut.-Col. Sir Michael Creagh, and the Gentlemen of the Court.

With reference to the very indecorous and unbecoming tone and manner in which the officer officiating as Deputy Judge Advocate at your Court (forgetting not only my rank, standing, and experience in the service, but also, more especially, whose authority I represent in this colony) thought proper yesterday, when I was about to reply to a question, to take upon himself to admonish me, saying, "Sir, when you address this Court, you will be pleased to rise," I beg to state that it will be my pleasure to sit whilst giving any future evidence before you. The extraordinary breach of decorum of which Capt. Harpour has been guilty, is, however, of too serious a nature, and was committed before too many witnesses, to permit of my allowing it to pass without further notice. It will be my duty to represent the same to the Major-General commanding the Forces, by whom I have not a doubt but that Capt. Harpour will be instructed as to the respect due by all military men, but more especially by officers on his Excellency's staff, to his Majesty's representative in this colony.

J. C. SMYTH, Lieut. Governor of, and Major-Gen. Commanding in, British Guiana.

To which the Court rejoined—

"SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge your Excellency's communication of this morning, and to say that the circumstance to which it refers has been already the matter of consideration by this Court, inasmuch as the Deputy Judge Advocate submitted yesterday a minute on the subject to the Court, which, together with the Court's opinion thereon, have been recorded. Herewith, I beg to forward to your Excellency a copy of the Deputy Judge Advocate's minute, and the opinion of the Court thereon, which opinion has not been altered by your Excellency's communication; and I beg to state that the letter this morning received, has also been appended to the proceedings, for the consideration of a higher power."

This letter produced the following reply from the Lieut.-Governor:—

"SIR,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this day, together with the enclosure. In presuming to censure my conduct, and in publishing that censure in a colony in which I am his Majesty's representative, you, and the members of the Court, have strangely mistaken your authority, and laid yourselves open to serious responsibility. I have the honour to be, &c. &c. &c.

J. C. SMYTH."

When the usual hour of assembling arrived this morning great interest was excited by the circumstance of all the garrison officers being in full uniform, and by the appearance, in the spot usually occupied by the plain chair assigned to the witnesses, of a chair of state similar to, if not the same with, what is used for accommodating each of the members of the Colonial Legislature in the Court of Policy. A short time after, a Captain's guard of the 80th reg., with colour and band, took post in the verandah leading to the Court-room. A rumour ran through the civilian spectators that all these preparations awaited the arrival of his Excellency the Lieut.-Governor, who was to come to give his evidence for the defence.

The Major of Brigade Robertson was now despatched by the President to Camp House, to announce that the Court were ready to examine his Excellency Sir J. C. Smyth, the second witness summoned for the defence; and the Court in the meantime adjourned until the witness should arrive. After a short interval, the witness, accompanied by a numerous suite, came up, and was saluted by the guard of honour and the colour and band, while the Court, who had resumed their seats as soon as he appeared in sight, received him as before, standing. The witness, dressed in the uniform of a Lieut.-Governor, with a profusion of insignia on his breast, took his seat in the chair of state. On his left was the High Sheriff, and on his right was the Government Secretary, both in the costume of office, while to the right of the last-mentioned functionary was posted Mr. Gloster, the Attorney-General, dressed in black clothes, but without his gown. Mr. Gloster, however, soon afterwards quitted the station assigned him, and left the room, in consequence of a suggestion from the Deputy Judge Advocate that the prisoner meant to call him for the defence. Finally, behind the witness's chair stood two orderly officers, Ensign Smyth, son of the witness, and Ensign Coote. After all these dispositions the witness, and Ensign Coote. After all these dispositions had been made, the examination of the witness upon his former oath, went on, the witness maintaining his seat while answering the questions put to him.

I now come to revenue cruisers, and, following up the forcible argument of Sir James Graham on the Navy Estimates, in which he most truly said that "it is better to have six sail of the line efficient than ten inefficient," so say, in respect of revenue cruisers, it is better to have this good vessels, in all respects well-officered, manned, and equipped, than the number there now is. Can any other proof be wanting of the uselessness of many of the cutters than the fact that some of them are laid up in harbour during the winter months (the very time they ought to be cruising) and their crews distributed along the coast. I would therefore recommend, that all the small cutters, tenders, &c. be paid off, and a greater force put upon the shore, which could also be strengthened by considerably reducing that privileged useless and overpaid class, the GENTLEMEN of the mounted guard. To suppress smuggling, the guard must be where the smuggler has to come, not remote from the spot, affording him an opportunity of slipping in, while from the casualties of wind and weather, a [illegible] must be unavoidably absent.

As respects the supplies of stores and repairs of cutters, the former ought to be furnished, not, on reconsideration, as I before suggested, but from the government depots; and the latter done at the naval arsenals, the same as when they were under the Admiralty. I believe a reasonable objection was formerly made to the lavish way the dock-yards went to work with the cutters, and the heavy style of the work done to them; but superior workmen are now to be found in the yards, and, with care, similar complaints may be obviated. Cutters are a fine class of vessels, and our naval architects and naval officers should be made well acquainted with them. It is a well-established fact that there was scarcely a good cutter sailor to be found in the Navy during the late war. Whenever a Lieutenant was appointed to a cutter he set about making her a little ship, by giving her a topsail and top-gallant-sail, and so lumbering her with top hamper that the intention of her sailing well by the wind was defeated, and scarcely one ever went to sea that did not return with the loss of a spar, from the want of proper experience in the Commander and officers, thus rendering them quite as expensive as sloops of war.

One thing more I would suggest in respect of them—that is, that the Commanders be paid the amount I have named for the District Lieutenants of Coast Guard, and the saving of provisions taken from them; their time of service to be the same. The present system has occasioned irregularities. Provisions should be considered as stores in charge of the steward or clerk, with an additional salary, and nothing allowed but what was absolutely wanted. By this mode a considerable saving would accrue to government.

The preceding alterations I would, by way of experiment, confine for the present to England, Scotland, and Wales, and if the new system worked well and beneficially for the country, I would then extend it to Ireland.

It now becomes a question as to the manner in which the present civilians in the Coast Guard are generally to be disposed of.

As respects Mr. Dombrain, who has deserted his profession to become a Custom-house Officer, I would at once remove all Naval officers from under his control, the places (if he is to retain his situation) being filled up by civilians from other parts of the United Kingdom; for it is self-evident Commissioned NAVAL officers, right-minded ones, will never be found to act cordially under him in the military capacity: it is highly irregular for Lieutenants to do so, but certainly much worse that Commanders should be made subordinate to this ex-Lieutenant.

Such of the Civilian Inspecting Commanders and Chief Officers as might remain after the arrangements were brought to bear, which I have herein submitted, could be disposed of by superannuation, &c.; those of the Chief Officers, who would be placed under the District Lieutenants, would not, certainly, be degraded by the alteration.

It may, in what I am now going to touch upon, be perhaps thought invidious in me to instance the cases of individuals who have been so fortunate as to have had especial favour shown them in this Service, seeing how little favour, generally speaking, Naval men have experienced at it; but justice compels me to take this course to point out the very opposite positions of the respective parties, and thus further to show the true Inconsistencies of the Service.

I find that all the Captains and Commanders who were formerly in it as Inspecting Commanders, have been superseded, except one of the latter class of officers, and above Lieutenants, although they, as well as those more fortunate gentlemen, received their appointments as [illegible]. I therefore revert to principle, and where one is said to do if it be not made to apply to all, but it [illegible] then it is highly unjust.

It has also been established as a rule, that Commanders entering this service shall not exceed 40 years of age, and how is this rule acted upon? why, only as far as respects men who have not powerful [illegible]. Setting however this species of favouritism aside, is it not [illegible] the height of folly to suppose a man of forty [illegible] of doing the duty of Inspecting Commander [illegible] his health is good, as one of Sixty, or upwards, wielding the destinies of this great empire, or of leading its fleets and armies to victory? The present restrictions, therefore, with regard to age, has the effect of throwing the appointments generally into the hands of a few men, whom we find appointed and re-appointed, to the manifest injustice of others; the greater portion of the old officers cannot obtain them, and the higher and aristocratic orders of the service will not accept them.

Seeing, now, Sir, as you must, what an extraordinary Service the Coast Guard is, is it not surprising that my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty should promote officers from it on a mere Custom House Certificate? If the Board of Customs be permitted to continue making the selections, you must expect it will necessarily resort to its favourite mode of references, and those men will most likely obtain their promotion who have said and written most for themselves, and absolutely done least for the Service. If, on the other hand, it is left exclusively to Captain Bowles, which I have reason to believe it is not, is it not an improper and too extensive patronage to be placed in the hands of any individual? for, however just this highly respected officer may wish to be, is he not likely to be warped in his judgment by designing individuals, who may by chance and unlooked-for circumstances, in so very extensive as the Coast Guard, have greater facilities for pressing themselves upon his notice by apparent zeal, than those who are animated by far different and nobler motives, but whose zeal is real, not superficial? no human being is infallible, from which maxim Captain Bowles, with all his admitted and proved upright and honourable principles, cannot, of course, be considered exempt. It is very much to be regretted that he is, of necessity, compelled to judge of the characters, talents, and capabilities of his officers from secret reports (a system, it must be admitted, highly dangerous and unconstitutionally inquisitorial), instead of forming his opinion of them by personal observation.

I humbly conceive that my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty should themselves be fully cognisant of the merits of every officer they promote, and allow none of their legitimate patronage to pass from them. There are, too, several thousand men in this Service, some few of them seamen, all of whom, certainly ought to be under their Lordships' eyes, in order that they might fully know their collective capabilities as such, in the event of a war suddenly breaking out; but, unhappily for this service, the preceding Boards of Admiralty have never identified themselves with it. Their Lordships certainly nominated and appointed the officers and men to it, but seem to have had no other interest in it whatsoever, and, consequently, too readily acquiesced in the arrangements the Board of Customs had, from time to time, proposed to them.

The present Board of Admiralty, however, is composed of men of a high and independent tone of mind; they have the good of their country really at heart, and, therefore, are sensitively alive to the interests of a profession upon which that country must ever depend for safety in the hour of need. I do consequently most sincerely and devoutly hope that the service which has been the subject of the series of letters I have attempted addressing to you, will at once be taken under their Lordships' especial protection, which, in my humble opinion, is the only effectual way to reorganise it.

In conclusion, I thank you most cordially for the attention and support you have given and promised to my feeble efforts, to benefit the officers and men of this ill-defined, badly regulated, and anomalous Service; and I beg to assure you that in thus making known their grievances and complaints, I have been solely influenced by the desire to rescue them from their present degraded position.

PERIODICALS.

THE Editor is the dupe of Destiny. His lot was [illegible] down to him a bargain, and it turns out to be [illegible]. His land of promise is a moving bog. His seat of power is a high-backed chair studded with thorns. His laurel wreath is a garland of nettles. His honours involve themselves into a capital hoax; his pleasures are merry penalties; his guidon is the snuff of a candle; his sword, but volumes of smoke. The Editor is the most ill-starred man alive. He, and he alone—the ten thousand pretenders about town notwithstanding—is indeed the identical martyr commonly talked of as the Most Ill-[illegible]. He seems to govern opinion, and is in [illegible] to the opinions of others. He incurs [illegible] of the risk and responsibility, and [illegible] tenth of the [illegible] and reputation. [illegible] work are [illegible] to him—[illegible] to his merits appear, the Editor is unsparingly condemned; if a brilliant one be inserted, Anonymous carries off the eulogium. The editorial function is supposed to consist "in the substitution of if it be for if it is, and the insertion of the word however here and there, to impede the march of a fine style." Commas and colons are the points he is reputed to make—his niche of fame is merely a parenthesis—he is but a note of admiration to genius! His life is spent in ushering Clever People into deserved celebrity; he sits, as charioteer, outside the vehicle, in which Prodigious Talents are driven to immortality. It is his fortune to insert all his Contributors in the temple of glory, and to exclude himself "for want of space." He is always to "go in," but expires unpublished at last. He bestows present popularity on thousands, without securing posthumous renown as his own share. His career is in this life a tale of mystery—"to be continued in the next." He is only thought of when things go wrong in the journal. Curiosity then looks out at the corners of his eyes, and with brows and lips pursed-up, querulously ejaculates "Who is he?" If, by any chance, praise instead of censure should be meditated, the wrong man is immediately mentioned. People are only certain of their editor when they design to horsewhip him. Is there a bright passage or two in an indifferent article, you may be sure they are not indebted for their polish to the editorial pen. Is there a dull phrase or a harsh period in some favourite contribution?—Oh! the Editor has altered it, or neglected to revise the press! But if the Editor is abused for what he inserts, he is twice-abused for what he rejects. It is a curious feature of his destiny, that if he strikes out but a single line of an article, whether in verse or prose, that very line is infallibly the crowning beauty of the production. It is not a little odd, that when he declines a paper, that paper is sure to be by far the best thing its author ever wrote. Accepted articles may be bad; rejected ones are invariably good. It is admitted that judgment is the first essential for an editorship, and it is at the same time insisted on, that judgment is exactly the quality which the Editor has not. An author is praised in a review—he is grateful to an individual writer, whose name he has industriously inquired for; an author is condemned in a review—he is unspeakably disgusted with the Editor. Week after week, month after month, the said Editor succours the oppressed, raises up the weak, applauds virtue, exalts talent—he pens or promulgates the praises of friends—of their books, pictures, acting, safety-lamps, and steam-peddles—but from the catalogue of golden names his own is an eternal absentee. Greater self-denial was not shown by the late Mr. Massingham of Drury-lane, who held office in the theatre for nearly forty years without once witnessing play or farce! Being solely responsible, the Editor is compelled not only to review, but even to read new volumes. There is another peculiarity in his condition. Of all the MSS. that come before him, it is his fate to peruse only those which will least repay the trouble. Observe; a contributor writes nonsense ten times over, the articles are returned—he sends one much better, it is inserted—a third exhibits a striking improvement—a fourth contains touches of genius—a few more papers are written and accepted, and their author has won a character for assured and established excellence of composition. It is superfluous to read further. Of so masterly a style, not another specimen need be perused. The Editor can rely upon his Contributor. His productions were read while they were worthless or indifferent, but they are now so admirable, so full of thoughts "that give delight and hurt not," that to inspect any more such MSS. would be clearly a waste of time. May it be so with ours!—New Monthly Magazine.

Drinking to Excess with Eminently Gifted Men.—Sir Richard Steel spent half his time in a tavern. In fact, he may be said to have measured time by the bottle; as on being sent for by his wife, he returned for answer, that "he would be with her in half a bottle." The like may be said of that great genius, Savage; and Addison was as dull as an Alderman till he was three parts drunk. Neither would he stop at that point. It is on record of him that he once drank till he vomited in the company of Voltaire, which called forth the cutting remark, that the only good thing that came out of his mouth, in his (Voltaire's) presence was the wine that had gone into it. It is also recorded of Pitt, but I cannot vouch for the truth of it, that two bottles of port wine per diem was his usual allowance, and that it was to potens Bacchus he was indebted for the almost super-human labour he went through during his short but actively employed life. His friend and colleague, Harry Dundas (afterwards Lord Melville), a clever man also in his way, went the pace with him over the mahogany; and the joke about the Speaker in his chair, after they had dined together, cannot be forgotten. Pitt could see no Speaker, but his friend, like Horace with the candle, saw two. Sheridan, latterly, without wine, was a drivellar. He sacrificed to it talents such as no man I ever heard or read of possessed, for no subject appeared to be beyond his reach. I knew him when I was a boy, and thought him then something more than human. That learned Person would get drunk in a pothouse—so would Robert Burns, the poet; and Byron drank brandy and water by bucketsful. Fox was a thirsty soul, and drank far too much wine for either a politician or a play-man, yet, like Nestor over the bowl, he was always great. But a contemporary of his, likewise a great playman and a clever fellow, out-heroded Herod. He estimated his losses in hogsheads of claret; and it was humourously said of John Taylor—for such was his name—that, after a certain hour of the night, "he could not be removed without a permit, as he had more than a dozen of claret on board." Two of the finest actors that ever graced the British stage could scarcely be kept sober enough to perform their parts.

Intellectual Qualifications of Officers of the Army.—In several regiments, which I could name if called upon, the topics of conversation at the mess are very frequently of a nature requiring a greater range of cultivated intellect for their discussion, than you will find at the tables of gentlemen in the same sphere of life; and I never yet met a corps in which there was not some one remarkably clever fellow, who could tell you more upon almost every subject than any one else. They do not, unquestionably, exercise their thoughts in the superior walks of their own profession, for the reasons I have before adduced; nor, with few exceptions, do I say that they delight much in books on politics, because they are almost universally of one way of thinking on that head, being honest Tories—Conservatives at any rate, and much more prone to obey orders than to question them; but in foreign and domestic literature, the fine arts, natural history, natural philosophy, the state of foreign countries, with their productions, commerce, laws, and manners, &c. &c., I have seen more knowledge displayed than, I think, I should have found elsewhere. In so closely packed a community as a regiment must necessarily be, some individual, who possesses more force of character than his fellows, will invariably give the tone to the rest; he will set the fashion, and that fashion will change as other fashions change. I recollect the officers of one corps, who nearly all became mineralogists. I remember another, where not a word could be uttered, for full two months, without being followed by a pun; this was tiresome beyond belief. At one time we were joined by a most metaphysical assistant-surgeon, who set all the youngsters by the ears about the nature of the soul: at another time, we had a young officer with us who sketched remarkably well; so several of us took pencils into our hands, which we had not touched since we left school: and I knew a regiment in India, where the mania for a couple of years was insect-hunting and bird-stuffing. But, unfortunately, it is too true, that there is great waste of intellect among regimental officers, which, if only brought into use by a system of rewarding men of superior attainments, and making each undergo a certain examination in the scientific parts of the profession, regulated according to his rank, before obtaining a higher grade, we should rescue the body of British officers from the forced ennui of which they themselves complain so much, and make them eminently fit for the arduous, complicated, and heavily responsible situations, which, from the nature of the service, they are occasionally called on to fill.—Fraser's Magazine.

China Paper and Marriage Offers in India.—Should the young lady herself observe the delicacy and consideration which a discarded lover has some right to expect, her friends are not always equally scrupulous, and the innamorato himself, in many cases, becomes the herald of his own defeat, by proclaiming his sorrows or his wrongs aloud. In some instances, the sting is rendered more poignant by the manner in which it is conveyed; a slight laconic answer inflicts a severe mortification; but the grand affront, in the estimation of a society, the male portion of which are great sticklers for etiquette, is a juwaub indited upon China paper. This is esteemed an inferior article of stationery in India, being obtainable at a low price in the bazaars; it is thin, with a watery edge, which will not bear the ink; and one side only being hot pressed, the other is rough and unsightly, and in fact scarcely capable of being written upon. The reader may judge of the depth of the annoyance occasioned by this "unkindest cut of all" by the following dialogue, which may be relied upon as the genuine effusion of a Corydon suffering in all the freshness of a newly-inflicted wound:—

"Do not mention her name to me, Alfred; speak of her no more; false, perfidious, ungrateful girl!" "Now be tranquil, my dear fellow; regard the matter philosophically; she is a mere girl, undeserving such an exhibition of feeling; indeed, the difference in your ages makes the affair scarcely a subject for regret; you may consider it a fortunate escape." "No, Alfred, no; I might have viewed the circumstance in the light in which you have placed it; I might even have made it a matter of congratulation; but consider the insult I have received, the heartless creature has positively rejected me upon China paper!"—Asiatic Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1836.

E regret to say that, notwithstanding the con- nt statements put forth by some of our con- poraries, on the subject of a Brevet and Flag motion, our apprehensions have been verified, all hope of such an event, during the present r, must now be abandoned.

n Tuesday night Mr. Bennerman, the Member Aberdeen, brought on the subject of which he given notice (namely, the tardiness of Military Naval Promotion) in a luminous speech, and statements seemed to make a very considerable favourable impression upon the House. We r our readers to our Parliamentary Report, ch we have given at more than ordinary gth, to show that the Honourable Member's position could have been accomplished for n mperatively small sum. Nevertheless, the re- mmendation of the Committee of 1833, which adverted to last week, and now subjoin, turned t as we expected the objection, and it was cited the Secretary at War, Viscount Howick, in ply to Mr. Bannerman. From the Noble Se- etary's speech, however, we may conclude that inisters are favourable to a measure for bettering e condition generally of the officers of all ranks the United Service; and the very considerable cess of revenue, which the unexampled prospe- y of the country must place at their disposal, ll give them the easy means of accomplishing eir praiseworthy intention, even did not the con- nually accelerating decrease, produced by the nu- erous deaths recorded every year, together with e system acted upon of making only one promotion r three vacancies, render the same sum as that ted in the estimates of the preceding Session, sliable to a considerable extent, to meet the pense caused by any measure of amelioration d relief to those veterans who have shed their st blood in defence of their King and country.

ome interesting statements were made respecting e length of service in different ranks, and the umber of deaths since the war, which will be ound in the Report, and Sir Henry Hardinge ook occasion to clear himself from the imputation hich he has generally (although it appears un- stly) borne, namely, that, as one of the Com- ittee, he agreed to the resolution in question, whereas the gallant officer asserts, that he divided pon and protested against it. Every grade and epartment of the United Service had its advocate n the debate, and Captain Pechell, R. N., took occasion to instance the case of a Midshipmen of his acquaintance, who was entitled to the vener- able title of grandfather, of which the gallant Captain assured the House there was no doubt, as he had himself stood sponsor to the child. We trust this is but a solitary case. A few such would make us suppose the days of Billy Culmer re-

The following is the recommendation of the Committee :—

"The Committee beg leave, in conclusion, to express their anxious hope, that no addition to the number of Flag Officers in the Navy, any more than to that of General Officers in the Army, will in future be made, except upon some very strong grounds of public necessity."

Upon the grievance of withholding Promotion we have received many communications, and some of our correspondents have doubted the accuracy of the information we have for months given, in opposition to some contemporary publications, particularly the Limerick Chronicle, which have had the folly to publish lists of officers to be included in the Brevet. We wish most sincerely that our statements had proved incorrect, though we are cautious not to advance statements but upon the information of parties on whom we can rely. We shall select, from numerous letters before us, an appeal to the First Lord of the Admiralty, on behalf of Naval Officers of each grade, and we shall return to the subject on behalf of the Officers of the Army.

PAY OF THE ROYAL NAVY.

My Lord,—I shall venture to trespass a few moments upon your attention for the purpose of soliciting your interference in favour of a class of men who, while suffering everything for their country, are really, in the scale of comfort, scarcely upon a parallel with the meanest subject that this country contains—I mean, my Lord, the officers of his Majesty's Navy. It is needless for me to observe that their pay is utterly inadequate to the rank they hold, and that it is less now, comparatively speaking, than it has ever been at any period since the flag of England ruled the waters which encircle her coasts. It is less than when, during eighth Henry, the unfolding energies of maritime strength were called into action by the warlike family of Norfolk, and directed to their proper sphere of authority and empire. It is less than, when animated by the lofty genius of Elizabeth, and valiantly led by Howard and Drake, her little squadron vanquished the then powerful Spaniard, and dealt upon her shores the destruction intended for her own. It is less than when the powers of the Protector Cromwell were wielded by the immortal Blake, and Spain and Holland, and the States and Barbary, were humbled at his feet. It is less than when, after the revolution which confirmed and consolidated our freedom, the haughty despot of France, while the continent trembled at his nod, was taught by the illustrious Russel that the ocean was the dominion of the rival kingdom. It is less than when, under the august House of Brunswick, the same useful lesson was repeated to his successor, by the splendid triumphs of Hawke and Boscawen. It is less than when, under the late venerable King George the Third the standard of England, fortunate only upon land, at the fortress of Gibraltar was led to glory and victory upon its own element by the gallant Rodney. And finally, my Lord, it is even less than in the late war, when the heroic Nelson, the mightiest amongst the mighty, descended in thunder upon the enemies of his native land from the mouth of the Nile to the confines of the Baltic. A slight comparison of the progressive, and latterly the rapid, advance in the prices of every article of life, with the tardy and hardly discernible increase of naval pay, would at once convince you of the fact, were the circumstance in any way questionable; but it is so palpably self-evident, that I should deem it an insult any further to comment upon it. To point out the insufficiency of the compensation at present attached to the services of the officers of the Navy, and to endeavour to obtain, through the medium of your Lordship, a removal or palliation of the hardships under which they consequently labour, are the motives which have prompted and excited this address. I wish, my Lord, the persons affected had so abler advocate, but I cannot wish them a more impartial judge. In order to place the matter more immediately before you, I shall take a view of the several ranks in the service, and I believe I shall have no difficulty in proving, that in each grade, and every one of them, the pay is no way commensurate with the importance or respectability of the situation. The first post, my Lord, is, as is well known, that of a Midshipman, and certainly the wretched pittance afforded to the young adventurer is such, that he never can be supposed to support with it the character of a gentleman—the thing is impossible; and when there is no other resource, which ought not to be expected in any, and is really possessed but by a few, there cannot well be conceived a state of less comfort and greater privation: the eager hopes and buoyant spirits incidental to early age can alone make it tolerable. Much, very much, my Lord, is wanting to render it agreeable. The next stage, after a service necessarily of six years, and often of double that period, is that of Lieutenant, and as this is the highest point at which the far greater part can ever attain, so it is, perhaps, of all others, the most entitled to relief and commiseration. As a gentleman he must at all times appear, and, however unable to bear it, must live; the unavoidable charges of the table require more than half his income, and what might pass unknown, and on that account unfelt, in the cockpit, cannot be admitted in the wardroom. The mind is wounded by the shafts which fall hurtless upon the boy; and what the careless gaiety of youth never considers, makes a deep impression upon riper years, the mind is oppressed equally in being thought to be poor and by the consciousness of being so the life is consumed, and often shortened, in a vain effort to support what cannot be supported, and in seeming not to feel what is most poignantly felt. The third step is that of Commander, and surely, my Lord, when you reflect that he, with nearly the expenses of Post Captain, has much less to defray them—that he is deemed company for every table, and cannot keep his man—and that many who attain this rank languish for want of employment, and cannot obtain a higher, you must conceive that, in a pecuniary light at least, it is no very enviable station. Little better, considered in the same view, is that of Post Captain; it is, indeed, highly and justly respected, but it is the respect of command alone, and it has not unfrequently happened that he who coerces so many is himself under subjection to the tradesman who furnishes the articles of his establishment, and even the necessary habiliments of his person. The last rank is that of Admiral, and this, my Lord, which so very few can reach, and, generally speaking, when they do reach, can for so short a time enjoy, one would expect would be so far rewarded by a grateful country that the growing infirmities of age would be alleviated, the possibility of disease and its attendant charges anticipated, and the evening of life rendered easy and agreeable, by an adequate provision. Far otherwise, my Lord; the pay of an Admiral is insufficient for any of these purposes: when his flag is down he must descend infinitely below his level in society, and the man who may have headed and directed the squadrons of his country, can barely afford himself, in an obscure retreat, the indispensable luxury of a single servant to perform the menial offices of his household. Truly, my Lord, this should not be; the venerable warrior, when his energies are wasted, should not be consigned to the period of his decline to the accumulated miseries of indigence, neglect, and obscurity. In this brief detail I have avoided entering upon the class of non-combatants; one of them owes its present increased comforts to the benevolent intention of the late Lord Melville, and the good effects of introducing men of talent into the Navy; another is in some degree a part of profit, though doubtless not more than equal in trouble the risk and possible loss attending it; the third, the Master, although thus classed, bears a conspicuous part in battle, as has been shown on very many occasions during the late wars, and has many other important duties to perform, which it must be admitted entitles him to superior rank and an increase of pay. I shall now, my lord, make a few observations relative to prize-money, the only method by which officers in the Navy have a chance of improving their condition. Upon this point, my Lord, it cannot escape you that a very great reduction has been made from that of the two first classes, as also some reduction in that of the third, without any compensation whatever. The propriety of this is not attempted to be questioned, but as it was a thing which had been for a very long time enjoyed, it is humbly conceived that where so much was taken away something should have been given, and that an extension of benefit to the seamen, (an extension, too, my Lord, neither asked nor thanked for,) should not have been accompanied with a great diminution of the hard earned profits of their Commanders. Besides, my Lord, even in other times prize-money was but a contingency—a mere affair of chance which could happen but to a small number, and never reached, or only in an ineffectual manner, a very large proportion. In these times there is but little to expect from few slavers, for, exclusive of the circumstances before mentioned, which attaches to Admirals and Captains only, there is another of greater moment, which [illegible] to all—circumstance of infinite advantage to the country and highly honourable to the Navy, though, it cannot be dissembled, in no trifling degree detrimental to its interests, and this affording a strong argument in favour of the measure I endeavour to advocate; I allude, my Lord, to that commanding superiority of the British fleets which has swept the [illegible] enemies from the ocean, and destroyed the mighty efforts of the tyrant of the universe. To this, my Lord, we owe the security of our commerce, the safety of our [illegible] the integrity of our coast, the preservation of [illegible] and the unmolested enjoyment of all the [illegible] social and domestic life. What, my Lord, is the reward of those valorous exertions to which all [illegible] ings are attributable, and by whom alone it [illegible] tained? Can it be found in the possession of [illegible] independence, or of competence? No, my Lord, [illegible] different fate awaits the greater part; even those [illegible] the good fortune to attain the summit of their profession most shrink from a comparison of their [illegible] with those of the least wealthy, and [illegible] able of their [illegible] support their proper rank, the pity perhaps, questionless ot the envy of those around them, they are compelled to ek in retirement and seclusion a refuge from the evils of o arrow fortune, and wounded, and sometimes a broken, init. Yet even this, my Lord, is happiness compared with hat must inevitably be the condition of the retired Lieut- naot. It is true he has not to support the appearance ex- ected from the two first classes, but there is one character hich he is imperiously called to support, the character of a entleman, and I know of no higher. To imagine that this a be done with the paltry allowance afforded him, is in- ulting to common sense. Perhaps, my Lord, the powers of ancy cannot depict a more wretched being than he who is educed to struggle without hope against the current of dversity—to shelter himself from impertinent curiosity in e hovel or the garret—to eat his scanty meal with inde- ent haste, fearful of discovery or intrusion—to shiver over few miserable embers in cold and cheerless winter nights —to wear the semblance of tranquillity over the reality of istress, and to lie down with the conviction that the suc- eeding morning will bring either a renewal or an accession f affliction.

My Lord, this description may appear highly coloured, nt be assured, under existing circumstances it is but too rue a representation of what does or must happen to a very rge proportion of the officers of the Navy. In this melan- holy picture I have not considered the possibility of the ncumbrances (for also such it must be deemed) of an aged arent, an orphan sister, and (dearer still) a beloved wife nd helpless family; yet all these things may, and I am ell informed very frequently do, occur: what then, my ord, must be the anguish of a man so situated. I can asily conceive, but I am destitute of language to describe , the grave alone can give relief to his sufferings, and his st moments must be embittered by the recollection that hose, an anxiety for whom caused or accelerated his end, rill be left, friendless and unprovided, to the mercy of an nfeeling world." A cold heart, my Lord, may object that a erson so placed in life should never marry; but, not to ention that such an idea is at variance with the noblest nd most generous passion of the human mind, the person apable of conceiving it may safely be consigned to infamy nd contempt. What I have said, my Lord, applies with he same force both to the full and half-pay, and I might numerate many other circumstances which entitle the Navy the attention of the country, as the losses by accident, by re, and shipwreck, with various other expenses as heavy as hey are unavoidable, for which there is no compensation; ut what I have already stated, however toobly, will, I hope, e sufficient for my purpose. Your Lordship may, perhaps, ndeed imagine that much of the misery I have depicted is deal, because it may never have been observed by you or hose in your confidence; but, my Lord, you must consider hat while scenes of woe are excluded from the mansions, hey also very rarely fall under the observation of the great, nd I must intreat you not to form an opinion from the ountenances of those who are admitted to your levee, or nore distinguished throng, who are honoured with an invi- ation to your table; many a serene and smiling face has he canker in the bosom, and surely, my Lord, the manly ortitude which is superior to misfortune is an argument, not or the continuation but for the removal of it. We admire he courage which faces the tempest, but where is the heart hat would desire it to fall a sacrifice. I have now, my ord, presumed much upon your goodness, and I can only hew my wish that in such a cause it had been engaged by abler pen. But I feel convinced that the persons inte- rested will find in you a willing friend and powerful ediator.

The lucubrations of some of the daily Journalists n the subject of our Naval co-operation with he forces of the Queen of Spain, are not a little mmsing. The policy of cordially adhering to the Quadruple Treaty, whereby we are bound to ren- er such co-operation, may be a fair subject for ewspaper discussion; but that our contempore- ies, who invariably betray a lamentable ignorance n military matters, should undertake to instruct our gallant seaman in the performance of any duty hey are ordered to execute, is ludicrous in the xtreme, and reminds us of the presumption of hat precocious youth who undertook to enlighten is grandmother in the practice of an art in which he was an adept long before he was born. Be- ause the Phœnix took up an admirable position, at a range calculated, to discharge her shells at an levation which carried them over the heads of the nemies, [illegible] are thrown out that such a [illegible] a cowardly one, [illegible] to the Carlists, as not affording them an opportunity of returning the fire; and our Navy is represented to be for the first time engaged in a war of assassi- nation, with more of the same puerile stuff. We believe this is the first time that the accommoda- tion of an antagonist has ever been considered when taking up a position. Although sailors assert that good manners are only to be acquired at sea, such an excess of it would be carrying politeness too far. If ships have been run along- side of an enemy before engaging, it is because such close action will generally insure the victory to the best fought ship, by depriving the combat of those chances of dismasting, &c. attendant upon a distant cannonade; and in Fleets where ships are closely united for mutual protection, it is more ne- cessary still to bring about a decisive and speedy result; hence it has always been our favourite mode of warfare. But cannonading and shelling are different things, and even were it not in the case under review necessary to fire over the heads of the assailants, it is always desirable to perform the latter practice at an elevation, in order to pitch the shell into the spot where it is intend- ed to burst, and to perform this, it must be discharged from a carronade gun from an ex- tended distance. We are aware that, however well-informed our contemporaries may be on other subjects, they are not generally looked upon as authorities on military matters, and there- fore anything advanced regarding such can have little or no effect. But we are sorry to find one respectable Journal, after exhausting its spleen upon the parties engaged in opposition to the Carlists, extend it to the acts of our Naval officers (who are merely doing their duty with that skill and ability which they have ever displayed), and, by the statements indulged in, endeavouring to de- tract from the merit of what we consider a very skilful display of gun practice. Could General Evans have been assured that the well-directed fire of the steamers would have opened a breach in the manner it was performed, it is probable he would have suspended the assault until it had been accomplished.

We have also noticed that, whilst giving eager publicity to any success, positive or doubtful, on the part of the Carlists, The Morning Herald studi- ously avoids the insertion of any advantage gained on the other side, even when effected by the blood of our countrymen. When it is remembered that a large British squadron is vigorously employed upon the Coast of Spain, and that many thousands of our fellow-subjects, commanded by British Half- pay Officers, are actively engaged in the struggle, and that they have all friends more or less inte- rested in their fate, we do think that a faithful and impartial statement of the events which are daily occurring in Spain would be more acceptable to English readers, than hyperbolic accounts of matters which can only be interesting to the wor- shipful community of Stock-jobbers, and are in- serted one day, for no other reason that is com- prehensible to us, than to be contradicted on the next.

An Old Indian has furnished us with a memo- randum of the principal events that occurred in a regiment, stationed in the East Indies, during a service of thirteen years and six months. This document most fully corroborates all we have ad- vanced in preceding numbers, on the subject of the almost expatriated Regiments of the King's Army in India. We are here shown that, out o 2,150 men, no less than 1,171 have died, and only 649 are now with the corps; and we ask whether any further evidence can be necessary to induce the Military Authorities to adopt measures for the relief, within a reasonable period, of regiments in India, and to give a fair proportion of foreign duties to every corps in the service.

The portion of pay which the Seaman or Marin is allowed to allot to his wife, while he is servin on board ship, is not only a source of great com fort to the families of such men as avail themselve of this indulgence, but is also extremely benefici to the Royal Navy generally, by inducing men good character and settled habits to join the Se vice. Being fully convinced of the wisdom an benevolence of the policy which has caused th adoption of the allotment system, we would gladl see the benefits of it enjoyed by our men unde every possible circumstance, and are therefore in duced to point out some situations in which th families of our Royal Marines are subjected much temporary distress, which a slight alteratio in the present regulations would alleviate witho injury or inconvenience to the Government.

If we are not misinformed it is customary in th Naval Service, when a ship is destined for foreig service, immediately before her departure, to pa the men two months' pay, and to grant allotme tickets to the married men, payable after thr months, by which the wife is empowered to r ceive about one-half of her husband's growi pay, thus enabling the careful man, not only provide himself with such articles as he may re quire for the voyage, but to leave something assist in the present maintenance of his family; has also the satisfaction of knowing that, when oxpiration of three months, the allotments are ourse of payment, they will have a regularly

, although small, income; but when Royal ines are suddenly sent from head-quarters on icular service, as were the battalions for Lis-Ireland, and recently for the Coast of Spain, are generally embarked in some vessel for a age, and it is not usual to make out the lists of men, who wish to allot, until they join the , or station, for which they are destined. Thus, he case of the men recently sent on service, left their respective head-quarters and proceed-steam-vessels direct to the Coast of Spain out making any allotments previous to leaving land, consequently the wives have to wait for period consumed in the passage out and home, in the unavoidable delay in sending home the
, which will probably add three weeks or a th to the usual time they must be without ey from their husbands: nor is this the only avenience to which they are exposed, for men permanently attached to a ship do not receive two months' pay usually issued prior to sail-therefore those employed on this description ervice are unable to make any provision for support of their families, and much distress misery is the consequence.

s it is probable that the Royal Marines will be e employed abroad than formerly, as bat-ne or detachments, not borne no part complet of a ship, this may be considered a growing
, but can, we conceive, be easily remedied by ing a column for allotments in all the embark-n, discharge, or transfer sheets, in which umn should be inserted, opposite the man's ne, the name and address of the person to whom allots. When men embark, the Paymaster uld be required to see to the correctness of se lists, and transmit copies of them to the puty Adjutant-General for the information of Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, who ld send the allotment tickets to the parties cerned immediately the ship leaves port, pay-e in the usual time, for those who have received months' pay prior to sailing, but at one months' for those that have not received any advance vages. When men are discharged to the shore, ransferred to another ship, the Captain's Clerk uld see that these lists are corrected, and that ry thing is done to prevent confusion in the unts, in case it be deemed convenient, in the t of a force being landed, to put the men on re pay while serving abroad.

Such of our readers as may have noticed a graph which went the round of the press a night back, are by this time doubtless prepared hear that the Vanguard, which ship could not Portsmouth Harbour without leaving nearly ee hundred tons weight of her stores behind, is w that the said weight has been received on rd), if not sunk outright, so deep that her ports near the water's edge, the constructor's line olly at fault, and various other matters, which gentlemen of the School, who strut about the ck-yard, and never fail to impress upon every e who will listen the contempt they are pleased entertain at the proceedings of the head of their partment, these exquisitely scientific Naval chitects (Shipwrights is too vulgar a term) were eased to predict. It has come to pass, however, at the Vanguard, instead of an alacrity to sink the reputation of these philosophers, displays a contrary disposition, and, whilst the School are driven to invent new falsehoods to pass current for a week, by the aid of a little humbug imposed on editors who have not the penetration to see through their designs, the noble ship is riding majestically at Spithead, floating within an inch of the constructor's line, with her midship lower-deck port seven feet from the water's edge; and all that could be mustered in her dispraise last week was that she looked short, unlike the faces of certain of her traducers, whose visages have sensibly elongated during this ship's equipment, and we have heard of matter which will no doubt give a tendency to further extension. Thus ends the first chapter: all the infamous reports, circulated in every possible manner, are now falsified by the result, that so far Captain Symonds has accomplished what no builder has perhaps ever yet done, given the calculated flotation of his ship from the draught within an inch. We shall take no notice of the statements of prepared tanks, extraordinary draught of water, &c. &c., but sum up our remarks on the whole by the assurance that all the reports which have been palmed upon the press by certain parties, who we trust will be brought to book, are false.

When all the ships are assembled, we shall furnish our readers with their individual tonnage, displacement, weight on board, complements, draught of water, &c. &c. as correctly as we can obtain those particulars, and as everything has been done for the Vanguard that the constructor could effect, we know that her officers will feel it incumbent upon them to use their best exertions in the trial about to take place; and, with all due respect for their skill and ability, we must still be of opinion that it would be but justice to Captain Symonds to allow him to take the first cruise in the ship, a practice always performed by Chapman, the Swedish builder, and not unfrequently in this country, as in the case of Sir Robert Seppings, we believe. In fact, the eye of the builder (and that builder one of the best seamen in the Navy) is the most proper to detect fault, if fault there should be, and apply the proper remedy.

With reference to the letter from an officer of high rank, signed C., on the subject of a paragraph which appeared in our last week's Gazette, we must remark that we have always been of opinion, and still think that, in all those situations, for the performance of the duties of which the Naval Officer's education has qualified him, a periodical change should take place; and we believe that, as regards the Packets, and the appointments to commands of steam-vessels particularly, the only reason that the regulation has been deviated from, is the disinclination to place inexperienced officers in those situations. The paragraph in question, we are free to confess, admits of qualification. There are many situations, held by Naval Officers, in which an acquaintance with the official details of business is of more value than even professional knowledge; where an incompetency in such respect would not only throw the affairs of a whole department into confusion, but entail enormous expenses upon the public. The result would be—that situations (after those changes had failed) would be made permanent, and probably be held by civilians. There is much good sense in our correspondent's letter, and we shall shortly return to the subject.

Reports are current that two companies will be added to the Royal Marine Artillery. It is remarkable, that, on the two or three occasions which have called into play this corps, they have received great praise,—Lieut. Logan receiving the order of the Legion of Honour for the extraordinary accuracy with which he threw shells into the Morea Castles during the Greek business,—Lieut. Castien having much credit for the accuracy of his plans of the Lines of Lisbon,—and now the Phœnix affair surprises all military folks, and causes them to wonder why a corps so useful should have been reduced.

Gossip.—The much talked of correspondence, left behind by mistake, furnishes daily anecdotes in the world of fashion. It is said that a nephew and uncle were equal favourites, at the same time with a third party, who was removed by a high appointment. The characters and actions of individuals are confidentially canvassed with more truth than caution; and those of a relation and a convenient female friend have somewhat suffered by discussion. The head of the family is reported to say that no consideration shall prevent a trial requisite to remove the chance of succession from one unworthy to support it; and a Peer of the highest rank, whose son married against his consent, is said to be indignant to the greatest degree at the disgrace recently added to the connexion. —Herald.

The action brought by the police magistrate, Mr. Norton, against Viscount Melbourne, to recover damages for crim. con., is set down for trial in the Court of Common Pleas for the Middlesex sittings after this term. The damages are laid at 10,000*l*. It is expected that the trial will take place on the 19th or 20th inst. A special jury is to be summoned for the occasion.

Mr. O'Connell passed through Ipswich on Sunday, on his return from Bungay, and attended the Catholic chapel there. As he was afterwards passing through the streets to the Suffolk Hotel, he was hooted and jeered at. On Friday, as he was passing to the Suffolk Hotel, on his way from the Corn-hill, he was pelted with mud and dirt.—Suffolk Herald.

The King of Greece is expected in Paris on his way to Bavaria.

The Minister of War at Brussels has given orders for the recal of soldiers belonging to four regiments of the line and three of cavalry who were on furlough.

On Friday the police made a seizure of muskets and other weapons of war at the house of M. Buri, gunsmith, the same person who supplied Fieschi with barrels for his infernal machine.—Galignani.

The Commissary of Police at Bordeaux have seized at the coach-office of Laffitte and Caillard a chest containing epaulettes and military effects bearing the cipher of Don Carlos.—Messager.

Rear-Admiral Hugon, who has assumed the command of the squadron, is about to sail from Toulon to Tangier, to demand satisfaction from the Emperor of Morocco.—Galignani.

A gentlemen of great enterprise and talent has agreed with the King of France to light the city of Versailles with gas. The same individual has contracted to supply Caen, in Normandy, with water.

The Bishop of London has had a serious relapse, and has been interdicted by his physicians from attending to business of any kind.

A meeting of Baronets and their eldest sons took place this week at the Clarendon Hotel, to petition the King, to grant them permission to wear the badge conferred on their ancestors by the royal founder. Sir R. Greisley presided. A deputation of four Baronets, accompanied by the Secretary, was appointed to take his Majesty's pleasure as to the time when he would receive the petition and address, preparatory to another general meeting of the order being held to appoint the deputation to carry the same to the foot of the throne.

Cobbett Monument.—Sir Francis Burdett has addressed the following to the Committee, in reply to their application for his support:—"Sir, a letter from you, dated the 16th of May, having followed me here, I lose not a moment in returning, according to your request, an answer. You invite me to a meeting to be held on the 13th of the month, at the Crown and Anchor, at which Mr. D. O'Connell is to preside, for the purpose of raising a subscription for a monument to be erected to the memory of the late Mr. Cobbett. The application is unique, as the French say, seeing that whoever attends that meeting becomes a public voucher for the honesty, disinterestedness, and patriotism of the said Mr. Cobbett. Now, as I believe, or rather know, the world and as all the world besides know my opinion [illegible] rience thereon, it would be something worse than [illegible] in me to attend such a meeting, and I [illegible] at the application. At the same time I [illegible] acknowledge that the united empire could not [illegible] more appropriate chairman. Nor can I refuse to the Committee any contribution [illegible] belief's [illegible] by [illegible] as lent, will amount to considerably more than 8000*l.* I trust the committee will think this a handsome and uitable offer. I remain, gentlemen, your most obedi-ht servant, F. BURDETT.

DISPATCH OF LIEUT.-GEN. EVANS.

" Head-quarters, St. Sebastian, May 28.

" Most Excellent Sir,—This morning the enemy's entrenchments on the right bank of the Urumea were attacked and carried in the handsomest manner by her Majesty's troops and vessels of war, and by those of his Brit. Majesty; and I have the pleasure to add that the important sea-port town and harbour of Passages, so long in the power of the rebels, is at length subjected to her Majesty's authority, and is now again occupied by her Majesty's troops and ships of war. At six o'clock in the morning we opened thirty pieces of artillery, which evidently surprised the insurgents, made considerable havoc in their ranks, and compelled them to a precipitate retreat, even before the ebb of the tide permitted the heads of our columns to reach the other bank of the river. The insurgents in a hurried manner fell back from one position to another, evincing, evidently, much feebleness and discouragement. Two columns of Brig.-Gen. Jauregui's division, under that excellent officer, commanded by Cols. Van Halen and Amor, with [illegible] British and Guipuscoan volunteer companies, led the attack, supported by the British auxiliary brigade of [illegible] and Col. Fitzgerald, and by the British [illegible] Maj. Owens, Lieut.-Col. Rait of some Lancers, into Passages. [illegible] Hesse Homburg reg., which company of the first British reg., crowned the heights above the harbour of Passages, driving the enemy by their fire from the opposite cliffs. The castle, in which the insurgents had a casemented battery of four pieces of artillery, was gallantly attacked by his Brit. Majesty's ship, under Commodore Lord J. Hay, and those of her Majesty, under Adm. Ribera and Commodore Henry, and four pieces of cannon and an armed schooner were captured. The fire from the Phœnix and Salamander was again remarkable, as was that of ten pieces of artillery, belonging to the Legion, and directed by Col. Colquhoun. Brig.-Gen. Shaw remained in command of the lines on the left bank of the river. To all these officers and others, whom I have not time to enumerate, I am greatly indebted for their able assistance, &c. What adds to the pleasure of this important and useful success, is the very trivial loss with which it has been gained. Capt. Moitland, of the Tweed, rendered important services in constructing and laying a bridge of boats over the broad and rapid Urumea river. We now have a considerable tract of country within our positions on either bank of the river, and the altered tone of the inhabitants, the confidence evinced in the conduct of the Queen's troops to them, the absence of apprehension and of injury observable, was most satisfactory, and augurs well for the future. As the tract of country acquired to day comprehends one town, two or three villages, and numerous farms and other houses, apprehensions existed lest the rebels might persist in devastating what they could not defend. But such was not the case. Ashamed, perhaps, of the odium produced by their late conduct in that respect, not a house was injured.—I have, &c. DE L. EVANS.

The Court.

His Majesty's next Levée will take place on Wednesday 8th June, and in future the Levées will be held on Wednesdays as usual until further orders.

The King has appointed Thomas Newley Reeve, Esq., Standard Bearer to His Majesty's Hon. Corps of Gentlemen at Arms, vice Sir George Pocock.

The Duchess of Kent gave a full dress ball (the second this season) on Monday evening, at Kensington-palace. The Princess Victoria had for her partners during the evening, their Royal Highnesses Prince George of Cambridge, the Hereditary Prince of Orange and the Prince Alexander of Orange, the Hereditary Prince of Saxe Coburg, the Prince Albert of Saxe Coburg, the Duke of Buccleuch, the Marquis of Douglas, Lord Maidstone, and Lord Morpeth. The ball was one of the most brilliant of this season.

On Tuesday and Thursday the King and Queen, with a brilliant cortège, honoured Ascot-heath race course with their presence. Their Majesties, on both occasions, were received with the greatest enthusiasm.

To-day their Majesties will be present at the Eton Regatta; and on the return of the boats from Surly Hall, the usual display of fire works will take place on the island above the bridge.

The Duchess of Gloucester and suite left town on Thursday morning for Dover, on her way to Hanover.

To-day is the anniversary of the birth-day of the Duke of Cumberland, his Royal Highness having completed his 65th year.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 30th May.—Petitions were presented for the better observance of the Sabbath; from the Clergy of the Archdeaconry of Durham, praying that the surplus funds of that See might be applied to the augmentation of the smaller livings; against the Great Northern Railway Bill, and for the Abolition of the Jewish Disabilities.—The Scotch Entail Bill was referred to a Select Committee.—The Shetland Seaman's Fund Bill went through a Committee.

TUESDAY, 31st May.—The Slavery Abolition (Jamaica) Bill went through a committee, Lord GLENELG having previously stated the circumstances under which the Bill had originated, and Lord ABERDEEN having expressed his opinion that the Bill was not only desirable but necessary.—The second reading of the Bishopric of Durham Bill was opposed by the Marquess of Londonderry, and supported by the Archbishop of Canterbury, Earl Grey, and the Duke of Cleveland, and the Duke of Wellington. Ultimately the Bill was read a second time.

THURSDAY, 2nd June.—Lord MELBOURNE stated that Government had determined to extend the time for the repayment of sums advanced for the building of workhouses. Lord CLARE, in presenting a petition from proprietors of East India stock, praying for an equalization of the duties on East and West India sugar, asked what the intentions of the Government were with reference to this subject? Lord MELBOURNE replied, that he trusted, that when Ministers had communicated with the various parties interested, they would be enabled to introduce a measure satisfactory to all. The petition was withdrawn, in consequence of some informality.

FRIDAY, June 3rd.—The Dundee Harbour Bill was read a third time and passed. In a conversation on the subject of Rail-roads, the Duke of Wellington said it was desirable to insert in all Railways some clause to enable the Government and Parliament to revise the enactments of those bills at some future period.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 30th May.—Petitions were presented in favour of the emancipation of the Jews; against any further grant to Maynooth College; and praying the House to reject the Irish Municipal Reform Bill, as sent down from the Lords.—The debate on the Dublin Election Petition was resumed. A short but animated discussion took place, and ultimately the petition was withdrawn.—Lord JOHN RUSSELL moved the first order of the day for the purpose of allowing Mr. Grove Price an opportunity of bringing forward his motion to expunge Mr. O'Connell's motion for a reform of the House of Lords from the notice book. Mr. PRICE said that in deference to the opinion of some friends, and also on account of some technical objection to his motion, he would withdraw it. The House went into a Committee of Supply.—Mr. WAKLEY complained that the British Museum was shut up in holiday time; and the CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer pledged himself to bring the subject under the notice of the trustees.—A desultory conversation ensued on the subject of the Zoological Gardens, in the course of which the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER horrified Sir Andrew Agnew by declaring that he occasionally afforded himself some Sunday relaxation by a visit to those gardens, and in doing so, he thought, devoted a part of the day to a perfectly legitimate and proper purpose. Several votes were then agreed to, after which the House resumed.

TUESDAY, 31st May.—A vast number of petitions were presented, praying for an adequate reform of the Irish Corporations, and for the rejection of the alterations introduced into the Bill by the Lords.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE brought forward his motion in favour of Prince Polignac and the prisoners at Ham, and was seconded by Mr. C. Berkeley. After a debate, in the course of which great sympathy was shown for the prisoners, and a strong feeling was expressed that it would be inexpedient for this country to interfere directly and actively in the domestic affairs of another nation, Mr. DUNCOMBE withdrew his motion. Lord J. RUSSELL postponed the further consideration of the Irish Municipal Corporation Amendment Bill for a week.—Mr. BANNERMAN called the attention of the House to the situation in which many officers of various ranks, belonging both to His Majesty's land and sea forces, are now placed. He perceived by the Navy List that there were 78 captains of 30 years' standing, and between 60 and 70 years of age, who, though they were of course too old to be efficient flag officers, should nevertheless receive some increase to the miserable amount of pay which they at present receive. There was a similar proportion of officers in the other ranks, for whom he was about to claim the same act of justice. Those who had given so many years of service to their country, were entitled to the additional rank and half-pay of senior officers. It would not be attended with any very great expense; which expense, besides, would not be a permanent charge upon the country, while in granting it they would be doing a positive act of justice, nay, of humanity, to those individuals. He found that officers who held the rank of Lieut.-Colonel at the battle of Waterloo, were still Lieut.-Colonels, while officers who had held a similar rank at the same period in the Prussian service had attained the highest rank in their profession. The expense of doing this act of justice to those individuals would not exceed 20,000*l.* or 25,000*l.* for each service. He concluded by moving for various returns. Mr. B. HOY seconded the motion. Lord HOWICK could not forget that in 1833 a committee was appointed to examine into this subject, and that committee came to a resolution that no additional promotions to generals', and field-officers' appointments should be made except for some very particular and remarkable service. On that committee there were several officers, and he believed the gallant member for Launceston; therefore such a committee was well qualified to judge of the claims of officers. There were now on the list no less than 800 general officers, while the whole demand for their employment was very little above the proportion of one to every ten; for military appointments of all sorts, both at home and abroad, did not exceed from 30 to 40. In some estimates which he had lately submitted to the house he had to propose 100,000*l.* as an additional allowance beyond their [illegible] emoluments to 134 officers as colonels of regiments. It was a subject which deserved attention, and he [illegible] remain in office until the next session, he should [illegible] duly feel it to be his duty to bring the [illegible] before the House. Had means been taken during the war to prevent the great increase of officers in the Army and Navy, there would have been considerable less difficulty now in providing a proper remuneration for deserving men. By a statement which he had procured from the Admiralty, it appeared, in the years 1828 and 1829, there were no less than 213 promotions to lieutenancies in the Navy; in 1831-1832, when there was no reduction in the number of ships of war, the promotions were reduced to 84; in 1828-1829, not less than 139 commanders and 57 captains in the Navy were made; in 1831-1832, only 31 commanders and 17 captains were made. During the same periods, also, means were taken to restrict the number of midshipmen. Now, if that system of reduction had been adopted at an early period of the war, the means would not now be wanting to reward deserving officers according to their merits. At present, however, H.M.'s Government did not feel (especially with the recommendation of the Parliamentary committee before their eyes) at liberty to propose a general brevet promotion; but they were prepared with all possible speed, to look into the general state of the army with a view to a better arrangement of the whole system, and this would most probably be done next session. Sir H. HARDINGE said that the number of general officers at the close of the war was 550, but according to the statement of the noble lord it was now 360 only, consequently there was a diminution to the extent of 190 general officers. That alone ought to constitute a case to call for a brevet promotion. But since the war there had been a diminution of 6,000 officers, and the saving to the country occasioned by the reduction in the number of officers since the termination of the war was not less than 1,300,000*l*. When it was recollected that the officers who fought at Waterloo received no higher payment than officers a hundred years ago, was it not an act of injustice to deny them a brevet promotion, which, from the custom of time immemorial, they had every reason to expect? It was perfectly true, that he was a member of the committee which sat on this question, but he divided against the resolution for not granting any additional promotions. Sir R. FERGOSON made a few remarks. Maj.-Gen. Sir J. ELLEY said that he was a Maj.-Gen. of 17 years' standing, but though he did not feel particularly desirous of any further promotion, he certainly felt anxious that many deserving men who were at present below him in rank should receive that promotion to which they were justly entitled. He would particularly press the case of the Artillery corps on the attention of the House and the Government. The Artillery was the most efficient arm of the British force in the field, and they were exposed to more danger during the war than the Artillery of the French, because, while the object of the latter was to dismount the guns, that of the former was to reduce the numerical strength of the enemy, and the manner in which they executed their hazardous duty during the frequent opportunities he had of witnessing it had always excited his admiration. Capt. BERKELEY complained of the circumstances in which the midshipmen were placed by the present system of promotion. They now received but 50*l*. a-year, and that only if they found a Captain to keep them. Should they prove so unfortunate as not to acquire that advantage, they obtained no pay at all. Mr. HUME objected to the motion. He complained that the dead weight was chiefly made up of men who had never seen any service at all; there was no service so well paid as the Naval and Military of this country, and hence it was that the aristocracy were so eager to enter into them. Sir E. CODRINGTON thought the best interests of the country depended upon the distribution of fair and impartial justice both to Army and Navy. Capt. PECHELL said there were now 700 midshipmen, of whom 200 were unemployed, and amongst them there were to be found men upwards of 30 years, and one instance of a midshipman who was not only married, but who was actually a grandfather. (A laugh). Mr. WOOD said it could not be expected that the same number of officers could be kept up in peace as in war; and that to carry into effect the suggestions which had been made would require an immense sum of money. We were now paying the penalty of the numerous promotions which had been made during the war. After a few words from Capt. DUNDAS and Mr. BANNERMAN, Capt. BOLDERO pointed out the impolicy of the existing plan of allowing officers of the Artillery to remain at the grade of Captain for so many years; it would probably happen that an Artillery Captain might be 60 when employed on actual service. The motion was then agreed to.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER next moved that the House resolve itself into a committee to consider the laws affecting his Majesty's subjects of the Jewish persuasion. Sir R. INGLIS opposed the motion, and contended that the emancipation of the Jews was not called for by the country. Mr. Estcourt, Mr. Plumptre, and Col. Perceval opposed the motion, and Mr. Robinson, Col. Thompson, and Mr. O'Connell supported it. For the motion, 70; against it, 19; majority, 51. A committee in pursuance of the motion was agreed to.

WEDNESDAY, 1st Jen.—A number of petitions were presented on the subject of Irish Tithes and Irish Municipal Reform.—The Midland Counties Railway Bill, Irish Waste Lands Bill, Deptford Pier Junction Railway Bill, and London and Dover Railway Bill were read a third time and passed. Lord JOHN RUSSELL, in reference to the notice by Lord Stanley that he would submit, on reading the order of the day for the second reading of the Church of Ireland Bill, a motion for "leave to bring in a Bill for the conversion of tithe composition into rent charges, and for the redemption thereof, and for the better distribution of ecclesiastical revenues in Ireland," stated he had no objection to the introduction of the Bill as a substantive motion, but as an amendment on the reading of the order of the day, he would feel it his duty to oppose it. Lord STANLEY was willing simply to introduce his Bill, if the Noble Lord would consent to postpone the second reading of his Bill for three weeks. Lord JOHN RUSSELL would not consent. Lord MORPETH then moved the order of the day for the second reading of the Church of Ireland Bill, upon which Lord STANLEY brought forward his motion. It was opposed by Lord JOHN RUSSELL, and a debate ensued, which occupied the rest of the evening, and ultimately was adjourned till Thursday.

THURSDAY, 2nd June.—Mr. T. DUNCOMBE having presented petitions for inquiring into Lieut.-Colonel Bradley's dismissal from the Army, stated he should postpone his motion for a select committee until the arrival of Col. Arthur into this country. The House was almost exclusively occupied with the adjourned debate on Lord STANLEY'S motion. The speakers were Mr. Barron, Mr. G. Knight, Mr. O'Brien, Mr. Roche, Mr. E. L. Bulwer, Mr. Maclean, Lord Morpeth, Sir Jas. Graham, and Mr. Shiel. The debate was again adjourned.

FRIDAY, 3d June.—Mr. GROTE presented a petition from persons engaged in the paper trade in the city of London, praying that the reduction of duty on paper might be accompanied by a drawback equivalent to the stock in hand.—Sir J. GRAHAM begged to know when the question of the Stamp Duties would be brought forward. Lord J. RUSSELL said Friday next, or some day subsequently. The debate on Lord John Russell's motion for the second reading of the Irish Church Bill, and on Lord Stanley's amendment, was then resumed. In the course of it, Mr. Serjeant Jackson, Messrs. Ward, Harvey, O'Connell, Sir Robert Peel, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, spoke. The House divided. For the second reading, 300; against it, 261; majority, 39.

Foreign and Colonial Intelligence

FRANCE.—There is no political news of any importance. In the Chamber of Deputies, the chief point of interest is an Anti-English speech delivered by the Duke of Fitzjames (the last of the Stuarts), deprecating the alliance formed by the French Government with the English—to the humiliation and ultimate ruin of France, who is made "the dupe of English selfishness." M. Thiers answered this speech with spirit and ability.

SPAIN.—The dissolution of the Mendizabal Ministry, has been succeeded by the dissolution of the Cortes so recently assembled. The vote of the Chamber, expressive of distrust of the new Ministry, was followed by another still more fiercely denunciatory, declaring M. Isturiz and his colleagues wholly unworthy of confidence. The Queen determined to hazard a dissolution. Madrid was tranquil on the 25th, and the news from the provinces good. We have elsewhere given Lieut.-General Evans' account of the movements of his force and the capture of Passages. The point seems to have been pretty stoutly contested again by the Carlists, but owing to the co-operation of some of the British and Spanish ships within gun shot, and the active exertions of a party of his Britannic Majesty's Marines, they were at length compelled to give it up to the assailents, and leave the coast quite free. Cordova claims a victory over the Carlists on 23d ult., but it could have been of no moment, as on the following day he was attacked in his position at Artaban with great obstinacy. The Carlists are stated to have been repulsed with loss.

PRUSSIA.—It is stated that 43 members of the Secret Association of the Students in the University of Greswald, and 42 members of a similar association in the University of Breslau, have been sentenced to six years' imprisonment in a fortress, to inability to hold any office, and finally, to payment of the costs.

CANADA.—On the 20th April the Lieut.-Governor, Sir Francis Head, prorogued the Parliament, and subsequently, according to a Philadelphia paper, dissolved it. He read a long speech on the occasion, recapitulating the proceedings of the session. All the supplies have been withheld, and all the money bills passed by the Assembly for the improvement of roads, canals, &c., have been reserved by the Lieut.-Governor for his Majesty's pleasure. These papers contain a very long and circumstantial report of a Committee of the House of Assembly on the Executive Council, which was read to the Assembly on the 15th April; and is said, by the Canadian papers, to have excited a great sensation, both in the House and throughout the colony. It is drawn up in a spirit very unfavourable to Sir Francis Head. The House of Assembly of Lower Canada had been further prorogued to the 30th May.

Theatres.

KING'S.—Grisi has been playing her old characters to crowded houses; and Rossini's opera of L'Assedio di Corinto this evening, being the first time of its performance this season, will be certain to attract a very large attendance of the fashionable world.

DRURY LANE.—Mr. Balfe's new Opera, The Maid of Artois, has been produced, and proved successful, but we are decidedly of opinion that it is not a work calculated to force its way into popularity; its highest merit is to be tolerable, for it is without any gleam of genius which can forcibly impress the imagination. The great fault of this Opera is the absence of melody; a person may listen to it time after time, and but one strain will dwell upon the memory, and that cannot boast the merit of originality,—we allude to the air sung by Phillips commencing "The light of other days has faded." The Opera is far inferior to Mr. Balfe's first work, The Siege of Rochelle, and certainly not likely to make us forget the Somnambula and Fidelio. The acting of Malibran in this piece is above all praise; her singing delightful, except in a few instances, when by overstraining the notes above her compass, she failed; her lower notes are the most perfect and beautiful we ever heard. The finale, of which so much has been said by our contemporories, owes its entire success to Malibran's powerful execution. Phillips sings the ballad above named very sweetly; it is the only piece in the opera, except the finale, that is encored. The poetry is wretched, and as a drama, The Maid of Artois is neither interesting nor well constructed.

LYCEUM.—We remember to have seen a very interesting comedy, called The Queen's Jewel, written by Mr. Collier, which was acted frequently last year at the Queen's Theatre; the new piece called the Queen and the Cardinal, played here on Monday evening, is taken from the same French piece, but with this difference, that former is a skilful adaptation, the latter a poor translation. The piece at this house is by no means so well acted as The Queen's Jewel was at the Queen's Theatre. The proprietors of the Strand Theatre should let Mrs. Nisbett shine out in full splendour in her original part of the Queen: it would show the public the difference between the two pieces. The amusing burletta of The Middy Ashore continues to attract, it is one of the most agreeable trifles produced this season; Mr. Keeley's acting in the part of the Middy is inimitable.

Literary Notices.

A Summer in Spain, being the Narrative of a Tour made in the Summer of 1835. Smith, Elder, and Co.

OUR author professes to give a faithful account of what passed under his own observation, during a residence of three months in Spain, but we are compelled to doubt the fidelity of some of his representations, from the decided party spirit that is discernible in every page. The tour comprises Barcelona to Valencia, thence to Madrid, Saragossa, the Pyrenees, and St. Sebastian. From his concluding remarks we take the following:—

"Perhaps I cannot pay a higher compliment to the people, than by saying that I saw fewer beggars in Spain than in any other continental country I have visited,—excepting France; and considering that the poor are supported merely by voluntary contributions, this circumstance says more perhaps for the independent character of the people, than anything else that could be said in their favour. Indeed, with all due deference to Mr. O'Connell, I believe the Spanish peasantry to be the finest in Europe. In outward appearance, they certainly are, for amongst them I have seen more handsome men than in any other class in Spain.—The Spanish nobility are poor, generally speaking, though a few of them still retain, what would even in England, be termed large revenues. The richest of them has an income, it is said, of 80,000*l*. per annum.—But the great want in Spain appears to be, that there is no middle class; where, in other countries, society has generally found its most useful members. This arises undoubtedly from the want of industry and intelligence,—the two elements which in free countries have formed that useful class, whose duty it is to hold the balance between anarchy and despotism. From the want of this wholesome check, the Spaniards are inclined to run into extremes, and ever will be, until by encouraging industry and commerce, spreading intelligence and wealth over the nation. If it is true that government ake men, and that the destinies of nations are frequently the hands of individuals,—the present Spanish minister rely holds a station of tremendous responsibility. Spain, re every other country in Europe, is at present divided to two great parties, the one wishing to go forward, the her to stand still. The movement party comprises all her ealthiest and most intelligent citizens, many of whom have ffered every thing but death for their principles. Of the her party I can say nothing from my own observation, as never heard any one in Spain speak in favour of Don arlos or his cause: but if we may judge of him by his mpanions,—Moreno, the executioner of Torrijos, and such ke men,—we may conclude that they are composed of ad-nturers who have little besides their lives to lose. The in-abitants of the insurgent provinces have, I believe, been solely misled, and will I have no doubt, be as basely be-trayed, whenever it shall suit the convenience or safety of e Pretender. The rest of the party is composed of all ose who are interested in upholding despotism,—the em-loyés of the late government, who have lost their places, e monks, the priests, and the priest-ridden. Indeed, it ould be difficult to name any man of acknowledged abili-es at present on the Pretender's side.—Such are the men ho have vainly attempted to conquer Spain,—I say, to nquer, because I consider, and I think every man of ense will agree with me, that as long as a child of Ferdi-and's is alive, Carlos has no more title to the throne of pain than he has to that of Japan. In all probability, owever, the war will be brought to a conclusion in the ourse of the ensuing summer. Ever since the death of mualacarregui, the Carlists appear to have been without a ad; their movements are isolated, and made, seemingly, thout a co-operation or design, and their credit is at the west ebb. Meanwhile, the Spanish government has gained l the advantages lost by its opponents; its credit is rapidly creasing, and its troops are augmented both in numbers d confidence. The British auxiliaries are now perfectly icipliced, and the new levies will be available by the com-mencement of summer. The united forces will form an my sufficient to subject and occupy the insurgent pro-nces: and though the Basques may make a vigorous re-tance, there can be no doubt as to the result. In the d, Don Carlos will probably throw himself, either upon e hospitality of the autocrat of Sardinia, or proceed to ome, where he may have the pleasure of attending mass th the ex-usurper of Portugal,—a most exemplary ob-rver of all such ceremonies.—The recent excesses com-tted at Barcelona, however they are to be regretted, are t too easily accounted for. The provocation received by e Catalans, on that occasion, was greater than what used the September massacres during the French revolu-n. One hundred and seventy of their fellow citizens had en murdered in a manner that is scarcely credible in mo-rn warfare*: and is it to be wondered at, that men thus xasperated took vengeance on their enemies?—Spain has t awoke from the slumber of three centuries. She finds l, since she sunk into sloth, her mighty possessions have llen one by one from her grasp,—that her wealth and ndeur are gone, and that from being the first of Euro-an nations she is now the last. Her first desire was for engeance on her enemies; but that has now subsided into ardent wish to follow the footsteps of France and Eng-nd, the only European nations worthy of her imitation. e has chosen her path, and from that, neither the arts of plomacy, nor the force of foreign bayonets can now turn r aside. Her path is, indeed, a rugged one, beset with fficulties and danger, and she has yet to learn, that free-m is acquired only by toil and danger, and maintained industry and courage: but there is a calm determination the character of her people, and when roused, a contempt hardships and death, which will carry her unharmed ough the storms that threaten her. Let those who wish ll to Spain remember her long-continued struggles for in-pendence, both ancient and modern, in which her indomi-e spirit ever prevailed: let them remember that she is w determined to be free, and that the first man of modern me has declared, "That for a people to be free, they have y to will it!"

Making due allowance for partizanship, we may gather m this little book information as to the present state Spain.

Wood Leighton; or, a Year in the Country. By Mary Howitt. 3 vols. R. Bentley.

is, we believe, is Mrs. Howitt's first prose work, less, indeed, as we suspect, some of the charming ts of "The Book of the Seasons" are to be attri-ed to her pen. "Wood Leighton" is a delightful k, formed partly of sketches and partly of tales, all which are redolent of the country. The rustic town ich she veils under her imaginary name, is, to use her n words, "a rare treasury of old narratives. There ot a cottage there without its pleasant or its sad little of human history; nor a grange nor hall but has ditions and memories lying thick about it as leaves in the woods of Valambrosa." We love the place for the manner in which she has consecrated it, and, now that the summer promises at last to visit us, would willingly make a pilgrimage thither, did we know in what sequestered part of our island its locality could be traced. Nothing can be fresher, truer, nor more abounding in minute detail, than her pictures of woodland scenery; and her narratives, while they powerfully arrest the attention of the reader, are characterised by that love of human nature, and that untiring faith in its redeeming qualities, which do such honour to the female heart. This, indeed, seems to brood over, and to hallow even those passages of her stories which deepen into fearful interest; for though the predominating qualities of her narratives are grace and sweetness, there are, ever and anon, pages of tragic strength. The story of "The Sinner's Grave" is altogether one of melancholy grandeur and most enthralling power, from the spell of which we awaken to be relieved and enchanted by the sylvan sketches of her "Summer Rambles." From this portion of Mrs. Howitt's present work, we cannot refrain from extracting the following delicious bit of painting, which will do more than our praises to recommend the volumes to universal attention.

"And the very next day to Croxden we went. It is about four miles from Wood Leighton, and the road to it leads through some of the most delightful woody scenery imaginable. We set out after breakfast, and strolled through fields, some mown, some with the fragrant hay lying about, and troops of merry people amongst it; others standing yet unmown, with all their flowery grass; and everywhere were trees—sweet, umbrageous trees. Around every field they grew, stretching their branches far over the sward, and dealing out bountiful shadows; and all before us was a sea of wood, terminated by the blue Weaver hills. Sometimes we came into deep, hidden lanes, where the damp coolness was delicious; and from the high banks hung ferns and polypodiums, and such like plants, and flowers that love the summer shade. Then we came to some beautiful stream, too large and too plentiful to be termed a brook, and yet not large enough to be dignified with the title of a river,—its just appellation being, I take it, that of rivulet. But be its style and title what it might, a most heavenly place it made where it ran; so far off from populous regions,—so still, so fresh, so sunny. Here it ran across our way; and a single plank ran across it, on which we stood and regarded its beauty. What, indeed, is there so beautiful, so refreshing to heart and mind, as such a stream in such a secluded, solitary, summer place? Over bright sand and pebbles it goes, rushing, and hurrying, and talking, a thousand little sweet voices together, from as many little ripples, like a crowd of eager children, borne on by some intense topic, through a populous city, which they see not through their own busy thoughts. Away it goes streaming in crystal clearness; and the leafy thickets and the humid flowers stoop in very love to its face, and the long grass floats on its surface from the banks. What a place for trout! And there they go, ever and anon, darting past like arrows from a bow, or rather like swift shadows through a clear sky. What a place for a poet to haunt; with his favourite book, and his own fair dreams and fancies!—to see the water flowing and flowing on; to see the sunshine playing on bank and stream and tree; to feel the breeze come in its pure delight; and yet to see and feel them not, but, as in a golden dream; to have the consciousness upon him that he was far from the working-day race and intrusions of the world; and to convert the amenities about him into parts of that fairy-land of love and beauty, and nobility of heart—of all that is dreamed of by poets, and lies far off in antiquity, as some Atalantis of a summer sea, or in a glorious future, the very millennium of the imagination. How delectable! But, having drunk of the fair stream, and sat on the end of the plank, and on the grass, and talked to our heart's content of a thousand things as unapproachable as our supposed poet could dream of, we went on,—on through meadows all overshadowed with wood, till in the valley rose, over the tops of the trees, the tall ruinous walls of Croxden Abbey."

Ryall's Portraits of Eminent Conservative Statesmen. Part I. Fraser, Regent-street.

We some weeks ago had occasion to notice favourably a specimen plate of a work under the above title. The first part of the work is now before us; and we have no hesitation in saying that it more than fulfils the expectations raised by the portrait which preceded it as a sort of avant courier. The first number contains three portraits,—that of the greatest Conservative of his day, the Duke of Wellington, with Lord Lyndhurst, and Lord Wharncliffe. As mere personal resemblances of the above distinguished men, we can speak of these portraits with almost unmingled commendation. In fact, there are no other such engraved likenesses of them extant. And as works of art, the portraits are of corresponding merit,—each of them being capable of bearing the most minute examination into the details of its execution, while its general effect is of the most striking and brilliant character. Upon the whole, this work will at once take its place at the very head of the class to which it belongs, and rank among the most successful pictorial speculations of the day.

DUKE OF GLOUCESTER'S SAUCE.—Warehouse, 199, Piccadilly. This Sauce, which from its unparalleled excellence has obtained such extensive patronage, is prepared only by C. W. LOPRESTI, many years Chief Cook to his late Royal Highness, but, in consequence of the numerous disappointments experienced from the substitution of spurious mixtures, purchasers are particularly CAUTIONED to observe that the genuine bears Lopresti's name, seal, and address. Also, Lopresti's Cayenne (Liquid), Pure Dissolved Anchovies for Fish (wholly superseding common "Essence"), and various other Sauces, Flavoured Vinegars, Piquant Seasonings, Wholesome Cookery Flavours, &c. LOPRESTI'S RECIPES for many excellent Dishes, price 1s., or Gratis in the 1l. Boxes of his Condiments, at 199, Piccadilly.

TROUSERS ON A NEW PRINCIPLE.—G. WALKER, 33, St. James's-street, has discovered an entirely new principle of cutting Trousers, and offers to furnish the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, for Ready Money, with this important article of dress, admirably adapted to the display of the figure, and at the same time affording such comfort in all exercises, as to insure the highest satisfaction to those who honour him with orders. If Art can give ornament to Nature—if anything can surpass her in the contour of a limb, it is when cloth is made elegantly to fit the same; then it may fairly be admitted that Art has added a charm even to Nature.—G. W. begs to add, that he continues to supply Uniforms for Officers of the Army and Navy, also Deputy Lieutenants' and Court Dresses, in the most tasteful style and at moderate charges.

BOUQUET du BOUDOIR.—E. PARKER the manufacturer of this new and exquisite perfume, respectfully thanks the Nobility and Gentry for the high honour they have been pleased to confer on him by pronouncing it to be the most delightful for the handkerchief now in use. Its intrinsic merits have at length obtained for it the favourable notice of the leaders of the fashionable world; its fragrance, at once the most delicate and lasting; its purity and elegance, leaving no stain, entitles it to a decided preference, either in the boudoir, assembly, or drawing-room.—To be had of the proprietor, at his establishment for foreign perfumery, No. 184, Piccadilly; of Messrs. Atkwell, James, and Co., Regent-street, and of every perfumer of consequence either in town or country, at 3s. 6d., 5s., and 10s. per bottle. Ask for Parker's Bouquet du Boudoir.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—Mr. HOWARD, Surgeon Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, continues to supply DEFICIENT TEETH, on his improved principle, at the same moderate terms, whether arising from neglect, diseases of the mouth, &c. (from a single Tooth to a complete set), without wounding the roots, or giving any pain, and in every case restores perfect articulation and mastication. An inspection of Mr. Howard's method will immediately convince those at all acquainted with the subject of its superiority.

Loose and decayed Teeth cured and effectually preserved from further decay.—At home from ten till five.

Delcroix's celebrated Esprit de Lavande aux Mille fleurs, for the pocket handkerchief.

Delcroix's Vegetable Extract, for cleansing and beautifying the hair.

Delcroix's Pommade Regenératrice, for the growth and preservation of the hair.

Delcroix's Aromatic Mecca, Almond, Rose, Camphor, and Vegetable Soaps.

Delcroix's much-esteemed Old Brown and White Windsor Soaps.

Delcroix's long approved Circassian Opiate, for preserving the teeth and gums from decay.

Delcroix's Crême de Sultanas, for softening and beautifying the complexion.

Delcroix's Genuine Russian Bears' Grease and Huiles Antique.

Messrs. D. and C. have recently obtained Injunctions from the Court of Chancery preventing certain parties from selling a spurious imitation of their Esprit de Lavande aux Milleflenrs and Vegetable Extract, both of which will in future bear their signature on the labels, and their address, 158, New Bond-street, on the back of the bottles.

SPARKLING CHAMPAGNE, in high Condition, and of excellent quality, may be had at the GRAY'S INN WINE ESTABLISHMENT, at 63s. per dozen, or in pints at 36s. per dozen—Cash on delivery. Country orders must contain remittances or orders for payment in London.
23, High Holborn. GEO. HENKKEY and Co.
NOTE.—Three dozen cases, 9l.—Six dozen cases, pints, 10l.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major-General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse, testifies:—

SIR,—I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your politeness in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,
St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.
To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain to afford instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals, also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Gouty Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored to its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undersigned, and 200 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of the Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Bayley, A. Middleton, C. London, D. Davies, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, F. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London bridge; and sold by him, wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 3s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each, and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba. (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN.
"46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM BENTSEN, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it [illegible] in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of: the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "WILLIAM BENTSEN.
"April 15, 1835."

Or any sizes containing from 3 feet to 8 feet, at 9s. per foot; the [illegible] a plate being 30 inches by 18 inches, contains three feet nine inches superficial measure, and costs £1. 13s. 6d. as per above tariff. All under three feet superficial at a reduction.

CARVING AND GILDING IN ALL ITS BRANCHES.

In this department will be found a very elegant and extensive variety of Chimney and Pier Glass Frames, Cornices for Windows, Ornamental Tables and Furniture, and richly mounted Frames in various sizes for Portraits, Paintings, &c. Paintings and Prints mounted, framed, and re-gilt.

PAPER HANGING, AND INTERIOR DECORATIONS in all its branches, from the most simple to the first style of elegance. A rich variety of new patterns on show.

IN THE UPHOLSTERY ARRANGEMENT, the greatest attention is paid to unite elegance with economy of character for the drawing-room, boudoir, dining-room, library, and bed-chambers, from the most quiet to the most costly style. In the various articles of chintzes, moreens, damasks, silks, &c. A great variety of the most splendid and novel styles are constantly on view of those qualities which can alone insure permanent satisfaction, the extreme disparity in prices in these articles mainly arises from the inferiority of the fabric.

CABINET, CHAIR, AND SOFA WORK manufactured of the most seasoned materials. In the finish Chairs, Sofas, &c., much depends on the quality of the material used, and the workmanship. It may not be unworthy of remark that a similar effect may be produced at a saving of nearly one half, but which in the wear must eventually prove a serious disappointment to the purchaser. This applies also to the manufacture of Cabinet Goods, which, from being made of unseasoned materials and unsound work (that cannot be detected by the casual observer), can never be of that service and durability so essential. H. L. C. begs to add that he manufactures them on his own premises, and has always on hand a large stock of well-seasoned materials, which enables him to produce work at the lowest possible sale and of a superior quality.

STEAM and SAILING VESSELS promptly fitted up with CABIN FURNITURE and PASSENGERS' REQUISITES.

SOLID and PORTABLE Furniture, Bedding, Mosquito Hangers, &c., for Foreign Climates. Families going abroad will receive every information respecting the articles best adapted for their particular destinations.

Merchants, Captains, and Dealers, supplied with the usual despatch, on the most liberal terms.

CARPETING of the fabric especially made for the first Upholstery Houses, viz. Brussels, Kidderminster, and Venetian; also a few of the most admired velvet Pile carpets, hearth rugs, druggets, baize, floor cloth, &c.

BEDDING, BLANKETS, &c. well-seasoned, real Dantzic feathers, also finally prepared Iceland downy feathers for second and third rate beds, elastic spring hair, and wool mattresses; real Witney, fine Bath, and Yorkshire blankets; Marseilles quilts and counterpanes. In the article of bedding, blankets, &c., so essentially important to all, H. L. C. is determined that no trader shall supply them on better terms.

FUNERALS FURNISHED, and conducted with the greatest propriety, and with every due attendant regard to economy.

Families in the country may command the most approved taste by being waited on at home with patterns; and designs made on the spot, calculated to harmonise with the plans, proportions, and decorations of the rooms; and their orders delivered [illegible] fixed-on terms forming a very small addition to the first cost, on the system adopted by this concern.

With this short enumeration of the leading articles of his trade, and the very favourable terms on which he undertakes to supply them, HENRY L. British College of Health, New Road, King's Cross.

WE have received the most gratifying intelligence from Exeter. Mr. Tothill, of the Royal College of Surgeons, who has for some time practised upon the principles of Hygeiaism, is daily witnessing the beneficial effects produced by the Universal Vegetable Medicine.

The following cases have been transmitted by Mr. Tothill, they have all occurred within a few days:—

I was a short time since consulted by Mr. Silvester Slocombe, of Paris Street, Exeter. He said he had been in an ill state of health for upwards of two years, and had been under various medical men for weeks and months at a time, during that period, finding no relief, he was induced to consult two physicians of that city; after trying their medicines, likewise without benefit, for many months; as they gave it as their opinion that he was in a decline, and that there was little hopes of his recovery, his friends requested me to prescribe for him; he complained of a violent pain in the right side, extending through the shoulder blade, he had great shortness of breath, accompanied with a distressing cough, and was so much weakened that he could scarcely walk; for nearly two years had vomited every thing soon after taking it. I immediately put him upon a course of the Universal Medicine, telling him to take five of No. 1 and 2, night and morning, and after continuing them for some days to increase the number to seven or eight every night.—After the lapse of one week, a most extraordinary improvement had taken place in him; the cough and the pain in the side had much subsided, and he was able to retain nourishment on the stomach. He continued his mode of treatment for near three weeks and he became quite restored to sound health; he has had no return of any of the complaints since, and is now become as stout and healthy a man as ever I saw. This person will be happy to answer any questions relative to this most wonderfully rapid recovery by any person applying at Mr. Bowden's, Paris Street, his brother-in-law.

I was sent for to visit Mrs. Coles, of Heavitree, who was in a very alarming state of illness, she complained of a violent pain in her side, with great shortness of breath, countenance much flushed, with a thick brown coat on the tongue, violent perspirations and a bad cough. The pulse beating at 130 in the minute, at the time she was nursing her infant, aged 3 months. I attribute her illness to getting cold after accouchement. To subdue all those alarming symptoms, I ordered her to take the Universal Medicines, taking 5 of No. 1 and No. 2 pills every night and morning, increasing the dose to 7 or 8; she continued taking those doses for a week, with astonishing benefit, and at the end of that time, all the unfavourable symptoms began to subside, and as she got better, the pills were reduced to 5 every night, which she continued till convalescent, which she was at the end of 14 days. She has continued quite well ever since, and is grown stout. The old mode of treating this case would have been by bleeding, blistering, antimonials, with saline draughts, &c. &c.

Mrs. E., of Exeter, requested me a little time since to prescribe for her infant, aged four months, which was suffering greatly from an eruptive disease; the neck, face, and head were so thickly covered with scabby sores, that the child was much disfigured and in great torments, caused by the irritation. I requested the mother to give the child three of the strong pills, reduced to powder, in a little milk and water, every night, which was done, and no effect was in making it sick and acting as a powerful laxative. The child continued this course for one fortnight, at the end of that period it became quite well, and has had no return of it. Since then the child has had the hooping cough, for the alleviation of which nothing whatever has been given it but the Universal Medicine, and only five of the strong pills reduced to powder every other, or every third night, which quite carried off the cough in less than three weeks. The child has a beautiful clear complexion, and is now in perfect health.

Mrs. A., of Heavitree, has within these few days been relating to me the state of illness a very old servant of the family had been in for upwards of three years; that she had been under the care of the most eminent medical practitioners of Plymouth, Exeter, and London, without deriving the least benefit whatever, her case being considered by them a hopeless one, and that she could not possibly survive longer than a few months. She was by her mistress (who had been in the habit of taking the Universal Medicines occasionally for six years) advised, as a last resource, to try them, which she did with the happiest effects, as by her taking a dose from five to seven pills every night at bed-time for two months, she was at the end of that period quite restored to sound health, and has never been ill since. She occasionally takes a few pills at night, when she requires medicine. I will not attempt to describe the nature of the complaint; it must have been a most complicated one, as it appears to have baffled the skill of the most eminent physicians, but the person herself will be most willing to give an account of her sufferings, and also as to the wonderful effects of Morison's Pills, by any one calling on me for her address.

Mrs. Payne, of Tedboure St. Mary, near Exeter, requested me to see her child, aged 18 months, which was suffering from a high kind of fever, with its tongue and gums in a state of deep ulceration (commonly called cancer); I ordered it five of the strong pills every night, reduced to powder, mixed in a little milk and water. After taking two or three doses the fever had quite left, the ulcerations were healed, and the child became well.

A few weeks since I was sent for to see W. Bowden's child, of Paris-street, Exeter, aged two years (which was suffering from a highly bilious fever); I ordered it five of the strong pills every 2 hours, and as the fever subsided, the quantity was reduced to five every night; these doses were continued according to the directions, and the child soon got well, and has continued so ever since.

I have been attending two children of Mr. Thomas's, cheesemonger, Heavitree, who have been suffering from influenza—one died with the other seven; these children have been taking every night from five to seven pills, and are now quite well.

NORTON'S truly valuable CAMOMILE PILLS, for INDIGESTION, &c.—These Pills are a pure extract of Camomile Flowers, prepared by a peculiar process, by which all the medicinal properties of rather more than one ounce of the flowers, are concentrated into four moderate sized Pills; they are mild in operation, and have proved wonderfully successful in removing every symptom of indigestion, sick headach, loss of appetite, giddiness, heartburn, costiveness, eruptions of the skin, and all complaints arising from a disordered state of the digestive organs; they require no alteration of diet, and their operation will be found so beneficial in giving tone to the stomach, regulating the bowels, and in promoting a healthy habit, as fully to convince all who take them of their great utility.

Persons who have suffered from indigestion for several years, have by their use in a few weeks perfectly recovered, which is a convincing proof, that in the smallest compass, is contained the largest quantity of the tonic principle of so peculiar a nature, as to pervade the whole system, through which it diffuses health and strength.

Sold wholesale by Barclay and Sons; T. Butler, E. Edwards; F. Newberry and Sons; W. Sutton and Co., and A. Willoughby and Co. (late B. Godfrey Windus), 61, Bishopsgate-street Without, London; and retail by nearly all respectable Medicine Venders.

Be particular to ask for "NORTON'S PILLS," for in consequence of their great success some unprincipled persons have prepared a spurious imitation.

HEALTH, BEAUTY, and LONG LIFE.—An eminent medical writer has remarked, and experience has proved the fact beyond dispute, that those who are attentive to keeping the Stomach and Bowels in proper order, preserve health, prevent disease, and generally attain robust, cheerful, and healthy Old Age. For that truly desirable purpose are particularly adapted, being prepared with the Sulphate of Quioine, Extract of Chamomile Flowers, and the most choice stomachic and aperient drugs of the Materia Medica.

They have in all cases proved superior to every other medicine in the cure of Stomach and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Sick Head ache, Pain and Oppression after Meals, Habitual Costiveness, Flatulence, Shortness of Breath, Stomach Coughs, Spasms, Worms, and Fits in Children and Grown Persons, and all Disorders incident to the Stomach and Bowels. They are also truly efficacious in the cure of Colds, Agues, Asthmas, Rheumatism, Gout, Jaundice, Dropsy, and Gravel, and as an excellent restorative after any excess or too free indulgence at table, as they gently cleanse the bowels, strengthen the stomach, sweeten the breath, cheer the spirits, brace the nerves, induce a healthy action of the liver, improve digestion, and invigorate the whole system. Females who value good health and personal appearance, should never be without them, as they purify the blood, remove obstructions, pimples, cutaneous eruptions, sallowness, &c., and give the skin a beautiful, clear, healthy, and blooming appearance. Persons of a plethoric habit who are subject to head-ache, fits, giddiness, dimness of sight, or drowsiness, singing noise in the ears, which indicate too great a flow of blood to the head, should be particular to take them frequently. They are so mild and gentle in their action that children and persons of all ages may take them at any time, as they do not contain mercury or any ingredient that requires confinement or restriction of diet. Many healthy aged individuals, several of them highly distinguished Members of the Royal College, who know their value, make it a rule to take them two or three times a week, by which they remove the causes that produce disease, preserve their health, and keep off the infirmities of age, retaining, in a surprising degree, all the energy, vigour, vivacity, and cheerfulness of their youthful days. They should be kept in every family as a remedy in case of sudden illness, for, by their prompt administration, cholera morbus, cramps, spasms, fevers, apoplexy, and other alarming complaints, which too often prove fatal, may be speedily cured or prevented. Numerous patients, whose cases had been considered hopeless, have been restored to sound health by them. This can be proved by the testimony of thousands, and shown by letters from numerous patients who have benefited by their unrivalled efficacy. To describe all their excellent properties, and the cures they have performed, would fill volumes, and exceed credibility: in fact, there is scarcely any disease to which the human frame is subject that they will not either prevent or cure, and none in which they can possibly do harm.

Prepared only by J. W. STIRLING, Chemist, 85, High Street, Whitechapel, in Boxes at 13½*d*., 2*s*. 9*d*., 4*s*. 6*d*., and 11*s*. each, and may be had of all the principal Medicine Venders in the kingdom.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different variations of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO., Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 63, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept inviolate upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilised countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outvralling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found undeviatingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess (as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury; and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3*s*. 6*d*., 6*s*. 6*d*., and in pint bottles, with glass stoppers, 12*s*. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Bouilli, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sams, Howis, Mortl, Piccadilly; Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin;—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

PROSPECTUS OF THE DEPOSIT & LOAN BANK COMPANY.—CAPITAL, £500,000, With power to increase the same, if necessary.

In 100,000 Shares of 5*l.* each. Deposit 1*l.* per Share. The remaining 4*l.* to be paid in two instalments, namely, 2*l.* per share at each call, of which two months' notice shall be given.

Office, pro tem., No. 89, Essex Street, Strand.

Secretary, Mr. W. MONTAGUE.

THE object of this Company is to afford the means of immediate pecuniary assistance to every one (of whatever station in life) who will deposit satisfactory security, in goods or otherwise, for the repayment of the Sums advanced, with equitable remuneration for the same, during such period as the loan may be required.

The extensive business transacted by those already engaged in lending money on deposits, and their immense profits, are of themselves sufficient reasons for the establishment of a Deposit and Loan Bank; but pecuniary facilities, such as this Company will be enabled to afford to every class of Society, by means of their large Capital and resources, are not at present attainable through the ordinary channels of deposit and loan.

It is intended that the laws, enacted for the regulation of those persons who are already occupied in similar pursuits, shall be scrupulously observed by this Company.

The abrogation or partial repeal of the Usury Laws, recognises the principle that "those who lend money are entitled to an equitable remuneration;" and the Company will avail itself of the advantages to be derived by a fair, just, and honourable observance of this principle.

The business of the Deposit and Loan Bank will be divided into several departments—all of them to be conducted on such a liberal scale, as will be consistent with the accommodation of the public generally, and the protection of the interests of the Shareholders.

Among the advantages to the Shareholders, it is intended that every one holding five or more Shares may make deposits of money at any time with the Company (agreeably to a scale hereafter to be determined), for which he shall be entitled to, and shall receive as interest thereon, 5*l.* per cent. per annum. And such Shareholders (holding two or more shares) who require pecuniary accommodation, shall always be entitled thereto, and shall not be called upon for a higher rate of interest than 7½ per cent. per annum, upon any loan they may obtain by the deposit of their goods, &c., as security.

Arrangements are making to extend to the Provinces the benefits offered by this Company, Branches of which will be established in most of the principal Towns throughout the Empire.

Applications for Shares to be addressed (post paid) to the Secretary.

A second Prospectus will be ready for delivery in a few days.

W. MONTAGUE, Secretary.

LONDON and PORTSMOUTH RAILWAY DIRECT, with a Branch to CHICHESTER and BOGNOR, terminating in capacious DOCKS at PORTSMOUTH.

CAPITAL—1,200,000*l.*, in 24,000 Shares of 50*l.* each.—Deposit 2*l.* per Share.

The Provisional Committee are proceeding with the necessary arrangements connected with the Branch advertised to Chichester, and an active survey of the line is being prosecuted for carrying into effect the original intention of this Company for constructing the intended Railway between LONDON and PORTSMOUTH by the most DIRECT and practicable line, as they have throughout acted under the conviction that any other, or more circuitous line must only entail on the passengers and transit of goods between those places additional cost of conveyance in proportion to the extra length adopted, without any corresponding benefit being derived.

The promoters of, and the Provisional Committee of Management of this undertaking, abstain from fully publishing the measure until the result of the surveys will enable them to lay the exact route of the main line itself, and of the respective branches in detail before the public, so that efficient means of investigation may be afforded, which can alone secure public support and the sanction of the legislature.

The proposed direct line, which will pass through Guildford and [illegible] was submitted to the attention of a Public Meeting held [illegible] ort on the 26th inst., at which the Mayor, Jno. SHALLCROSS, [illegible] presided; when a Committee of the Inhabitants of [illegible] was appointed to take into consideration the best [illegible] of [illegible] Guildford and Godalming the advantages [illegible] modes of [illegible] connection.

Any [illegible] required, may in the meantime be obtained at the Offices of the Company, No. 7, John-street, Adelphi, where applications for Shares will be received (if by letter, post paid), and also to the Company's Agent at Portsmouth J. N. Robinson, or at Portsea, to Archibald Low, Esq., Solicitor.

J. MILLER, Secretary.

LONDON, SHOREHAM, & BRIGHTON RAILWAY.

WITHOUT A TUNNEL.

The Provisional Committee feel it to be their duty to the Shareholders to guard them against the operation of repeated industriously spread by interested parties prejudicial to this undertaking, and to repeat the observations made by Counsel in the Parliamentary Committee, "That an affirmative vote upon the Kingston question proposed by one only of the numerous resolutions passed by the Select Committee of the House of Commons on Railway Bills, is not the carrying of a Bill for a Brighton Railway." And the Provisional Committee feel satisfied that no Railway devoted principally to Passengers can ultimately receive contrary legislative sanction with the nuisance of tunnels, while there is even one line without that annoyance, and knowing further that many Members of the House of Commons are decidedly hostile to a Railway that has a tunnel, the Provisional Committee redeem their pledge to the Shareholders, that no exertions shall be wanting on their part to further the completion of the undertaking, and to state to Parliament the strong and just grounds they have for the sanction and preference of the House.

By order of the Provisional Committee,

J. C. FOURDRINIER, Secretary.

THE TEETH.

MR. A. JONES, SURGEON-DENTIST to H. R. H. the Princess AUGUSTA, and the Duchess of GLOUCESTER, has at length discovered a method for fixing Artificial Teeth, which cannot fail to give entire satisfaction to the wearer. This skilful construction combines security and ease with the most efficient power for every requisite of mastication and articulation, also adding support to any loose teeth; neither wires nor springs are used. This plan claims attention and has already secured the recommendation of the most eminent physicians and surgeons, to whom reference may be made. The Adhesive Cement, known only to Mr. A. JONES, preserves for many years tender and decayed teeth, allaying the pain and restoring their use.—61, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square, at home from 11 until 5. Mr. Jones is totally unconnected with any other Dentist in London.

PORTSMOUTH, June 10.—(From our own Correspondent.) Sunday, June 5, Larne, Commander Smith, arrived from Bermuda, sailed from thence 5th May, in company with H.M.S. President. Athell, troop ship, Mr. A. Karley, master, from St. Helena; left that island on the 15th Apr. with the remainder of the St. Helena garrison, consisting of 80 Infantry and 70 Artillery, including 7 officers. Their wives and children have also been brought to England in the Athall, and muster upwards of 150. The Athall sailed with them on Tuesday to Chatham. Rear-Admiral Sir P. Campbell, in the Thalia, was at the Cape on the 28th March all well, had been to Ascension. The Thalia was to complete her provisions and water, and sail for a four months' cruise without the flag, and visit the different stations, St. Helena, Ascension, Prince's Island, Acra, Fernando Po, and the Bights, would return to the Cape in August. Pelican was refitting at the Cape. Lynx had captured a schooner with 387 slaves on board, making her sixth prize and 2563 slaves. Monday, June 6. President, Captain Scott, with the flag of Vice-Admiral the Right Hon. Sir G. Cockburn, came up to Spithead; she encountered heavy easterly gales, and run into Bantry Bay, and remained there two days. Sir G. Cockburn, after paying his respects to the Port Admiral, proceeded to London, his flag was struck at sunset. Lieut. Ussher invalided from the Skipjack; Lieut. Powell to rejoin the Conway (on her passage home), and the officers and crew of H.M.'s late schooner Pike lost on the Island of Jamaica came passengers. A Court-Martial was held at Bermuda on Lieut. Brooking and his officers, Capt.-Superintendent Sir Thos. Ussher, C.B.K.C.H., President, to enquire into the circumstances attending the loss of this vessel, and the result has been, that Lieut. Brooking has been dismissed from the service; Mr. Michell, mate, and Mr. Stokes, Master's Assistant, also dismissed; but the former ordered to be imprisoned in the Marshalsea; the remainder acquitted. Tuesday, June 7. President and Larne went into harbour to be paid off. Athell sailed to Chatham. Bonetta went to the westward. Emerald, tender, returned from Killybegs with eleven seamen for the squadron. Beacon paid off and recommissioned by Lieutenant Hope; Commander Copeland is expected to rejoin her at Malta. Thursday Buffalo bauled out of the Basin will be ready to sail on the 27th inst. Friday. Madagascar commissioned by Captain Sir J. S. Peyton; she is to relieve the Forte in the West Indies. Ships in port.—Vanguard, Bellerophon, Pembroke, Moira and Stakesby, transports at Spithead; Britannia, President, Madagascar, Excellent, Royal George Yacht, Buffalo, Larne, Beacon, Seaflower, Cracker, Emerald, Maitland and Katherine Stewart Forbes, transports, in harbour.

MILFORD HAVEN, 1st June, 1836.—(From our own Correspondent, but received too late for last week).—The anniversary of his most gracious Majesty's birth-day was welcomed at this port on Saturday last with every possible demonstration of loyalty and affection. The standard of England was seen floating aloft at more than one of the Government stations, and the Royal Sovereign yacht at the Dock-yard was decorated with flags of all hues, and ranged in a most tasteful manner. At 12 o'clock the guns at Pembroke Fort fired a royal salute, under direction of Serjeant Wild, Rl. Art., and just at the same period the detachment of Rl. Marines at Pembroke, drawn out on the heights under command of Maj. Bailie, fired a feu de joie, which was followed by three hearty cheers for his Majesty and one cheer more. The day being remarkably propitious this fine body of men afterwards went through a number of evolutions, which for firmness and precision obtained from the Major Commander an unqualified meed of praise. The Carysfort, 26 gun frigate, another of Surveyor Seppings' constructions, will be launched from Pembroke yard on the 13th of the present month. A large steam frigate and the first of her class, is ordered to be laid down at Pembroke. She is to be upwards of 1100 tons, and to carry 6 guns between decks, in addition to the two long guns and swivels as usual on the upper deck. The Yeomanry of this county, called the "Castle Martin Yeomanry," are to be called out to do permanent duty in the neighbourhood of Pembroke the latter end of next month. The Lord Lieutenant of the county, Sir John Owen, Bart., has just informed the commanding officer that they are to be inspected on the 4th of August. The Sky Lark, tender, cutter, was the only King's ship in port down here on the 28th, but she did not fire on the occasion, I mean the birth-day.

The eight sail of the line at the Nore, Spithead, and Plymouth Sound, are now ready for sea, but they require a few more men to render them effective for hostile operations. The Vanguard, about which so much has been said, is certainly a noble looking ship, but would be improved in appearance by a little more length; she has on board 384 tons of water, though it is intended she should only carry 350 tons, has all her stores on board, with provisions for four months, the bread in bags, and her bread-room would take 500 more bags without starting; her draught of water is 23ft. 1 in. aft, and 22ft. 11in. forward; her after lower-deck port is 8 feet, her midship 7 feet, and her foremost 8 feet 6 inches out of the water. Whether this was her proper mined immersion is not known.—Hampshire Telegraph.

[We are glad to find our respected contemporary making the amende honorable. The estimated immersion of the Vanguard is 23 feet forward, 24 feet aft, and when her powder is on board she will float very near this line. For foreign service, with 6 months stores, provisions, and water, 3 months bread and spirits, she would be about 6 inches deeper. We trust to be able to give all the particulars we have promised relating to the 80-gun ships next week.—Ed.]

Beagle, surv. ves., Com. Fitzroy, was at New Zealand on her way to England, on 30th Dec. last.

The Col. Commandant of Royal Marines, Sir John Lovage, made his first half-yearly inspection of that Corps on Tuesday, commencing at Woolwich. Sir John will inspect Portsmouth division on Monday.

The following English men-of-war were at St. Sebastian's 20th May, when the Messenger came away:—Phœnix, Com. Henderson, with the broad pendant of Commodore Lord John Hay; Salamander st., Lieut. Duffill; Castor st., Lieut. Otway; Tweed, 20, Com. Maitland; Royalist, 10, Lieut. Barlow; Viper sch., 10, Lieut. Robinson; Alonzo trans., Waters, Master, the victualling depot, 120 marines and seamen. Commodore Henry has also armed steamers with him, manned with Englishmen, but carrying the Queen of Spain's colours.

Vice-Admiral Sir Charles Fleming is to be appointed to the government of Malta, and Sir Robert Otway will succeed Sir Charles at Sheerness.

The Dido, a splendid corvette, of the new class, 730 tons by measure, and 725 tons displacement, is ordered to be launched at Pembroke in the course of next week. She will be commissioned immediately at Sheerness.

The Harlequin is fitting at Sheerness for commission, and will be ready in about a fortnight.

The Bellerophon appears very crank, with the least breeze, or even the shifting of a gun, she shows an evident heel. Vanguard is as stiffes a church.

The Inconstant will be launched on the 16th, and immediately commissioned by Capt. Hayes.

The Volcano st.-v. (same as Hermes), will be launched at Portsmouth 30th inst.

Gorgon st.-v., of the first class, 1080 tons, is ordered to be built at Pembroke, of teak timber, forthwith.

Dolphin brigantine, at Sheerness, will be launched on the 14th inst. She will be fitted similar to Bonetta, for the coast of Africa.

Among many articles preparing for the diet and comfort of the crew of the Terror discovery ship, about to sail for the Arctic Sea, is beef called "Pinnikin Beef," which is preparing at Deptford Victualling-yard in the following manner; the hinder joints of beef are disincumbered of all veins and skin, and then dried and ground to powder in a mill, then mixed up with spices (no salt) and suet, and put into boxes for use. There is nothing that can in any way contribute to the health, comfort, and amusement omitted towards the officers and crew of the above vessel.

The Vivid is taken up as a freight ship at Deptford, for the Mediterranean. The Captain Cook has sailed from Deptford for New South Wales, and the Lady Nugent is taken up for convict service.

Monday morning arrived at Spithead Vice-Admiral the Right Hon. Sir George Cockburn, G.C.B., in the President frigate, Captain James Scott, having been relieved as the Commander-in-Chief on the West India station by Vice-Admiral Sir Peter Halkett, K.C.B., who arrived at Bermuda from Madeira, after a very boisterous passage, on the 2nd May in the Melville, 74, Captain Peter Douglas. The fever, which had so fatally prevailed among some of the ships' crews, had quite subsided, and the squadron was employed as follows:—Melville flag-ship, Rainbow, 26, Wasp, 16, with the surveying vessel Thunder, were at Bermuda; Commodore Peil (second in command on the station) had proceeded to Vera Cruz and Tampico in the Forte frigate. Belvidera, 46, Racehorse, 16, Savage brig, with the Snake sloop, were on particular service at Para. Comus, 16, Cruiser, 16, and Gannet, 18, were at Jamaica. The Dee, Columbia, Flamer, and Meteor, steam-vessels, were employed to and between the several islands, conveying the mails, &c.

It will be seen, by reference to our Naval Appointments, that the Madagascar, 46, and the Imogine, 28, have been commissioned this week.

The following Mates and Midshipmen passed for Lieutenents at the Naval College on Tuesday and Wednesday:—Mr. Charles Joseph Frederick Ewart, Pembroke; Edward Halkeil Beauchamp Procter, late Favourite; David Hope Stenhouse, George Manley Alldridge, Beacon; F. William Plydell Bouverie, William Durham Lysler, Vanguard; Edward Hughes Alsmn, Talavera; Mr. Erasmus Galton, Confiance; Robert Reed, Talavera; Paul Wellington Gibson Britannia; William Henry Webb, Larne; Cuspatilck Baillie Hamilton, Canopus; Messrs. George Rhodes Wolrige, Hawkins Godolphin Ayscough, Charles Rich. Mercoura, James Horsford Cockburn, Henry Gordon Veitch, President.

VALPARAISO, 28th Jen.—The Blonde is hourly expected from the coast; also H.M.S. Sparrowhawk to sail shortly for Rio Janeiro and England.

H.M.S. Racehorse passed through the Gut of Canso on the 20th April for the Magdalen Islands. The Gulph of St. Lawrence was reported clear of ice on the 6th ult.

The Osprey sloop, from Santander, arrived at Portsmouth, on Saturday night. She landed two Officers of the Legion; had not any other intelligence than what is now generally known, i. e., Cordova having gone to Madrid.

Wreck of the Hine.—(From the Hobart Town Courier, 1st Jan., 1836.) Intelligence was received on Sunday morning, that the ship Hine, Capt. Luscombe, with male prisoners from Ireland, was on shore at Jervis' Bay. Despatches were at the same time received from the Governor, at the Brigade-office, directing that H.M.'s brig Zebra and the revenue cutter should be despatched to the assistance of those on board. The steamer Tamar was also despatched to the same destination, whence she returned yesterday morning with the guard and 100 prisoners. The Hine got aground on a sandback a little below Jervis' Bay. Only one life was lost (the boatswain we believe.) The remainder of the prisoners are on board the Zebra and revenue cutter. The Hine had on board 40,000*l.* in specie, which has been saved. The vessel is embedded six or seven feet in the sand. It is expected she may be got off.

2d Dragoons—1 troop, 35 r. and f., moved from Dundalk on the 6th.

3d Lt. Drags.—1 Off., 1 Serj., and 20 r. and f., moved from Cork to Middleton on 5th.

7th Hussars—The officers have their annual dinner at the Clarendon on Thursday next.

INFANTRY.

1st Foot, 2d Bn.—Major Warde proceeded from Cork to Middleton on 5th. Orders have been received for the embarkation at Cork of the Service cos., for Canada, on board the Maitland. (See a correspondent's letter in this day's paper.)

2d—Lieut. Stirling has replaced Lieut. Pitta as recruiting officer at Perth.

7th—Viscount Raoelagh has returned from a tour in Spain. His Lordship visited the head-quarters of Don Carlos, and also those of General Evans and General Cordova.

9th—was to embark at Calcutta for Chinsurah on 25th Jan.

15th depot—Hd.-qrs. removed from Armagh on 6th, to arrive at Galway on 17th.

19th depot—moved from Tullamore on 6th, to arrive at Nenagh on 9th. 1 comp., 2 Off., 2 Serj., and 40 r. and f., to arrive at Killaloe on 10th.

22d depot—was to reach Liverpool yesterday.

43d depot—moved from Buttevant on 5th, to arrive at Cork on 7th.

YEOMANRY.—The Martock troop of Somerset Yeomanry Cavalry, commanded by Capt. Tatchell, were inspected on Ham Hill, near Ilchester, on Friday, 2nd June, by Colonel Sir Charles O'Donnell. After the inspection, Mrs. Quantock, the lady of Capt. Quantock, of Norton, presented the troop with a very handsome Standard, embroidered with her own hands. The Dorchester Yeomanry, under the command of Colonel Frampton, underwent their inspection by Colonel Chatterton, K. H., of the 4th Dragoon Guards, in the vicinity of Dorchester, on the 3rd of June. The officers of the 4th Dragoon Guards dined afterwards with the officers of the Yeomanry; and a grand ball was given in the evening, at which both officers and gentlemen of the Yeomanry with many of the county families attended. The West Somerset Yeomanry, commanded by Colonel Tynte, were inspected by Colonel Chatterton, K.H., about four miles from Bridgewater, on the 7th Inst. This corps, consisting of eight troops, went through a variety of movements, which would do credit to any regiment of Cavalry, and received from the Inspecting Officer the highest praise. The officers with Colonel Chatterton and several strangers afterwards dined together at Bridgewater, where, in the evening a ball was held, at which they attended.

On Wednesday Lieut.-Col. Parker, R.I. Artillery, on the part of the Master-General of the Ordnance, waited on the Prince of Orange, to request the honour of the Prince and his sons at an inspection of the Gentlemen Cadets at Woolwich on the 17th inst., when a number of interesting scientific experiments will be made, after which there will be a grand dejeuné at the mess-room to his Royal Highness. The Prince accepted the invitation.

Colonel Shaw Kennedy has assumed the management of the Irish constabulary department, Dublin Castle.

On Thursday, General Lord Hill, as Commander-in-Chief, held a levee at his office in the Horse Guards, which was attended by Geo. Gascoyne, Lord Cork, Lord Byron, Admiral Southeron, Lieut.-Gen. Buller, Lieut.-Gen. Balfour, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Evan Lloyd, Lieut.-Gen. Sir T. Molyneux, Major-Gen. Sir D. Gilmore, Major-Gen. Sir T. Reynell, Major-Gen. A. Campbell, Major-Gen. Nesbitt, Major-Gen. Sir F. Mulcaster, Major-Gen. Sir A. Broke, and others.

The following is the distribution of the troops at present in the West Indies:—14th reg., St. Kitt's—detachments at Tortola and Nevis; 19th, Barbadoes; 36th, St. Lucia and Dominica—detachments at Pigeon Island; 65th, St. Vincent's; 67th, Demerara—two cos. at Berbice; 69th, Demerara; 74th, Antigua—detachments at Montserrat; 78th, Grenada—left wing at Barbadoes; 86th, Barbadoes; 89th, Trinidad—two cos. at Tobago; 1st W. I. reg., Trinidad, —detachments through the West Indies.

East India Intelligence.

By a recent regulation of the Court of Directors, an officer, after serving three years in India, and producing requisite evidence to prove that he was incapacitated from further service by loss of health or wounds in that country, will be allowed to retire on the half-pay of his rank.

We have received an account of a tremendous hurricane off the north of the Mauritius, by which the Coromandel was greatly damaged, but has since arrived safe at Calcutta. The Canton, Liverpool to Bombay, after having been out 145 days, was met by the Duke of Argyll in 1 N. long., under jury-masts, and had sustained considerable damage during the hurricane. Fears are entertained for the safety of many vessels in that latitude. The town and harbour of Port Louis have sustained considerable damage, the buoys having been torn up, the light-vessels driven on shore, and nearly every ship in the Roads suffered severely.

The duty on pice, or unwrought copper, imported into the Company's territories, which was imposed in the early part of last year, has been remitted by an order of the Government of 5th Jan. The object nf this nboxious duty was to prevent the influx of native pice, which was so great as entirely to occupy the market, to tho exclusion of Company's pice, the introduction of which was the object of our government.—Agra Ukhbar, Jan. 16.

MILITARY PUNISHMENTS.

Remarks on the Assertions made by the Duke of Wellington, in the English Parliament, upon the Discipline of the Prussian and English Armies, by General Von Grollman.

THE honour of the Prussian army being nearly affected by the assertions of the Duke of Wellington, which are in many respects exceedingly erroneous, it appears to us highly necessary that they should be examined and disproved.

The first mistake which we find concerns the strength of the Prussian army, which the Duke has stated at 150,000 men. Now, it is difficult to conceive how such an error could take place, since the Duke was in possession of the most exact communications from the Prussian army; the four corps on the 15th June consisted of 116,466 men. Even if the body of North German Confederation troops, at that time assembled on the Moselle, and in the neighbourhood of Luxemburg, had been included, they could only have amounted to 138,953 men. It cannot, however, be unknown to the Duke of Wellington that this corps, not yet complete, and at a distance of 20 (German) miles from the scene of action, did not take, nay, could not possibly have taken, part in the battles of the Netherlands or the march to Paris.

When at the battle of Ligny, after an obstinate struggle of seven hours, the enemy succeeded, towards night, in penetrating into the centre, between Sombreuf and Ligny, and by that movement threatened the left wing and the rear of the 1st and 2d corps, which had been engaged in the above-mentioned tedious and difficult village fighting, they fell back on the Bry, without so much as a single tirailleur being taken by the enemy, although the troops returning from Ligny were continually attacked by the enemy's cavalry. Both corps had received orders to retreat, not by the previous line of march, by the high road to Namur, or the Roman road to Liege, but by ordinary field paths, to Wavre. This command was punctually executed, and the troops bivouacked near Tilly and Meliereux, whilst seven battalions, under Gen. Von Jagow, remained in and near Bry in full sight of the enemy, and began their retreat in perfect tranquillity after midnight.

It may be left to the judgment of every experienced officer whether an army effecting all this could justly be accused of want of discipline. We may, on our parts, be permitted to ask whether the Duke of Wellington would have ventured, had the battle of Waterloo been lost, to conduct his army back by the road of Hall or Louvens instead of that of Brussels?

Napoleon was not able to effect a retreat by the high road to Nivelles, which yet would have saved a great part of his artillery, and prevented the entire dispersion of his army; he was forced to yield to the current of flying soldiery which hurried him back against his will by the road by which he had come.

One circumstance, however, must in justice be mentioned which may well cast a slur on the discipline of the Prussian army. Some thousands of healthy unwounded soldiers deserted from their regiments during the battle and fled to the Maas and the Rhine. In order to explain this, it will be necessary to cast a glance at the situation of the Prussian States at that time. After the termination of the campaign of 1814, the greater part of the regiments of the line remained in the countries between the Maas, the Moselle, and the Rhine. Not only were these regiments, after two bloody campaigns, necessarily incomplete, but their volunteers had been dismissed, and the militia had returned into their respective provinces. During the session of the Congress at Vienna no fresh troops were drawn; even the depots were not completed, and as the decisions of the Congress were every moment expected, all restoration to order was delayed till the return to their native provinces.

On the return of Napoleon, these defects were to be supplied in the greatest hurry. All the troops from the depots in Old Prussia were put in motion, and 8000 recruits were raised from the provinces between the Maas and the Rhine, and distributed among the weakest regiments. In the district of Berg also considerable levies were made to complete the two regiments of this province and to form six battalions. The deserters were from these new levies, and from the two militia regiments of Westphalia, which did not belong to the old Prussian dominions. Even these men, however, must not be too severely judged. The long unsettled situation of these provinces could not have awakened either confidence or attachment, and in the course of a few days they found themselves belonging to a new country, owing a new allegiance, subject to a new organization and fresh levies, which had not joined the army above six or eight weeks before hostilities began. It was not, therefore, to any want of discipline in the Prussian army, but to the impossibility of this discipline taking root in so short a time, that the fault is to be attributed.

When, on the evening of the battle of La Belle Alliance, the two Generals met to discuss their further proceedings, the Duke of Wellington declared himself unable to pursue the enemy during the night, and stated the necessity he was under of returning to the camp for the refreshment of the troops and their restoration to discipline.

The Prussian army therefore undertook the pursuit, in order to complete the victory, and produce that result which conducted the allies to Paris. The pursuit was followed as far as Gemeppe by the entire Prussian army, but here, the road being choked by thousands of vehicles, the great body of the army was detained, and only a small number of men under General Von Gneisenau, who had forced their way through Gemappe, followed the enemy until break of day; and, before reaching Frasnes, drove them from seven different points where they had attempted to bivouac, and completed the dispersion of the French army. After clearing Gemappe (an operation which consumed four hours), the two Prussian corps were again put in motion, and by 1 o'clock in the day the first had reached Charleroi (five German miles from the field of battle), and the second Fontaine l'Evêque.

In the subsequent advance upon Paris, the Prussian army was obliged to halt a day and a half at Chatillon-sur-Sambre, in order to give the English time to come up. By this delay the body of the enemy's troops, under Grouchy, and those assembled at Soissons, were enabled to reach Paris, although by the circuitous route of Meaux. The advanced guard alone of the first corps of Prussians reached Villers Coterets and Naoleuil at the time when the enemy was defiling through. The French lost, indeed, 13 cannon, and many prisoners, but could not be entirely stopped. Had not the delay at Chatillon-sur-Sambre taken place, the whole army of the Prussians would have been on the ground, and the retreat to Paris would have become impossible to the French army, which must have fallen back on Chalons and Epernay, or at best on Chateau-Thierry, behind the Marne. Which discipline now, we ask, is to be considered the better—that which admits only of slowly-ordered movements, or that which adapts itself to all circumstances, and allows of the improvement of every fortunate accident?

On the advance of the Prussian army into France, the second corps, which was, on the breaking out of hostilities, 31,529 men strong, with the body of the North German Confederation troops, was left behind on the frontier, to take possession of the fortresses from the Sambre to the Moselle, and render secure the operations in the interior of France. Of the three corps entering France, two battalions were left as a garrison in the fortresses of Avesnes and Guise, a detachment of wearied and unshod troops (Maroden und Unbeschuhten) remained in St. Quentin, one battalion and two squadrons of horse blockaded La Fere, and a detachment similarly situated to that in St. Quentin remained in Compiegne. Besides these, a regiment of cavalry was sent to Rethel, to endeavour to effect a junction with the Bavarians; a second towards Laon, to observe the rallying of the defeated French army; and subsequently a third to Meaux, to open a communication with the main body of the army, and obtain intelligence from it. After drawing off these troops, the Prussian army arrived at Gonnesse, before Paris, with 62,445 men. At the breaking out of hostilities, these three corps consisted of 84,937 men.

The army under the Duke of Wellington consisted, according to his own statement, at the commencement of hostilities, of 90,000 men; the official accounts, however, make it 99,875; 17,000 were left in the frontier fortresses under the command of Prince Frederick of Orange, and about 50,000 men reached Paris.

If these numbers are compared, it will appear difficult to understand how the Duke of Wellington could draw from them conclusions so injurious to the discipline of the Prussian army, and it appears evident that he has fallen into some leading error.

Just as difficult is it to understand the reproach that the Prussian army could not have existed on account of the want of discipline, and must therefore have decided on a retrograde movement. To show the untenable nature of this assertion, it will be necessary to inquire a little closer into the means of provisioning the Prussian army.

The extraordinary exertions made for the campaigns of 1813—14 had so exhausted the strength of the state, that on the return of Napoleon, when still greater exertions were demanded, with every sacrifice, no more could be done than o provide the absolute necessaries of fighting—viz., men, horses, weapons, and ammunition: magazines and commissariat arrangements on a large scale were not to be thought of. The pay for the troops were obliged to remain in arrear, and that there might be some money in the military chest, Prince Blucher borrowed several hundred thousand crowns from the Elberfield merchants, on his personal security. Under such circumstances, the Prussian army were compelled to occupy extensive cantonments in Belgium—an unavoidable expedient, which has been often made a subject of reproach to them. In these cantonments it first became possible, through the strictest regularity and economy, to provide the soldiers and the park columns with three days' bread and other necessaries.

It might here be permitted to ask, whether under similar circumstances an English army would have held itself in fighting condition—whether, instead of seeking a battle, it would not rather have retreated on the sea, in order to be nearer their means of subsistence, and in order to satisfy all those numerous wants which seem to them necessaries of life, and on which their whole system of discipline is built.

With such scanty provision hostilities began; forced marches, four important skirmishes and battles in four days, but one night's rest, and consumption of the provisions carried with them, mark the days until the destruction of the hostile army. At a distance from their line of operation, thrown on another, on which the friendly army lived, separated from their park columns, which remained near Overyssche and Louvain, the Prussian army was nevertheless in condition to follow the enemy without interruption here through the least fertile part of France, where only the conquest of Avesnes and St. Quentin supplied them with necessaries to press forward to Paris, and to reach that city in fighting condition, and in the before-mentioned strength, without having suffered from want of necessaries on the march. That under such circumstances a regular system of requisition was impossible, that the troops were obliged to help themselves in the places they passed through, and that, consequently, some excesses were unavoidable, are accidents of which every experienced officer can judge for himself. The army of the Duke of Wellington, in the possession of the whole resources of the most fertile part of Belgium, in communication with the sea, and England lying so close, provided even to superfluity with money, and marching through the richest parts of France and Belgium, which were yet untrodden by any other army, lost a day and a half before it reached Chateau Cambresis, which, as we have already observed, enabled the hostile army to effect a retreat to Paris, and when the Prussian army appeared before that city, the English was two marches behind, although the Prussians had had several skirmishes with the retreating enemy, which necessarily caused some delay.

Which system of war and discipline, then, deserves the preference—that which, with scanty and insufficient means, was constantly in marching and fighting condition, ready to take advantage of every lucky accident, and to hinder the enemy, by incessant harassing, from forming again to try once more the fortune of war, or that system which, with every possible want provided for, is still only able to move in established order, and is thereby, even after a splendid victory, hindered from pursuing the advantage already gained, and allows the enemy time to get together again, and cause a renewal of the bloody contest? The Prussian army suffered no want before Paris, and would have suffered none, if they could have remained in their position after the English army came up. The fertile environs on the north-eastern side of Paris, and the whole country towards the Marne and the Ourcq, afforded ample means of subsistence; and a longer occupation, until the park columns and the officers of the Commissariat had reached the army, would have rendered the establishment of a regular system of supply possible. It was not the want of supplies, but very different motives, which occasioned the deviation of the Prussian army to the right. In the campaign of 1814, the strength of the defences on the north side of Paris had become known. A reconnoitring party despatched towards the Ourcq Canal, by whom the enemy was driven with loss from the village of Aubervilliers, confirmed the intelligence that the enemy had strongly fortified the line of the Ourcq Canal, and occupied it with so great a force, that an attack on them must have been both a difficult and a doubtful undertaking. In a like manner became known the weakness of the south side of Paris, and the importance of the possession of the Plateaus of Meudon and Clermont, from which strong position the whole plain was commanded, and Paris might be easily assaulted from the south, unless the preference were given to a forced surrender by cutting off Paris from southern and western France. These considerations, and the conviction that no time must be allowed the enemy to recover, induced Prince Blucher, who always gave the first impulse on all great occasions, to resolve on the march to St. Germain, on the left bank of the Seine, where the bridge was taken possession of by a patrolling corps. The Duke of Wellington concurred fully in this plan, being still a march behind with his army, to take up the position of the Prussian army, by occupying the enemy, by threatening their north line, and by the construction of a bridge by Argenteuil, and passing it towards the bridge of Neuilly to support the Prussians.

After this short representation of the chief movements of the campaign, where Prussian and English soldiers fought and conquered together, the impartial reader may be safely left to judge for himself; it is, however, deeply to be deplored, that after an interval of 21 years, the Duke of Wellington has suffered the impression to be destroyed which he in the first moments so freely acknowledged. The affront offered to his old companions in war and victory does not originate so far back, they have their birth in heated party spirit and in the obstinacy of an old commander, who sees with dislike the alterations of institutions which existed in the days of his glory. Every admirer of the Duke of Wellington, and every friend of the English army and nation, must deeply lament that the laurel-crowned hero of so many victories did not complete his warlike career by abolishing, or at least alleviating, a cruel law, and one which cannot be enforced—a law which degrades and brutalises those warriors who laid the foundation of his victories and his fame.

The English common soldier is a rough, powerful, and valiant man, who in common with the whole people possesses a high feeling of nationality, and therefore unites in himself all the qualities of an excellent soldier; if with these qualities the discipline of the army were combined he would be all that could be desired in a warrior. Instead of this, the soldier is by complete alienation from social life, by a peculiarly cruel punishment, degraded and brutalised, acted on by the coarse indulgence of being well fed, and the gratification of the lowest desires, without the least prospect of improvement in his situation. Such is the position of the English soldier, avoided and undervalued by his own nation, to which he stands opposed, and what he effects against the foreign enemy is more to be ascribed to his original good qualities, and his contempt to all that is not English, than to a discipline which would make a wild beast of him if left to himself. These are the causes which render the English soldier only the soldier of the battle, incapable and unfit for foreposts and detachments—in short, for all that precedes and follows a battle, and brings the war to a speedy decision. On this account, England cannot conduct a war unless foreign troops undertake the active and difficult part of the war; on this account an army composed only of English would be easily manœuvred back to their ships, if a battle were avoided, the troops daily harassed and perplexed by small skirmishes, and if the principal operations were directed against the supplies. The observations of the Duke of Wellington respecting a Prussian review prove the little attention he has paid to the Prussian system of punishment, although a Prussian corps was for several years under his command, and during the whole of that time a very intelligent and experienced English staff-officer remained at the Prussian head-quarters. The Duke remarks, that at that parade very few soldiers were in the second class; his deductions from that fact are certainly only obscurely intimated, and do not appear to have the designed tendency,—viz., to exalt the character of the English discipline, but rather to show that the Prussian law is not always conscientiously observed. A few words on the system of punishment and discipline in the Prussian army will here best explain what is meant. When the remainder of the Prussian army, after the unfortunate peace of Tilsit, was to be re-modelled, the half of the troops were foreigners, who, enrolled in the former German empire, did not and could not morally belong to Prussia; the punishments were severe, even cruel corporal punishments were in use, and which were often capriciously administered. It was, however, resolved to abolish corporal punishments, and establish in their place imprisonment in fortresses, in separate divisions, which, under military direction, should be directed to military objects, but should have nothing in them revolting or degrading; arrests, more or less severe, and for disgraceful or oft-repeated offences, to form a second class, which should be subject to corporal punishment; and also to the further punishment of losing the national cockade, the honourable right of every citizen. In order, however, to open even to individuals of this second class a return to the right path, and to awaken in them a feeling of honour, it was resolved, that after a year of irreproachable conduct the privates of the company should be entitled to ask for re-admission to the first military class, and that this demand, after being approved of by the proper authorities, should be laid before the King himself, who would decide upon the claim for re-admission, and thus personally restore the honour of the individual. These arrangements have, among a people little inclined to heinous offences, and susceptible on the point of military honour, greatly assisted in bringing about the very small amount of punishment which distinguishes the Prussian army. It is frequently more necessary to moderate a too sensitive feeling of honour than to complain of the want of that feeling. That the highest dignities in the military service are within the reach of every soldier who distinguishes himself in war or peace by his talents and conduct, must tend to elevate their sense of honour, and will, in any future war, produce the most brilliant results.

It rarely happens that a soldier, withdrawn from the standing army, remains in the second class; he has been either re-admitted, or, on a repetition of his offence, he has been a second time sent to a fortress. On a third considerable offence he is dismissed the army, and given over to the civil authorities. After this statement, the impression of the Duke of Wellington, as if too few individuals of the second class had appeared on parade, may fall harmless, especially if it should appear that some of these individuals had been left behind for service in town and barrack duty.

A system like the Prussian requires, indeed, greater effort and attention on the part of the officers, and their great intimacy with the men. It is not enough that the care and superintendence of the soldier should be left to adjutants and sergeants, and that the officer should think, when he takes his place at the head of the assembled regiment, and leads it into battle, that he fulfils all his duty. What officer, however, would not willingly take on himself the increase of duty, if by that means he could remove from his country the reproach of treating its defenders with cruelty, and could render his companions in arms capable of every service which war can require? V. GROLLMANN.

TRISTRAM'S OPINION AND REMARKS UPON "LLOYD'S REGISTER OF BRITISH AND FOREIGN SHIPPING."

Sir,—"Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping" having been instituted two years, its merits or demerits—its probable or real benefit and utility to the mercantile navy, must have been discussed and descanted upon in all its bearings, in every society connected with our maritime affairs, and supported and calumniated by the press, or by pamphlets, magazines, or other periodicals, as various interests may have governed the mind or inclination of the parties concerned. As a naval officer in the service of my King, I have no concern whatever in this institution beyond cherishing a patriotic wish and hope, that Britannia in war in her floating bulwarks, manned with willing "hearts of oak," so may she, in peace, ever be the patroness and protectress of commerce in her mercantile fleets, wafted o'er the main to her distant colonies, freighted with the manufactures of her skilful and industrious artisans and the produce of her native soil—to return in safety freighted with the riches, the gems, the luxuries, and the merchandise of those flourishing colonies, the welfare, the maintenance, and government of which it should ever be our legislature's chief object and care to protect, to succour and defend. As a British naval officer and patriot then, I beg to offer my humble opinion upon the importance and advantage of a Public Register of classed and surveyed merchant vessels in which are embarked so many thousands of human lives, frequently all our fortunes, at all times immense wealth, and often our only hope and prospect.

"May ever rule the waves"

The formation of the "General Ship Owners' Society," for the interest of British shipping and navigation, and the establishment of "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," must at present materially, and in time effectually benefit the trading community at large, by registering none but sea-worthy and well-formed ships and vessels for the conveyance of persons and property across the seas to every part of the world.

From a variety of interest and prejudice acting against every new institution, whether for the general prosperity of the kingdom or not, it is probable some time may elapse before government deems it expedient to countenance and legalise this establishment by a legislative enactment; but as the government or the country has never denied the real or probable advantages of a public register of the qualities of merchant vessels to this wealthy and great maritime nation, government can so far countenance and support it as to direct that no ship or vessel should be chartered for the conveyance of public stores or property, or for the transport of troops, convicts, or emigrants, which has not passed the ordeal of the strictest survey and most scrutinous inspection in the hull, masts, yards, sails, anchors, cables, stores and boats, by the scientific and experienced Surveyors appointed by the society at the principal Ports in the United Kingdom, and classed and registered in "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping."

As the number of ships and vessels so surveyed and registered is sufficiently great to authorise an opinion that they are now being navigated in all parts at home and abroad, the governors of our colonies ought to be instructed not to charter or employ any other for the public service. A copy of the registered, classed, and surveyed shipping, should be furnished by government, for the information and guidance of the authorities, at the principal ports of every British colony; and I beg to suggest that the Committee of Management would best promote the interest of the society and the owners of the registered shipping, if a pamphlet fully particularising the purport and intention of "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," and the names of the ships classed and surveyed agreeably to its orders and regulations, were supplied gratis by the society (but under the authority of government) to every British Consulate or Factory established in foreign states or territories, to give a merchant or passenger an opportunity and a choice to embark his property or his life in a good ship or a frail one.

With a view of expediting the promulgation, and exhibiting the advantages of "Lloyd's Register of Shipping," I beg the insertion of this letter in your widely-circulated Gazette, which voyages by sea, and travels by land, till it winds and works its way in its serpentine and tortuous route, into every port and city between Archangel and Newfoundland, Petersburgh and Quebec, London and Canton, Paris, Bordeaux, and New York, Lisbon and Madeira, Cadiz and Panama, Constantinople and Algiers, Gibraltar and Jamaica, Havannah and Vera Cruz, the Cape of Good Hope, St. Helena, and the River Plate, the East and West Indies, Kamschatka and Juan Fernandez.

Not only this letter, my good friend, Mr. Editor, but another and another, till I convince the public that this Register is compiled to ensure a preservation of life and property, exposed to the ordinary dangers of the elements; and to prove that the proceedings and intentions of the society are all "fair play and above board," I will give them publicity, by extracting from the printed regulations of the "Register" such matter as may be necessary in explanation.

"Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping has been established for the purpose of obtaining a faithful and accurate classification of the Mercantile Marine of the United Kingdom, and of the foreign vessels trading thereto.

"That the superintendence of the affairs of this society be under the direction of a Committee in London, composed of twenty-four members, consisting of an equal proportion of Merchants, Shipowners, and Underwriters, and that, in addition, the Chairman of the Committee for managing the affairs of Lloyd's, and the Chairman of the General Ship Owners' Society, for the time being, shall, ex officio, be members of the Committee.

"Six of the members, namely, two of each of the constituent parts of the Committee, shall go out annually by rotation, but be eligible to be re-elected.

"The vacancies so arising shall be filled up by the election of two Shipowners and one Merchant by the Committee of the General Shipowners' Society, and two Underwriters and one Merchant by the Committee for managing the affairs of Lloyd's."

Although I am now engaged with a mercantile subject, I shall not forget, as opportunity offers, to answer every correspondent who has referred to my opinion, or "taken my name in vain," for I long to prove to A. C., by the articles of war, that unless the constitution of a nine-of-war is capsized, her commissioned officers are "SKYSAILS" above the "ROYALS."

EMBARKATION OF TROOPS—SECOND BATTALION OF THE ROYALS.

SIR,—You would do myself, and many others of your subscribers, a service if you would bring to the notice of the Government and the country in general, the manner in which troops are now-a-days embarked for Foreign Service. For instance the 2d Battalion of the Royal Regt. now at York, and waiting to be shipped on board the Maitland transport for America, are to embark in that ship towards the end of the present month, upwards of 600 souls. The accommodation for the soldier is not so good or so extensive as in any common emigrant vessel, and there are not positively berths sufficient for the Officers and their families; every part of the vessel is to be crowded with live lumber. Six Officers are to sleep in the cuddy, or mess-room! and how the ladies are to be stowed away is a question of great interest to them. I cannot see how they can be accommodated at all; for this regiment is to be the victim of an experiment, the ship being fitted up on a new plan, to see how many human beings can be stowed away in the smallest space and at the least expense. At this late season of the year, when westwardly winds prevail so much, a voyage of two months and upwards to Quebec is not uncommon; and fancy upwards of 600 of his Majesty's subjects, soldiers, and Englishmen, closely shut up all this time in an old bad sailing ship of 600 tons. If all this is meant as economy, the Government were never more mistaken than to suppose John Bull ever wished to see the guardians of his country sent forth on Foreign Service in such a miserable prison. Might not this be remedied even at this late hour?

THE MEMORIAL OF THE LIEUTENANTS, R.N.

SIR,—The attention of the junior members of his Majesty's Naval Service has been forcibly excited by the perusal of the Memorial of the Lieutenants of the Navy, which has lately appeared in your very excellent paper; and we are convinced, that had the intention of such an appeal been generally known throughout the united kingdom, it would have received a very great augmentation of signatures. Nothing, Sir, can be more reasonable than the brief, clear, and respectful memorial and appeal made to the Lords of the Admiralty, upon the anomalous circumstance in which the above class of officers find themselves placed, by the boon bestowed upon the Officers of the army alluded to, and extended to those of the Royal Marines also. We rejoice heartily at this act of royal bounty; and however we may regret that their Lordships were deterred, at the moment, from laying the memorial before his most gracious Majesty, yet, from the well-known desire of that august Board, collectively as well as individually, to render justice to, and protect the interest of all classes of officers in the sea service, as well also as from the conspicuous distinction thus existing between the services, we cannot but hope and believe, that the subject has attained their Lordships' sympathy, and that it will obtain their advocacy also, which eventually may lead to the end desired by a very deserving class of his Majesty's loyal, dutiful, and faithful subjects. We may just mention here, en passant, that earlier relief would be afforded to a few of the senior Lieutenants of the six and five shilling lists, if those Officers of their class, who now enjoy what may be styled "civil" appointments and pensions (not for wounds), and who voluntarily prefer such to the rank of Retired Commanders, were removed from the Lieutenants' list.

The number of these old Officers appears to be, Greenwich Hospital 8, Out-pensioners 50, Warders of Dockyards 5, attached to Hospitals 4, ditto to Royal Naval College 2—Total 69. We have the honour to be, Sir, &c.,

FRIENDS OF OUR BRAVE DEFENDERS.

THE COMPARATIVE ADVANTAGES OF THE ARMY OVER THE NAVY.

SIR,—Having recently observed in your Gazette, Letters, written by Naval officers, complaining of the comparative advantages of the Army over the Navy, in regard to pay, superior rank, and other points, I will beg to offer a few remarks upon the subject.

With all due deference to the writer of the above mentioned Letters, and giving them every consideration for courtesy in writing as they do, it must be manifest that as comparisons are not unfrequently called ungenerous, so, in the present instance, they may be called injudicious.

The recent motion of Mr. Bannerman in the House of Commons, and the speeches thereon fully demonstrate, that in the course of the next year it is the intention of the Government to ameliorate the condition of the old officers of either service.

Instead, therefore, of making invidious comparisons, it would be obviously better, that full explanation should be made of the length and nature of the services of those officers, who served during the late wars, and who are still without adequate remuneration for the same.

It may then be found that a more just cause of comparison must be made, showing how very far inferior is the remuneration of half-pay, to even the oldest Field Officers of the Army and senior Post-captains of the Navy, to the persons who fill the civil departments.

There is scarcely a retired clerk from either of the Government offices who has not a greater superannuation (as it is termed by them) than the superior officers of the Army and Navy, who may have passed through the whole of the last war.

It is, therefore, to be wished, that previous to the next Session of Parliament, some able writer, or man of influence, will communicate the above statement to the Secretary at War. † †

United Service Club, 6 June.

ON THE CIVIL APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

SIR,—Having given a place in your valuable Gazette to a correspondent under the signature of C. (and one who, as you observe, stands high in rank), I also request the same favour, although I cannot boast of high rank (having been made Lieutenant between 20 and 30 years); I am, Mr. Editor, on your side of the question, viz.—"that no civil situation should be held longer than five years," and which is on a just principle. May I be allowed to ask C. (if not already in a snug place on shore), whether he would not accept of a five years' station? C. endeavours to make you believe officers could not be found with abilities sufficient if these changes were to take place once in five years. Good God! let C. and the happy few look at our overgrown Navy List, and they will too plainly see the names of thousands, who would be most happy to say, "once in my life I held a civil situation for five years," and if it should be bestowed for merit only, that officer will always feel proud at having held it once. C. speaks much against Civilians, and, at the same time, would make all officers Civilians, wishing the present officers to retain their situations for life, or until they are superannuated and return on a pension.

C. wishing to make the best of his argument, goes into extreme cases, naming the Lords of the Admiralty and the Surveyor of the Navy, which is quite argumentum ad ignorantiam. I must say for one, and I believe it is the opinion of nine-tenths of the Navy, that their Lordships and Surveyor should not be removed at every change of the Ministry, but all other civil situations under their Lordships' command should not be held for a longer period than five years. Were their Lordships once to carry these excellent reforms through all the civil establishments under their control, it would be one of the greatest boons ever granted; even Mr. Joseph Hume would applaud such a measure, as it would save all future superannuations, each officer returning again on his half-pay at the expiration of five years.

In conclusion, I hope, Sir, your Naval and Military Gazette will be well supported by the United Service. It is true, I cannot afford a shilling per week, being nearly fast a-ground since the peace (with one exception, not a five years' station at one of the civil establishments, but in a cutter for three years), yet a brother Lieutenant and myself take a copy of your paper weekly. I shall not, I suppose Sir, trouble you again, but if you could collect the opinions of the whole of the Navy, I am confident the majority would be overwhelming in our favour.

C. C., Lieutenant, R.N.

Blackheath, 6th June.

SIR,—Although, very likely, I cannot boast of the "high rank" of your correspondent C., to whose letter on the subject of civil appointments held by naval officers you have alluded in your last number, yet I am quite ready to enter the lists with him in this controversy; and if he will, in reply to this communication, place his real name to his next letter, I also will at once affix mine to the rejoinder; if, however, he declines this offer, I willingly authorise you, Sir, to tell him by whom his arguments are opposed, provided he will allow you to make known to me his name. My object in making this first proposal is, that the officers of our profession may then possibly take a greater interest in this disquisition, than they would do under that of anonymous correspondents; and as I feel and know that I have JUSTICE and RIGHT on my side, I am indifferent as to the secrecy which a fictitious signature guarantees.

Now then, Sir, I will proceed to answer the observations of your correspondent; but first, I must express the satisfaction I have derived from reading, in the paragraph in which you have referred to the letter of C., "that you still think, that in all those situations for the performance of the duties of which the naval officer's education has qualified him, a periodical change should take place." This opinion, Sir, is quite in unison with that spirit of liberality and justice which has ever marked the columns of The Naval and Military Gazette, and whenever it ceases to maintain those straightforward and independent principles, I trust and hope that it will cease to be. But to revert to the remarks of your correspondent. I would begin by asking, "Does he really consider it 'waggery' the advocating the right and fair play of officers of every grade having a turn of service in the few places of employment that there are at this moment open for the several thousands borne upon the Navy List? Or does he deem it right and proper that, because a man may have aided in procuring the return of a Member of Parliament, or of boning to men in power, by which he has himself obtained an advantageous appointment, that he is entitled to retain it as long as he lives, to the exclusion of all his brother officers of equal, and perhaps of very superior pretensions? If this be JUSTICE—if this be the HONOUR we have been promised, farewell to the declarations of British statesmen. But the thing is impossible, as the present Ministers, I am positive, mean to fulfil their sacred pledges of correcting every abuse; and looking at the men now at the head of our naval affairs, I am satisfied that they will be the foremost in carrying every salutary measure into execution. That there may be two or three, and perhaps four or five, situations under the Admiralty now filled by naval officers which it would be impolitic and unwise to remove the possessors from, I readily admit; situations under the appointment of the Admiralty—such as the Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants employed in the Coast Guard Service—the Superintendents of our Dock-yards and Hospitals—the Superintendents of the Packets, and, I must suppose, the Captains of the Ordinary too, together with many more, are to be held in perpetuity on the ground, as your correspondent so liberally infers that there are no other officers on the list of the Navy capable of filling these situations (!!) is as unjust as it is insulting to the whole profession. Does C. not know that the Parliamentary Committee recommended that ALL appointments should be changed every five or six years?—and are not all Governors and Lieutenant-Governors of our Colonies, and all superior officers filling staff situations in the Army, removed at the end of these periods? Why then, should not the same degree of fair play be extended to the NAVAL service?

As to the argument that, because all appointments under the Admiralty should be changed every five years, the Lords of the Admiralty themselves, together with Grooms of the Bedchamber, &c. &c., should be subject to the like regulation, is too absurd to be dwelt upon. It is the situations held by Naval officers, in the gift of the Admiralty that I contend should be limited to FIVE YEARS, with the few exceptions I have named; and this I will further maintain ought to be done, let Whigs or Tories be in power, for it is founded on strict justice, and justice every Englishman has a right to look for and to claim, and, through your independant columns I still will trust that we shall ever find this principle upheld in spite of any interested individuals, who, holding good appointments, may desire to keep the loaves and fishes all to themselves, whilst their brother officers, with equal abilities and equal fitness for such places, and possessing, perhaps, far higher pretensions to their country's favour and protection, are, with large families, fated to live in penury and obscurity, in order to save enough annually out of their miserable pittances to pay for the education of their children. But this must not—it cannot longer be.

6th June, 1836. A.

NO BREVET!

Sir,—Lest those of our fellow-countrymen, whose sympathy a generous advocate has recently done much (and I trust will do more) to excite, should be led to believe that, if silent, we do not feel and suffer, and that their friendly interference is not required, you will essentially serve our cause by reminding them that it is our duty and our habit to submit to our superiors without a murmur; that we of the United Service are trained to patience and long-suffering, and that, although our hardships and our wrongs be many and grievous, we still look with confident hope to the justice and benevolence of our Sovereign, supported by the now awakened sympathy of a generous nation, for that prompt and liberal interference in our behalf that shall dispel the penny-wise scruples, and over-rule the heart-breaking procrastination of those who, at the expense of justice and good faith, would perpetuate the pernicious policy under which we have so long been made to suffer.

To Mr. Bannerman the best thanks of the Army and Navy are due; that his just and generous sentiments have been, and will be, responded to by the whole nation there is already sufficient proof: it is a national, not a party question. Let him but persevere and bring it to a parliamentary vote, and the slender proofs by which the Secretary-at-War seeks to support the policy of further procrastination, after six years' total stagnation of promotion—the feeble apologies by which he has deemed it his duty to attempt the justification of an acknowledged injustice, must inevitably be swept away by the overwhelming majority, which will not fail then, with cordiality and truth, to speak the honest sentiments of the British people, to whom as a nation the character of injustice, ingratitude, or illiberality does not belong.

PAY OF THE ENGINEERS.

Sir,—The pay of the British army having lately become a topic of conversation, will you allow me to ask why should there exist so much difference between the troops of the line and the ordnance, as to their pay; for instance, all engineer officers on foreign stations receive double pay,—perhaps you can inform me why it is so; but no doubt the Master-General and Board of Ordnance, if they deemed it necessary, could explain *.

A Lieutenant of Engineers, of 7 years standing, receives 7*s.* 10*d.* per day, on arriving in the West Indies it is doubled, making 15*s.* 8*d.*, with 1*s.* 6*d.* for a servant, 1*s.* 6*d.* for a horse and rations, total 18*s.* 8*d.*, or as good pay as a Field Officer †. An Engineer Officer, about 12 months appointed, is ordered to the West Indies, his pay at home is 5*s.* 7*d.*, on arriving in the West he receives 11*s.* 2*d.*, while an Ensign of the Line, who may be 10 years an Ensign, and perhaps half of that time in the West Indies, receives 5*s.* 3*d.*; ought this to be? I asked an old Engineer Officer the reason for giving double pay, but he could not inform me.

I am aware Engineer Officers pay for their quarters, Subalterns, I think 26*l.* yearly, but I presume they will not venture to say this is the reason for receiving double pay; they might perhaps assert they have much writing, but let it be remembered they have an Ordnance clerk who drives the quill, while they merely sign their name.

The Artillery are also well provided for; the officers not so well as the Engineers, but the gunners and drivers receive good pay, and the smallest work they perform is paid for extra.

A deputy Ordnance Store-keeper in the West Indies receives 10*s.* per day, 2*s.* 6*d.* climate pay, 2*s.* for lodgings, 1*s.* 6*d.* for a servant, 1*s.* 6*d.* for a horse, and 1*s.* 3*d.* or 22*l.* yearly office rent, with rations, total 18*s.* 9*d.* per day; and the lodgings act also as an office, killing two birds with one stone.

A barrack-master receives the same pay and allowances * (with the exception of climate pay) as the D. O. Store-keeper.

The Ordnance Clerk † receives 7*s.* 6*d.* per day, 2*s.* 6*d.* climate money, 1*s.* 6*d.* for a servant, 1*s.* 4*d.* for lodgings, with rations, total 12*s.* 10*d.*; and should he succeed a D.O.S. keeper who may go home to England on leave, he receives all his allowances, while an Ensign receives 5*s.* 3*d.* per day, nor can he receive any of the allowances of his Captain should he be absent, unless he is next in rank. The Ordnance no doubt requires a cleansing, and the sooner the department is placed under the Secretary at War and Commander-in-Chief the better. I have the honour to be, &c. An Infantry Soldier.

[We have no doubt that the necessary explanation will be given by some of the Officers of this gallant and scientific corps.—Ed.]

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

Sir,—It appears upwards of one hundred thousand pounds have been voted in the army estimates this year for the volunteer corps of the kingdom; now a great portion, indeed, I may say, the major part of it, is devoted to the service of the Yeomanry Cavalry, a force for which, none, save the officers and others interested, can, with any degree of propriety, advocate the continuance. Not only are they thus directly excessively expensive to the nation, but equally indirectly so, inasmuch as the assessed taxes suffer considerable reduction by their existence. There is scarcely a gentleman in the neighbourhood where such regiments are in being (at least I speak confluently of some districts), but has one, two, three, or four horses serving in them, by which he is freed of the duty. This is surely a crying evil, and wants but publicity to be remedied.

Perhaps the insertion of these remarks in the pages of your widely circulated Gazette, may attract the attention of the authorities; if so, my end will be answered, as I know the affair will then be in better hands than mine.

29th May, 1836. A Tax Payer.

[We differ most widely with this writer; the value of the Yeomanry is acknowledged by men of all parties, and the "crying evil," an exemption from the horse duty, is but a trifle when compared with the personal expenses this service entails upon Yeomanry officers.—Ed.]

ROYAL NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

Sir,—Feeling confident, from the readiness with which you inserted my last communication, that you are fully alive to the interests of the service, I again beg to call your attention to the subject of the "Royal Naval Charitable Society." It is true, and the most sceptical cannot deny but that the Society is liberal with its confined means, at the same time, I beg to add that that liberality is sometimes not guided by proper discriminations in its distribution. Having in my former letter alluded to the "office expenses," wherein I showed that 247*l.* was charged to that account for 1835, the amount of donations and subscriptions for the same period being only 1329*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.*, I am convinced that the members who do not attend the meetings must feel anxious to know in what manner these expenses arise; with this persuasion I give the principal items for the past year, agreeable to the statement laid before the last January meeting, as follows:—"Secretary's salary, 60*l.*; ditto's 5 per cent commission on 1329*l.* 5*s.* 4*d.*; the receipts, 66*l.* 9*s.*; ditto's expenses in personal inquiries relative to parties applying for relief that are residing in London, 8*l.* 8*s.*; total to secretary, 134*l.* 17*s.*; rent, coals, and candles, 60*l.*; postages, 17*l.* 17*s.*; advertising the four quarterly meetings, 13*l.* 10*s.*; stationery, 6*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.*; hire of room at Thatched House Tavern for the Quarterly Meetings, 2*l.* 2*s.*" Now it seems to me that as we are associated for benevolent purposes, our aim ought to be "Economy," but the above shows the reverse. As the meetings are always at fixed periods (the second Monday in January, April, July, and October,) the expense of advertising to such an extent, or in fact at all, is unnecessary, and the hiring a room for those meetings equally so, when we are paying 60*l.* per annum for rent, &c.; an eligible office, with a committee room might be easily procured at much less expense, there being seldom more than 25 members present at the meetings; with respect to the postages, the secretary ought to be directed to inform parties applying for relief, their communications should be Post Paid. I also beg leave to suggest, while I avail myself of your medium, (to call upon those who do not contribute to lend their aid), the propriety of impressing on the minds of the present members the necessity of the curtailment of our expenses, with a view to the subject being brought forward at the next meeting (11th July). Nauticus.

23*d May*, 1836.

[We disagree with Nauticus; the above expenditure evinces a due regard to economy, and we do not think the institution could be conducted efficiently at less expense.

We have received a further letter from this Correspondent thanking us for the publication of the above (before it published) and for supporting his opinions, which we not. We are therefore inclined to think that Nauticus more need of reform than the Naval Charitable Institution —Ed.]

ORDNANCE ENGINEER CLERKS.

Sir,—You will greatly oblige me by inserting the following letter to an "Engineer's Clerk" in your much val paper, The Naval and Military Gazette.

Sir,—Your representation of the Engineers' Clerks The Naval and Military Gazette, a few weeks since, very much to the purpose; but much more might have b advanced in behalf of those trustworthy servants. Since r ing your letter, I have been informed that the Clerks, in Out-port not many miles from London, are indefatigab they attend to their office duties a great portion of the till late at night, and sometimes on Sundays, without ceiving one fraction extra for that duty. They sisted of jewels, snuff-boxes, and other articles presen to the Sultan, Grand Vizir, Reis Effendi, and other cers. These things were made by Rundell and Bri jewellers to the King, who had an agent at Const nople to re-purchase them. Instead of being retaine the persons to whom they were presented as hono distinctions, which they would be fond to keep and play, the agent was immediately sent for; and freque on the very day on which they were given, a bargain made, and the article was bought, and sent back to don, where it was a little altered in the setting, re chased by Government, and again presented by the Ambassador; so that the same article has gone thr this process several times.

It began thus:—"Whereas I have the hon being related to the Governor-General; and possess no fortune, have incurred many debts, and besides a mistress with two children; I hereby bequ my debts, my affairs, my girl, and my two children the protection of Mr. Hastings." * Why should not the D. O. S. keeper act as Barrack-master, it is from his store the barrack utensils are issued to the Barrack-master, who issues them to the troops; Barrack-masters could be dispensed with.

† Ordnance Clerks in England perhaps do not receive such good pay.

* This scale was sent by the Board to all the Out-ports questing the Commanding Engineers to forward to the Boa names and length of services of each Clerk, which I believe done, but after waiting in suspense for two years, they rec a Board Letter stating whatever might have been the Clerk appointment, &c., they think proper to inform them the scale for promotion was only intended to extend to the Lon General's Office, Pall Mall and Dublin.

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1836.

In offering our promised comment on the excellent and convincing letters of Numa, on the subject of the Coast Guard Service, we feel that to do any thing like justice to them would require far more space then the columns of a weekly journal could afford. We will, however, briefly call attention to the principal points contained in those admirable strictures, with the hope, that evils of such magnitude as Numa has shown, cannot and will not longer escape the regard of His Majesty's Government, but that the correction sought will be applied effectually in every quarter in which those letters prove that it is so manifestly required.

Amidst the many amendments that are so much needed in this anomalous establishment, the first and most prominant is, that which relates to the Officers of the Navy belonging to it. That a man of character and honour, bred in a profession where the slightest stigma on reputation is justly regarded as rendering the individual unworthy the further esteem and respect of his brother officers, should, by entering the Coast Guard Service, be fated to meet with degradation and insult in every step he takes,—where, instead of being under the absolute controul of the superior officers of his own profession, he is, in point of fact and of truth, under that of some Custom-House Clerk, who, without the slightest hesitation, doubts his word in any representation that he may have to make:—for an officer to be thus humiliated and dishonoured is, we say, a disgrace to the British Navy, and calls for instant correction, through the active interference of the legitimate protectors of the Naval Officer's character—the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. In stating as we do, that it is a few of the Clerks in the Custom House who commonly have the arrangement of all matters of reference made to the Commissioners of Customs, through the office of the Comptroller-General; we speak advisedly, not from the facts given by Numa alone, but also from various other letters that we have received, in all of which we are assured, and which our own knowledge of the universally-respected character of Captain Bowles confirms, that had this service been under the sole management of this worthy officer, but few, if any, of the senseless complaints, which are now made against it, would ever have been heard of; but unhappily the Comptroller-General has not the power to remedy it as he could desire to do, and we have been shown cases where even his immediate recommendations have been treated with contumely by the subordinates attached to the Board of Customs.

That between three and four hundred commissioned officers of the Navy, wearing the uniforms of their several ranks, fifty-five of whom wearing that of Field Officers, should be placed under the directions of a civil department, the chief of which can know nothing of Naval affairs, or of Naval discipline, must at once convince every dispassionate observer of the extreme inconsistency and folly of such an arrangement. The consequences attendant on this "oil and vinegar" amalgamation, is, that the Custom-House Commissioners place no reliance whatever on the statements of the Naval Inspectors, or Chief Officers, but refer all representations that may be made to them by these officers, although passing through the Comptroller-General, to some Custom-House officer stationed in the vicinity of the Naval Inspectors' district, in order that this Custom-House Collector should ascertain if such representation be true! Thus, we have ourselves seen, that the statements of old Commanders of the Navy, pointing out different things that required alterations or repairs, on the stations under their several commands, have been referred to the nearest Collector of the Customs, for him to report on the correctness and truth of the Naval Captain's complaints.

Is not this, we ask, disgraceful to the British Navy? That the word of a Captain belonging to it,—a man, in rank, in education, in birth, and best and most important of all in character and in conduct, equal to any Custom-House Collector, or Commissioner either, under the Crown, cannot be relied upon, without the corroborating testimony of an officer of this Civil Department. Farewell, indeed, to our Naval greatness, if the superior officers of the profession are sunk to this degradation. But it cannot longer be. The whole Coast Guard establishment must be re-organised and placed under the immediate directions of the Admiralty, or if this be not done, at least every Naval Officer must be instantly withdrawn from it.

Next, we will say a word or two on what has been styled the "tom-foolery" practised in this service, as regards the Lieutenants being expected to render military honours to the heads of this establishment, whenever they happen to visit the different stations. This silly regulation, we feel convinced, never originated with the Comptroller-General, as he has too much good sense ever to have wished for such an unprecedented honour being rendered to an officer holding the corresponding rank of Major only, or even to himself, with that of Colonel, as that of being received by an officer with the rank of a Captain of the Army, at the head of a guard. It is useless to animadvert further on those ridiculous ceremonies, because we are assured that all these anomalies must and will speedily be cured.

As regards the pay and allowances of the different officers belonging to the Coast Guard, we think with Numa, that the Chief Officers are by no means sufficiently paid, when the arduous and harrassing duties that they have to perform is considered; and we hope that, whenever the expected change takes place, the emoluments of the Lieutenants will be made fully competible with their Naval rank.

Again, the duties of the Inspecting-Commanders require to be more clearly and expressly defined, so that these officers may be enabled to know positively when they are acting rightly; and, above all, we fervently hope, that the un-English system of confidential, or Star-Chamber communications, relative to the conduct and characters of the subordinate officers in this service, which the Inspecting-Commanders have heretofore been required to furnish, may receive its death-blow with the termination of the present establishment under the Board of Customs; and that such a detestable system of espionage may never again have existence in a service to which officers of the British Navy are attached. If any man acts unworthily in it let him at once know his crime and his accuser, in order that he may have the opportunity of meeting both in the open day, and not by secret representations or sinister inferences, be exposed to have all his brightest hopes and prospects damned, through such an inquisition-like exercise of authority as has been too long encouraged under the system of "private and confidential reports."

We would most gladly refer to each and all of the other numerous points to which Numa has called attention, were it not that the variety of topics, claiming a share of our columns, prevent our fulfilling this desire at this time, but we hope at an early period again to recur to this subject which cannot but be deemed to merit the immediate regard of His Majesty's Government, inasmuch as that the expense to the country of this vast establishment far exceeds HALF A MILLION per annum, and consequently that where there is such large an expenditure at the public cost, the public are entitled to expect that the service, upon which this immense outlay is made, is rendered efficient in every form.

In concluding our remarks for the present on this question, we will briefly observe, that we quite agree with Numa in all he has said relative to the inefficiency of the Revenue Cruisers, both as regards their being checks to smuggling, as well as to the inferiority of their appointments, as compared with what they were when under the Admiralty. Far better would it be to have but a dozen well-constructed and well-equipped vessels that could keep the sea in all weathers, than three times this number of such as are now belonging to this Service. Further;—with regard to the abuses complained of, connected with the supply of stores, and which it is evident is beyond the Comptroller-General's correction, or they would long ere this have been put an end to; we would advise Numa to select two or more flagrant cases of this kind with all their details, and to submit them to some patriotic Member of the Legislature, in order that they may be brought fully and distinctly before the public. This would at once put a final stop to the highly objectionable, we might say the corrupt system to which Numa refers.

In the thorough re-organisation of the Coast Guard Establishment, which must occur at an early period, the duties of the officers and men will, we are assured, be more satisfactorily arranged, for as Numa has most truly observed, wherever impossibilities are exacted evasions and deceptions must ensue. The regulation, too, which exists, of stopping the pay of the men when unwell, is we deem as unjust as it is impolitic, for by thus reducing them to poverty, and for that too, which is their misfortune and not their fault, you expose these boatmen to the daily influence of a bribe, and the practice of muleting officers and men of the whole of their day-pay, while on leave of absence, if for a few ys only, ought also immediately be put a stop , for such a system is as partial as it is unjust, d for this simple reason,—it is, we believe, not rsued in any other branch of the King's Service. Grseter encoursgement should be given in this rvice to those whose actual exertions and personal al had made the seizure; this should be done putting an end to all "flank sharing," as it is med, and also to the immoral and unworthy stem of informations, which, whilst it holds out inducement for man to betray his fellow man, d thereby to debase his nature, it at the same ne conduces but little, if ever anything eventually, wards the public benefit, as nine times in ten, as nurselves have been shown on many occasions have happened, the informer, who almost uniemly is himself a principal smuggler, when he es information that a run is to be made at a certu spot, and draws all the force to that point, and ere perhaps 50 or 100 kegs are landed, he is well are that at the same instant 500 or 1000 kegs, perhaps ten times this value in silks, &c., are ding in another direction. It is, then, in every y advisable to put an end to informations, more rticularly such as are communicated by persons the ports of France and Holland, who vaguely present that several vessels are loading for itish ports without giving any particulars, and n, if either of these be captured, claim the reard, though, very likely, the individual giving s loose and unimportant information is himself erested in the cargoes of the whole!

Amidst other extraordinary regulations in the est Guard Service, the Officers are required to several pounds for their commissions; why or erefore this is exacted from them we know not, t we hold it to be most unjust. In short, it uld seem that every possible exaction is in every pe made from the pay and allowances of the cers and men in this Service, as though they not deserve that which their arduous duties, in weathers, especially by night, so fully entitle m to receive.

With respect to the suggestions of Numa, as en in his last letter, for the remodelling all the pointments in the Coast Guard, we concur with s able writer in almost every point that he has mitted, and deem that the public is largely his tor for the labours he has used; and we would in strenuously recommend that every Civilian uld be removed from this Service, on the day t it is placed under the Admiralty, and that all val Officers, who have been five years in it, should nnce be made to give place to others of equal ims to their country's protection, so that each and might have the chance of serving by turns in the proved establishment. Where, however, an cer belonging to it had evinced an extraordinary d conspicuous zeal in the execution of his duties, would say, that, if this meritorious conduct did t bring him promotion, he should have a double n granted to him, if he desired to remain in this ployment; and, in once more renewing our rnest—our confident hope, that the Coast Guard ll be immediately removed from the control of e CUSTOM-HOUSE Department to that of the ADRALTY, we will confirm the words of Numa, as en in the conclusion of his Twelfth Letter,—That, as the present Board of Admiralty is comsed of men of high and independent minds, who ve the good of their country really at heart, we fully assured that they will ever be sensitively ve to the interests of a profession upon which that country must ever depend for safety in the hour of need, and hence our natural desire arises, that this and every other thing NAVAL should at once be placed under NAVAL CONTROUL."

IN reverting to the roster of the King's regiments serving in India, we would solicit attention to the nature of the service there. Not only do the regiments of His Majesty serve on an average twice as long in India as in any other foreign station, but while there are foreigners to the Company's government. The army of the King is kept quite distinct from that of the Company, and, politically, no wiser plan could be adopted for the obedience of both. But the King's regiments suffer under that system by being deprived of the stimulus afforded to the Company's European Forces, of laying open to their Officers all the offices of the State, and to the non-commissioned Officers and Privates the numerous situations of emolument in the Ordnance, Commissary, Barrack, and other Military departments. To few, very few, staff appointments are His Majesty's Officers eligible, and those few are on the personal, not the general, staff. This is not stated as a grievance, but merely to show that, during a twenty years' service, the same stimulus does not exist in the King's army as in that of the Company to raise the torpid feeling resulting from a long and hopeless banishment. This is also true of His Majesty's soldiery, to the best and bravest of whom no door of promotion is open in India. They there (as in better climates, and during half the period of service) have only the situations in their own regiments to look to. Let us state the case thus:—the King's and the Company's soldier leave their Depots at Chatham on the same day, the King's soldier to serve twenty years—the Company's fourteen. Say they live to return at the expiration of those periods: mark their different conditions. The old soldier of the King, after twenty years' tropical service, if he have health, continues to serve on his return, or, if worn out, receives 6*d.* or 1*s.* per diem pension. The soldier of the Company lands discharged after fourteen years of similar service; but from the lucrative situations he held, he is probably worth some hundred pounds, and may have a pension of fifty or seventy pounds, should he have risen to be a Conductor of Stores, &c. &c. &c. Can it be wondered that officers and soldiers in our regiments in India feel utterly disgusted at being banished under such circumstances for twenty years (and upwards till lately), without even one advantage over their brethren in arms serving in Ceylon. Nay, the advanteges are all on the side of those who serve in the six service companies at Ceylon, who, while they enjoy a better climate generally than that of the Indian Continent, have equal, if not superior, pay and allowances, and have several colonial situations open to them. The regiments there, having their four Company Depots at home, possess the means of abridging the ten years' nominal foreign service, by exchanging periodically the officers and men. From this the regiments in India are precluded in toto. The local regulations there forbid any Captain to apply for leave of absence, unless seven Captains be in the country; and as one is at the depot it follows that only two can ever be on leave. This does not allow for any being sick, and we have known many, many instances of Captains who have been compelled to wait two or three years before the number present in India admitted of their return home. Compare this with the state of regiments in our other foreign stations: in those regiments four Captains are at home! Let us see now the case of the Subalterns in India. Of that class eighteen must be in India before one can obtain leave. In all other corps serving abroad, the complement of Subalterns for four companies is kept at home. Is there arrangement here? If so, it seems to be of the vice versa kind —Funeral order—all reversed. Why are officers and privates alike averse to embarkation for India? Need the answer be given? 'Tis the long and hopeless exile they have to endure in a far land—foreign not only by distance, but in climate, manners, customs, religion, and languages. But what is the boon which the army of His Majesty asks? Is it full batta or full tentage, or staff situations, or civil appointments? No; the King's army (say as some few may) is not on these heads solicitous, and it is assuredly not discontented. The boon our army asks is, a less tardy relief from this land of imaginary wealth and fancied luxury; to be permitted after fifteen years' service in that enervating and relaxing climate, to feel the renovation of European discipline, and the morelising effects of serving among its countrymen; seeing the blessings of English Institutions, and reviving the dormant feelings of veneration for our holy faith, which is, alas! too often left at the Cape, and not taken up on returning from India. Is this boon unreasonable!

We again call on the authorities to consider the possibility of effecting an earlier relief. They have before them proofs, we well know, of the Asiatic state in which our five old regiments are: that state shows the evil of leaving them so long in a land remote from the wholesome control of the Commander-in-Chief. Those regiments have not the advenieges of having the healthy and youthful blood transfused into the diseased and worn-out system, certainly in mere drops at best, and not as in corps, which receive annually from their four company depots, well-instructed, well-conducted, and formed soldiers. No; the Indian regiments are made up chiefly of Volunteers—another name for drunkards—of men whose depraved habits cause them to remain where they can best indulge them. Let our regiments there be relieved faithfully after fifteen years, and that promise alone will keep our men sober, obedient, and contented.

We have had just now placed in our hands a copy of the petition to the House of Commons from Captains David Rae Newall, Thomas William Barrow, and Richard Glasspoole, of the East India Company's Service, and we regret that our limits will not admit of its insertion in our Gazette. Each of these officers performed five voyages as Commanders of the Company's own ships, and had the Company's trade continued, they would have obtained commands in the freight service: they are therefore, most justly entitled to the compensation provided by the Act of Parliament, and yet their claims have been rejected!

The petition of these gallant and deserving officers will be presented to the House of Commons on Monday next; we believe that copies are already in the hands of several Members, and on behalf of the Petitioners, we urge an attentive perusal. These honourable gentlemen seek for a Committee of Inquiry, who, in a single sitting, st most, would be enabled to make a decisive ort. It would be but simple justice to grant r request. We feel assured that the Petitioners look to obtain the support of every Naval, lary, and Civil servant of the Crown having in the House of Commons, as well as the pathy of the public, in their appeal to Parlia-t against the hardship inflicted upon them by extraordinary and incomprehensible rejection eir claims. The professional Members will understand the grievance complained of; for , or a similar question, may one day come e to themselves or relatives.

'e will add that the correspondence shows the claimants have tried every other means re they resolved to appeal to Parliament and ic opinion; and in this appeal they violate no ls of discipline, for they are supported by the gest resolutions of the East India Company; it must be remembered that they are now dis- ed officers, who retain their nominal rank only ho permission of the King, officially stated in Gazette of the 9th of February, 1835.

WHILE the propriety of maintaining a large e of Royal Marines seems to be generally iesced in, it appears somewhat strange that ittle attention is paid to the manner in which fine body of men is officered. We have no ire to say anything that may hurt the feelings ho gallant men who hold commissions in this ps, or impute blame to those whose chief fault ears to be that they labour under the infirmities mon to all of advanced age. The corps of ich we are now writing consists of about nine usand men, divided into one hundred compas, and is officered by twenty-five Field Officers, hundred Captains, one hundred First Lieuants, and eighty Second Lieutenants, among om the promotion is entirely by seniority.
the Field Officers, the junior has served upds of thirty-eight years. We will consider hteen as the average age at which they joined service, and will ask, what fatigue is likely to borne by men, the youngest of whom is fifty-
? When we ask this question, we are well are that occasional instances do occur of men o are still strong, active, and healthy at this iod of life; but we submit it to those acquainted h the Military profession, whether the exers requisite for the proper performance of the y of a Field Officer attached to a regiment on ve service can be sustained by the generality men who have attained this age! We think may venture to anticipate their reply, and ume that they will agree with us in saying that h mental and bodily vigour is not to be ex-ted. But supposing all to be able, we conceive t, among officers of such long standing, it would difficult, even with the usual incentives to ivity, to find men sufficiently zealous to undergo eerfully, in time of war, the privations of foreign rvice. What then can be expected in times of nger and difficulty, but discontent and disgust, hile we promote entirely by seniority, while the od and the bad, the active and the indolent, are assed together, and those have the best chance rising to commands who, avoiding the dangers war, and the destructive influence of climate, ek only to prolong a useless existence.

We have no doubt that Government would adly alter the irrational system of indiscriminate which prevails in the Royal Marines; for even while it is the rule of that corps, they have striven to mitigate the inconvenience to which it subjects them, by an expedient which, however unjust to the individuals, and injurious to the Service, has been forced on them by circumstances not subject to their control. While eight disposable Lieutenant-Colonels are at home, they have given the command of six hundred men on the North Coast of Spain to a Major, and have abstained from attaching any other Field Officers to that force, although they have six Majors at Head-quarters unemployed; thus causing the Field Officer and Senior Captains to perform the duties of the rank next above that for which they receive pay, and preventing those officers from having that general rank and consideration among the troops with which they serve, to which, by the importance of their regimental commands, they are justly entitled.

After the Battle of Navarin, the Lord High Admiral wished to fill up the vacancies caused by the death of those who fell in that action, by promoting the seniors of the respective ranks present in the engagement; this caused great discontent among some of the old officers who had distinguished themselves during the last war, and who were so unfortunate as to be then only Captains or Subalterns. In consequence of the representations and remonstrances of those individuals, the plan was abandoned; but it is probable that something will shortly be done for the old officers of all services, and the Admiralty might avail themselves of the opportunity they will then have to remodel the Marine corps. We think, if they had a scale of retiring pensions, not dependent on rank, but on length of service, and allowed all officers after thirty years' service to claim, at their option, either this stipulated yearly sum, or the full pay of the rank they held, they would be enabled to promote by patronage in all ranks, without injustice to any of the serving individuals, and would thus get rid of that system of advancement which has brought the Marine corps to its present deplorable state.

THE Prussian Official Reply to the Statements made by the Duke of Wellington, and lately published in this paper, before the Committee for inquiring into the practicability of abolishing Corporal Punishment in the British Army, will be found in our columns. The Reply is signed by General Grollmann, now holding the chief Military command in Prussian Poland, and who is considered to be one of the most distinguished Officers in the Prussian Service. It appears, that immediately after the publication of the Duke of Wellington's Opinions, the Prussian Government ordered a full inquiry to be made into the statements advanced by his Grace, and the document we now publish, and which must be regarded by all Military men as a valuable Historical Official Report for future reference, is the result of such inquiry.

THE Metropolitan Magazine for this month, in reviewing Mr. Cranmer Philipps's proposal for a Code of Universal International Signals, takes occasion to recommend the design as an improvement upon all other systems, and the latest, as well as the best, plan for the purpose. This praise is the more creditable and disinterested on the part of Captain Marryatt, seeing that the gallant and talented officer is himself the author of a Code of Signals, now in use in merchant vessels, but which for some reason (probably the expense of the flags and book) has not been so generally adopted as a means so desirable as that of a communication at sea, or with the shore, would have led us to suppose. We have elsewhere expatiated on the benefit which the Mercantile Marine might expect from the exertions of a well-supported society, composed of the leading Shipowners, and this is one of the legitimate objects which that institution should take in hand and accomplish, either by entering into correspondence with similar societies in maritime countries, or, what would be more to the purpose, with the Governments of such, under the auspices of our Minister of Trade, who would doubtless support them, and offer a premium, open to all countries, for the most concise and intelligible mode of communicating in the several languages used by nautical people, to be universally adopted at sea, and at the same time efficient for corresponding with assigned stations on shore.

WE are glad to perceive that our esteemed correspondent
Tristram has undertaken to make apparent the great benefit and utility to this maritime country of such highly respectable communities as the "General Shipowners' Society" and Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping; and we think that, should the Government adopt the course Tristram has suggested, it will have the effect of inducing, if not of compelling, all shipowners to register their vessels under the superintendence of the Society's inspectors, by whom they will be placed in that class which their merits or demerits shall justify after an impartial survey. The shipowners, although a large and wealthy body, possess little influence as a community, in consequence of that want of harmony, liberality, and unanimity, which induces other interests to combine for mutual protection and support. Many hold back from contributing even the smallest trifle to further the interests of the society, on the selfish plea, that, if any general benefit results from their labours, they will partake of it nevertheless; and, indeed, until the leading members can be convinced of the fallacy of those ideas of prohibitory intercourse, which they so fondly cherish, without, it would appear, giving full allowance to the altered position of affairs, we cannot perceive how those of their body who have acuteness enough to see the impossibility of returning to the system of our old navigation laws, and whose every-day experience convinces them of the fallacy of adhering to them, those men, we say, who have tact enough to manage their business and conduct their affairs in the best manner under the altered state of matters, though they may not have the ability to reason upon causes and effects, will mistrust the declamations of philosophers, and, as we imagine, never be induced to contribute universally until certain admissible axioms are laid down, and acted on, instead of disputed theories, to the resistance of which the legislature is strongly opposed. When this becomes the case, we predict that the Society of Shipowners, or whatever name that important national body may be called, will assume that position to the community which their wealth and importance deserves, and we anxiously wish that this desideratum may be accomplished as soon as possible. We invite Tristram to continue his lucubrations.

" Prince Talleyrand," says the Messager, " on leaving alencay, will go to Munich with the Duchess de Dino d her daughter. This journey appears to have a per-nal as well as a political object. A marriage in the use of Talleyrand is reported to be in contemplation."
The Brussels papers assert that a military force, comsed of troops belonging to Bavaria, Wurtemburg, and den, will speedily be sent to the frontiers of Switzernd, on account of the revolutionary intrigues going on ere, and where the arrests continue. The Courrier lge asserts that several changes are about to be made the Belgian Ministry, their Majesties having been nvinced by the indifference displayed on their late urney that some alteration is necessary.
According to a letter from Barcelona, a quarel arose few days since between a French sailor and a soldier of e Spanish regiment of Savoy Infantry, about the pay-ent of a bottle of wine. The Frenchman having weapons attacked the Spaniard with his list, when Spanish cavalry soldier coming up, drew his sword, d without inquiring into the merits of the affray, killed
s sailor on the spot. The murderer, upon the applican of the French Consul, has been arrested, and will be ought to trial.

The King and Queen returned to Windsor Castle on Thursday evening from St. James's. To day the King will hold an Investiture of the Bath, and confer the honour of Knighthood and Invest with the Ribbon and Badge of the Order, the Landgrave of Hesse Homburg, and the two sons of the Prince of Orange. In the evening the King will give a grand banquet in St. George's Hall to the Knights and Officers. His Majesty will hold a Levee on Wednesday; and on Thursday the Queen her last Drawing-room for the season. On Friday there will be a grand dinner at the Palace. The rumour of their Majesties' visit to Hanover this summer is premature. A visit was contemplated sometime since, but the present unsettled state of political affairs renders it doubtful if it will now take place.

The reigning Duke of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, the Hereditary Prince, and the Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg, took leave of her Majesty on Wednesday.

The King has appointed the Earl of Errol to be Lieutenant and Sheriff Principal of the Shire of Aberdeen, in the room of the Duke of Gordon, deceased.

The Duchess of Kent had an assembly at Kensington-palace on Monday evening, at which most of the nobility and gentry, and foreigners of distinction, were present.

The King has appointed John M'Neill, Esq. (whose appointment as his Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary to the Shah of Persia was notified in the Gazette of 9th Feb. last) to be His Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary to the Shah of Persia.

Parliamentary Analysis.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

MONDAY, 6th June.—The LORD CHANCELLOR gave notice that on Monday next he should move the second reading of the Bill for amending the Administration of the Court of Chancery, and also the second reading of the Bill for amending the Appellate Jurisdiction of the House of Lords.—Viscount MELBOURNE laid on the table a Bill to regulate the Universities of Scotland, founded on the report of the Commissioners appointed to inquire into that subject, the second reading of which was fixed for Monday next.

TUESDAY, 7th June.—Lord LYNDHURST presented a petition from a Catholic clergyman of the name of Mullholland, who complained that he was removed from his living by the authority of the Roman Catholic Primate in Ireland, for having brought an action in a civil court against a brother clergyman, and praying that their Lordships would afford him some redress. Lord HOLLAND thought that this was a petition which their Lordships ought not to receive, or at all events upon which they should not act. The Earl of WICKLOW supported the petition. Lord MELBOURNE doubted the prudence and policy of presenting the petition, as it was clearly an appeal to the public under cover of a petition to that House, into the merits of which petition the House could not enter. A lengthened and spirited discussion ensued, in which the Duke of Wellington, the Marquess of Lansdowne, Lord Holland, the Marquess of Westmeath, and Lord Dunsmuir took part. Ultimately the petition was ordered to lie upon the table.

THURSDAY, 9th June.—The Postage Duties Bill was read a third time and passed.—The Earl of WICKLOW withdrew his motion for the production of papers relative to certain proceedings which had been adopted in the Court of Exchequer in Ireland on the subject of writs of rebellion; his reason for withdrawing his motion was, that the decision had been appealed against.—The Marquess of CLANRICARDE postponed the Roman Catholic Marriages Bill until the Dissenters Marriages Bill should be brought up from the House of Commons.

FRIDAY, 10th June.—The Duke of Newcastle presented a petition from the Nottingham Operative Conservative Association in favour of the Irish Municipal Corporation Bill as amended by the House of Lords. The Noble Duke trusted that the House would not give way to any intimidation, let it come from whatever quarter it might. The Noble Duke also presented a petition from the Protestant Association, held at Exeter Hall in May last, to the same effect. The petition occasioned a long and animated discussion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 6th June.—Lord PALMERSTON stated that the treaty of commerce with Portugal having expired, and that negotiations for a new treaty were in progress, no efforts should be wanting to persuade the Government of Portugal to conclude one upon principles of just reciprocity.—Earl JERMYN presented a petition from Bury St. Edmunds, complaining of the appointment of some magistrates, and the non-appointment of others. Lord JOHN RUSSELL defended the appointments.—On the motion being made, that the House resolve itself into a committee on the Registration of Births, &c., Bill, Sir E. CODRINGTON rose to move, in pursuance of notice, for a return of the names of all officers of whatever rank who have been deprived of their half-pay without their consent, or the Investigation of a Court Martial, from the year 1790 up to the present period; and also a return of any persons whose half-pay has been restored to them subsequently to such deprivation, with the alleged reasons for such restoration. He had been more than two years endeavouring to bring this subject before the House, but had hitherto been prevented by no fault of his own. It was a hardship peculiar to the Army and Navy, that officers of any rank or standing were liable to be struck off the list, and deprived of half-pay, without trial, or even without knowing the nature of the offence alleged against them. It brought every sort of indignity upon the service, on the Navy in particular. He had good authority for the course he was now pursuing. The Member for Tamworth had on a former night pleaded the cause of the clergy of Ireland, and had compared their incomes of 800*l.* a-year with the pay to the door-keepers of the House of Commons. He agreed that the clergy of Ireland were in a hard situation; but he did not think that they had so great a cause to complain as the officers in the Navy. He held in his hand a list of Post-captains, some of whom had served 35 years and were only receiving 264*l.* a-year; others had served 30 years, and were receiving 228*l.*; while others had no more than 191*l.* a-year. He saw on the list the name of a Commander who had been in the service 50 years, and was only receiving 182*l.* 10*s.* a year, and if he were to be promoted to-morrow, after such a period of service, he could never receive more than 191*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* Let them compare this with the condition of the clergy of Ireland, and then he trusted those who pleaded so forcibly the cause of that clergy would with equal earnestness support him on this occasion. No men were more exposed to danger than those engaged in the Naval service. Peace was no period of quiet to them. They were on deck four hours a day let the weather be whatever it might, and this service they were required to perform until they were made captains; they were disproportionately paid, and beyond this they were subject to the extraordinary power of being struck off the list without any reason assigned, and without being allowed to understand the grounds on which they were to be deprived of their pay. He moved for these returns, therefore, not as it had been said from mere curiosity, but in order that those persons who had been scratched off the list might have an opportunity to come forward and prove their innocence and maintain their rights. Lord J. RUSSELL having opposed the motion on the ground of irregularity, the Gallant Admiral gave notice that he should renew the motion at a future period. The House then went into committee on the Bill, when the clauses, up to the 83rd (inclusive), were, after some discussion, agreed to.

TUESDAY, 7th June.—The Aberavon Harbour Bill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. EWART presented a petition from the inhabitants of Malta, complaining of certain grievances, and praying for redress. Similar petitions were presented by Mr. HOLLAND and Mr. HUME.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER intimated the intention of Government to introduce one or more Bills founded on the recommendations of the Commissioners of the Post-office.—Mr. WAKLEY inquired whether it was true that a disease resembling the plague had appeared in London within the last few days. Mr. P. THOMPSON gave the most unqualified contradiction to the rumour.—Mr. TULK brought forward his motion in favour of the claims of Mr. Buckingham on the East India Company, and the discussion which ensued occupied a considerable time. Ultimately Mr. Tulk's motion

…s lost by n considerable majority; the numbers being, …r the motion, 60; against it, 92; majority, 32.—…e Bankrupts' Fund Bill was read o third time and …ssed.

WEDNESDAY, 8th June.—The Galway Improvements …ill was read a third time and passed.—Mr. LOCH pre…nted a petition from the fishermen of Wick, complain…g of certain grievances to which they are subject; upon …hich Mr. LABOUCHERE assured the Hon. Member that …e subject was under the consideration of the Board of …rade, with a view to a removal of those grievances.—…a select committee was appointed to inquire into the …fficient modes in which land has been and is at present …rposed of in the British Colonies, with a view to ascer…n that mode which would be most beneficial in future …th to the colonies and to the mother country.—The …eam Vessels (Thames) Bill was read a second time.—…r R. Musgrave, Mr. S. O'Brien, and Mr. P. Scrope, …thdrew their Bills for the relief of the poor in Ireland, being assured by Lord Morpeth that Government …ould take the first opportunity in the next session to bring …rward a complete and satisfactory measure for the …lief of the poor of Ireland.—The remainder of the …ening was occupied with the consideration of the Fish…es Bill and the Oyster Fisheries Bill, which were …spectively forwarded a stage.

THURSDAY, 9th June.—The Thames Haven Rail…y and Dock Bill was read a third time and passed.—…r. ROBINSON postponed his motion on the subject of …r commercial relations with Portugal till 7th July.—…r. BUCKINGHAM obtained leave to bring in a Bill for …e protection of copyright of prints and engravings in …eland. Lord J. RUSSELL moved the order of the day …r taking into consideration the Lords' amendments to …e Bill relating to municipal corporations in Ireland. …he Noble Lord stated the view taken by the Govern…ent of these amendments, and the course they meant …pursue. They proposed that the towns in Schedules …A and B of the original Commons' Bill, shall, toge…er with Carrickfergus, making in all 12, (Belfast, …ork, Dublin, Galway, Kilkenny, Limerick, Waterford, …lonmel, Drogheda, Londonderry, Sligo, and Carrick…rgus,) be placed in one schedule, and all the clauses …hich the Lords have struck out revived, with the view …f applying them to the above-mentioned towns—in …ther words, corporations are to be established in those …wns. The remainder of the towns in the schedules …f the original Bill are not to be corporations, but are to …e brought under the operation of the act of 9 G. IV., …nd all corporate property, together with the power of …ppointing local officers, will be made over to the com…issioners elected under that act. These towns again …ill be divided into two schedules: in the towns in the …rst the commissioners will be elected by the 10*l.* house…alders, while in the towns in the second they will be …ected by the 5*l.* householders. The adoption of the …t of 9 Geo. IV. will be compulsory in the first class of …ese towns, but it will be voluntary in the second. The …fference, therefore, between the measure he proposed …d that of the Lords was this,—namely, that his in…ted upon local government, while that of the Lords …nsferred the government of localities to the Executive. …fter a debate, which occupied the remainder of the …ght, the question was adjourned.

FRIDAY, 10th June.—A report was presented from …e South Durham Railway Committee, announcing a …rsonal fracas in the course of the day between Colonel …F. TRENCH and Mr. RIGBY WASON, while sitting as …embers of the Committee. Both the Hon. Members …re ordered to attend forthwith in their places. Col. …rench happened to enter the House at the moment, …d was of course served with the Speaker's Order.—…r. HUME presented a petition from the Legislative …ssembly of Upper Canada. The petitioners, after re…ing various grievances, referred to the evils of irres…nsible legislation, which had been most injurious to …e interests of that country, and which compelled them …t year to stop the supplies. Sir G. GREY said the …tition contained charges against the character of the …overnor of Canada. ## Foreign and Colonial Intelligence FRANCE.—The journals are speculating upon some immediate alterations in the Cabinet. The rumoured changes would more pointedly affect Marshal Maison, the Minister of War: his successor would probably be either General Guilleminot or Marshal Molitor. M. Pelet (de la Lozere), to be superseded in the Ministry of Public Instruction by M. Vivien, and M. Duchatel (late Minister of Commerce) to succeed M. D'Argout, in the Ministry of Finance. The Marquis of Dalmatia, Marshal Soult's eldest son, the Ambassador at the Hague, has been recalled.

SPAIN.—During the absence of Conlova, Espartero is to have the command-in-chief. It is believed that Cordova will be back about the 10th. There has been some skirmishing before St. Sebastian, but of no importance. Letters from Madrid of the 1st state that all the Procuradores holding office, who voted against the Government on the 21st May, have been dismissed from office. The Madrid journals of the 3d, inst. announce that a junta had established itself at Malaga; but its attempts at an insurrection have been unsuccessful. The junta was displaced on the 26th.—On the 22d May serious disturbances, which lasted three days, and in which ten Carlists were assassinated, broke out at Carthagena. The National Guard ultimately succeeded in restoring order; forty of the factions were seized and shipped for Cadiz. The Governor has been dismissed by the Government.—Advices from Bayonne of the 7th confirm the account of the last attack attempted by the Carlists upon the line from St. Sebastian to Passages. The attack was made by ten battalions, which were repulsed at all points, with a loss of 800 men. Up to the first of this month nothing new had passed at Vittoria.

PORTUGAL.—Accounts from Lisbon tend to confirm the hopes entertained of the Queen's giving an heir to the throne. The provinces are much disturbed.

UNITED STATES.—The New York papers last received, which come down to the 17th ult., are chiefly occupied with documents and details referring to the Texian war, and the measures taken by the President for the protection of the United States' frontier on the side approached by the belligerents. The following fact may be left to make its own impression:—

"At St. Louis, on the 28th ultimo. a negro, in assisting another man of colour to escape from a Sheriff's officer, killed the officer, and afterwards stabbed another person who attacked him. He was lodged in gaol, though not till his arm was broken by a brickbat. A mob then collected, who threatened to burn the gaol unless he were given up to them. Resistance was useless; they seized him, chained him to a tree, and burned him alive."

DOMINICA.—Sir Murray M'Gregor has arrived and addressed the Council and House of Assembly. The address expresses the satisfaction of the Governor to learn that dissensions between the employers and employed are now very rare in the island, and that the peasantry evince an increasing aptitude for the discreet and industrious use of the privileges eventually to be conferred upon them.

Theatres.

KING'S THEATRE.—L'Assedio di Corinto was performed at this theatre on Tuesday evening for the first time this season, and was highly relished by a crowded and fashionable audience. Although we consider this opera exceedingly elaborate and scientific, we by no means like it as well as Tancredi, Otello, La Gazza Ladra, and other works of Rossini's. The orchestral accompaniments to The Siege of Corinth are full of skilful and ornamental passages, of a very striking and pleasing character. Those pieces which struck us as the best, were, in act the first, Mahomet's opening scene, commencing "Sorgete, e in sì bel giorno;" in act the second, Pamira's air, "Dall' asilo dello Pace;" in act the third, the trio for two tenors and soprano, the air, "E ha ver mi, Signor;" and the grand scena, beginning "L'ora fatal s'appressa." The opera had the advantage of being extremely well cast. The character of Pamira could not have had a finer representative than Grisi, either as regards the acting or the singing. Her execution of the music was beautifully chaste, her intonation remarkably clear and brilliant, and her expression displayed marks of a fine originality of style. Her execution of the brilliant scena in the third act, "L'ora fatal s'appressa," was one of the most splendid efforts with which our musical sense was ever delighted,—the surprising manner in which she coursed through two octaves by semitones, was perfectly astonishing. Take her for all in all, she is a most wonderful, and certainly an unrivalled, genius. For freshness and purity of tone, she is not to be equalled by any vocalist of the present day. The Mahomet of Tamburini was a spirited performance; nothing could be finer than the style in which he executed the scena beginning "SORGETE"—it was perfect. Rubini was heard to great advantage in the scena commencing "E' fia vir mi Signor," it was the gem of the opera in point of composition, and could not have been better sung. The scenery and decorations are both deserving of favourable mention.

LYCEUM.—A melo-dramatic sketch, in one short act entitled Matteo Falconi, was produced at this house on Monday evening, and met with a tolerably fair reception from a very well-filled theatre. In plot or situation this sketch cannot lay claim to the slightest novelty: it is merely the pursuit and capture of a Brigand leader by a Corporal and half-a-dozen soldiers. The piece serves to introduce an effective dance—the Tarantella, which was spiritedly executed by Mr. M'Ian and Miss Gilbert, and loudly encored. Mrs. Keeley, as a Brigand boy, acted a trifling part with her usual ability. We are glad to hear that this theatre has done pretty well up to the present time, for the season here cannot be said to have commenced until the two large winter theatres close.

Law and Police.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, June 9.—Napier v. Daniel and Another.—This was an action of libel, brought by Colonel Napier, against the defendants, for saying of the plaintiff that he had committed an assault upon a person, and then run away, and afterwards compromised it by the payment of a sum of money. The defendants pleaded that the alleged libel was true. At the trial before Mr. Baron Bolland, on the Spring Western Circuit, the jury interrupted his Lordship when summing up the case, to say that they were of opinion that the plaintiff had not run away. His Lordship, however, proceeded to sum up the whole of the case, after which the jury retired for about two hours, when they returned a general verdict for the defendants. A rule was obtained in a subsequent term to show cause why a verdict should not be entered for the plaintiff on this issue, on the ground that the jury had negatived one of the material facts necessary to sustain the defendant's plea of justification. The rule came on for argument to-day, and the Court were unanimous, that any opinion which fell from the jury in the course of the trial could not be mixed up with or qualify their solemn verdict, found, after deliberation, at the conclusion of the trial, and therefore the rule must be discharged.

BAIL COURT, 9th June.—Camac v. Rainsford and Hannay.—Mr. Justice Coleridge disposed of the rule in this matter, for setting aside an annuity-deed for securing an annuity of 618*l.* 9*s.* granted by Mrs. Anne Gib, wife of Capt. Gib, of Edinburgh, to the plaintiff, Colonel John Camac, and secured by the defendants. His Lordship observed, that the transaction was not creditable to the parties, but his opinion was, that the annuity deed and securities were void under the statute, in not setting forth the true consideration actually given for the purchase of the annuity, and he directed a reference to the Master to ascertain the real worth of the plaintiff's leasehold house in Clarges-street, and what the wines, plate, pictures, furniture, &c., which formed the true consideration for the annuity, actually produced upon their sale; and that upon repayment of that sum the grantee of the annuity, Colonel Camac, should deliver up all the deeds and securities to be vacated, and that he should also pay the costs of the application.

At Marlborough-street Police Office, on Wednesday, a red-faced jolly-looking son of Neptune, who gave his name Jack Robinson, was brought up in custody on the charge of having refused to pay the legal fare for the hire of the cabriolet No. 735. Jack, on being asked why he objected to pay complainant his demand, placed his arms a kimbo and said, "My noble lord and gentlemen, the plain truth of the matter, without any gammon or nonsense at all, is this here—I came over in the Spartan from New York, and landed at Bristol, when I directly brought myself to an anchor a-top of a stage, and got into London yesterday. Well, I happened somehow or another to be steering along Ratcliffe-highway, where I had just spoke with a shipmate, when up comes this land-lubber and axed me if I wanted a ride; so I set sail in his craft, and told him to cut on like lightning to Tottenham-court road, but afore I got into my berth I says, says I, now, mate, what's the price of the passage? and he agreed to land me for two bob, with the understanding, my Lord, that on the road I was to stand grog for us both, which I did, and when I got out I offered him the blunt, but he would'nt have it, and said he should charge for time instead of distance. Avast there, my lad, says I, I shan't pay it, so you may do your best and be d—d, and with that he calls this blue-coated fellow (pointing to a policeman), who locked me up in a little square crib, worse than the black-hole in Calcutta. This, my Lord (making a profound bow and scraping his foot on the floor, in true sailor-like style), is the whole truth, and no gammon whatsomever." Jack Robinson was discharged.

HE LATE CAPTAIN JAMES HORSBURGH, E.I.C.S.

APTAIN HORSBURGH was born in 1762, of humble, s, and respectable parents, at the village of Elie, on outh-eastern coast of Fifeshire. His early years spent in the active engagements of country life; while the herdy employments of field labour esshed the firmness of his bodily constitution, the rural uits of searching among the cliffs for eagles' nests, or ng for amusement the high rocks surrounding his e village, awakened that enterprising and daring t, which, favoured by the circumstance of the marilocality of Elie, on the shore of the Frith of Forth, in the immediate neighbourhood of many small seaa, where ship-building was carried on to a considerextent, so early developed itself in determining his erence for a sea life. He commenced his career as and cabin boy, and having devoted a large portion he best years of his life to his professional duties on -board, and constant service in connexion with the gation of the East, he became intimately familiar every subject of practical importance and scientific ing in reference to East India Hydrography, and, ugh a long period of experience, uniform good con, and display of sterling merit, he became at length oxander of the Anna East Indiaman. In this vessel et sail from England in 1802, and having reached obay, passed two years in coasting the peninsula of o, visiting Canton and the China sea, and traversing islands of the Indian Archipelago, when, after fulfilthe object of his voyage, he returned to England in 5. Soon after his arrival, he laid before the Royal iety, in a letter to the Hon. H. Cavendish, the results is meteorological observations during the voyage; and is paper, afterwards printed in the Philosophical nsactions, he detailed the progress of that remarkable lerity in the rising and falling of the barometer h so peculiarly distinguishes the tropical regions, becomes disturbed or lost again with an increase of ude in the station of observation, and discussed the re of the circumstances under which it became manl- or gradually disappeared as the ship in her progress nately crossed the Line, and advanced into higher hern or southern latitudes. He soon after laid be- the public the narrative or "memoirs" of his voyage, he married in Oct. of the same year. In 1806 he n to collect the materials for his work, the "East s Sailing Directory." This invaluable record of ain H.'s laborious and useful life, and which has ered his name familiar to the navigators of every time nation of the world, was the result of five years' fatigable research and accurate investigation into the als and documents in possession of the E. I. Comp., so great was Capt. H.'s ardour in the pursuit of his rite object, that, in the coldest weather, he has been n to remain for hours in the cellars of the India se—the archives of the Company, continuing his reches, and unwilling to remit his labours. It assumed rst complete form in 1811, and having engaged his tant attention during the subsequent years of his life, were still remaining for correction, at his decease, proof sheets of the work, to effect its final com-on.

Literary Notices.

Posthumous Memoirs of his own Time. By Sir N. W. Wraxall, Bart. Author of "Memoirs of my own Time." 3 vols. Richard Bentley.

WHOEVER wishes to become acquainted with the political intrigues, and the state of fashionable society, during the last half century, when so many remarkable characters, male and female, existed, and when such unprecedented public events arose, should read the present excessively amusing Memoirs of Sir William Wraxall, whose intimate acquaintance with the distinguished personages of his time, and whose position as a Member of Parliament, rendered him cognizant of matters, in the knowledge of which few even of that day participated. In short, to use a familiar phrase, Sir William was "behind the curtain;" and although he could not, during his own life, or that of George IV., permit his present memoirs to be published, he left his manuscript, carefully revised, to be laid before the world at what he prescribed to be the fitting season. We do not hesitate to say that the volumes before us contain the richest materials for history; that they realize what Miss Hawkins, we believe, termed a "rich harvest of anecdotage;" and that the author has thrown as much light on the latter parts of the reign of George the Third, and on the period of the Regency, as Horace Walpole has done on the court of the preceding monarch. Like Walpole, too, Sir William Wraxall is not content with recording the manœuvres of statesmen, and the "madness of party," but includes in his Memoirs abundance of private anecdote, particularly as regards the courtly beauties of the day. Thus, if the Earl of Orford regaled his readers with a thousand exquisite stories of the Duchess of Buckingham, Lady Vane, Lady Townshend, the Duchess of Marlborough, and other famous women—Wraxall gives us sketches and reminiscences of the Duchesses of Devonshire, Gordon, Rutland, Richmond, and Manchester; of the Countess of Besborough, the Marchioness of Salisbury, Mrs. Crewe, Mrs. Fitzherbert, and, indeed, of all the influential beauties of the era. In many respects, indeed, the Memoirs before us, though they are not in the epistolary form, may be considered as a continuation of Walpole's courtly letters.

It would be impossible, in our limits, to indicate a tithe of the subjects on which Sir William has exercised his memory and his amusing talents. We may, however, mention that he has given, at some length, the particulars, many of them till now unknown, of the mental alienation of George III., of the unfortunate destiny of his sister, Caroline, Queen of Denmark, whose romantic, but hitherto secret history, is now given in an authentic shape, of the parliamentary struggles of Pitt and Fox, of the rise and fall of Richard Brinsley Sheridan, and of the Carlton-house revels during the gayest time of the Prince of Wales. We must be content with only one extract, taken at random, descriptive of an amusing scene between the Prince and Lady Clermont.

"About this time, Count Fersen, then the Swedish envoy at the court of France, who was well known to be highly acceptable to Marie Antoinette, visited London; bringing letters of introduction from the Duchess de Polignac, to many persons of distinction here, and, in particular, for Lady Clermont. Desirous to show him the utmost attention, and to present him in the best company, soon after his arrival she conducted him in her own carriage to Lady William Gordon's assembly, in Piccadilly, one of the most distinguished in the metropolis. She had scarcely entered the room, and made Count Fersen known to the principal individuals of both sexes, when the Prince of Wales was announced. I shall recount the sequel in Lady Clermont's own words to me, only a short time subsequent to the fact.

"His royal highness took no notice of me on his first arrival; but, in a few minutes afterwards, coming up to me, 'Pray, Lady Clermont,' said he, 'is that man whom I see here Count Fersen, the queen's favourite?'—'The gentleman,' answered I, 'to whom your royal Highness alludes, is Count Fersen; but so far from being a favourite of the queen, he has not yet been presented at court.'—'God d—n me!' exclaimed he, 'you don't imagine I mean my mother?'—'Sir,' I replied, 'when ever you are pleased to use the word queen without any addition, I shall always understand it to mean my queen. If you speak of any other queen, I must entreat that you will be good enough to say the Queen of France, or of Spain.' The Prince made no reply; but, after having walked once or twice round Count Fersen, returning to me, 'He's certainly a very handsome fellow,' observed he. 'Shall I have the honour, Sir,' said I, 'to present him to you?' He instantly turned on his heel, without giving me any answer; and I soon afterwards quitted Lady William Gordon's house, carrying Count Fersen with me. We drove to Mrs. St. John's, only a few doors distant, who had likewise a large party on that evening. When I had introduced him to various persons there, I said to him, 'Count Fersen, I am an old woman, and infirm, who always go home to bed before eleven. You will, I hope, amuse yourself. Good night.' Having thus done the honours as well as I could, to a stranger who had been so highly recommended to me, I withdrew into the anti-chamber, and sate down along in a corner, waiting for my carriage. While there, the Prince came in; and I naturally expected, after his recent behaviour, that he would rather avoid than accost me. On the contrary, advancing up to me, 'What are you doing here, Lady Clermont?' asked he.—'I am waiting for my coach, Sir,' said I, 'in order to go home.'—'Then,' replied he, 'I will put you into it, and give you my arm down the stairs.'—'For heaven's sake, Sir,' I exclaimed, 'don't attempt it! I am old, very lame, and my sight is imperfect. The consequence of your offering me your arm will be, that in my anxiety not to detain your royal Highness, I shall hurry down, and probably tumble from the top of the staircase to the foot.'—'Very likely,' answered he; 'but, if you tumble, I shall tumble with you. Be assured, however, that I will have the pleasure of assisting you, and placing you safely in your carriage.' I saw that he was determined to repair the rudeness with which he had treated me at Lady William Gordon's, and I therefore acquiesced. He remained with me till the coach was announced, conversed most agreeably on various topics, and as he took care of me down the stairs, enjoined me at every step not to hurry myself. Nor did he quit me when seated in the carriage, remaining uncovered on the steps of the house till it drove off from the door. I have recounted this anecdote at more length than it may seem to merit, because, trifling as are the circumstances which compose it, they prove how gracefully the Prince of Wales could redeem an error. Louis the Fourteenth himself was not his superior in all the external attributes of a king that depend on manner; though in personal majesty, and the fine bodily proportions which constitute manly dignity of form, the Prince could sustain no competition with the son of Anne of Austria.

Lord Roldan, a Romance. By Allan Cunningham. 3 Vols. John Macrone.

If there is any thing to find fault with in these volumes, it is the introduction of matter having reference to historical and political events of modern date, which are fresh in our recollection, and therefore appear to us as not exactly adapted for romance; but throughout the work there is pleasing evidence of the elegant taste and imagination of one of the delightful poets of Scotland, and had he confined himself to scenes and events of his native land he might have added materially to his literary fame.

Narrative of the Arctic Land Expedition to the Mouth of the Great Fish River, and along the Shores of the Arctic Ocean, in 1833, 1834, and 1835. By Captain Beck, R.N., Commander of the Expedition. John Murray.

THE objects and results of this Expedition are well known to the world, but this work will be read and admired as the plain straight-forward narrative of a gallant sailor, a man of science and sound judgment. The volume is full of interesting facts for the historian, amusing from anecdote and style, and moreover well illustrated.

The Mountain Decameron, a Romance of Wales. By JOSEPH DOWNES. 3 vols. Richard Bentley.

WE had with pleasure a work of fiction, of which the object is to illustrate Welsh manners, scenery, character, and traditions. Scotland and Ireland have been rendered more familiar to English readers, through the medium of historical romance, than by history itself: but Wales, though abounding in the finest materials for the imagination of the novelist, has not hitherto found a pen able and willing to do her honour. Yet who can regard with indifference her glorious mountains, her secluded lakes, her rushing rivers, her pastoral vales, or the wild grandeur of her sea-coast? Or who can investigate the peculiar character of her inhabitants, or hear even one of her many striking legends, and not be instantly convinced that no country exists in the world fitter to afford subjects for romance of the deepest and most enduring interest? The present author, therefore, is fortunate in being the first to explore this untrodden field; and his great genius will probably leave at considerable distance all who attempt to follow him. In descriptions of external nature, his style is at once the most picturesque and the most original of any that has of late come before us. Strength, grandour, fearlessness, and eloquence, are his characteristics; and he is equally happy in presenting his readers with the soothing images of rural quiet, as in bringing before them the terrific effects of tempest on the sea or among the everlasting mountains. But these attributes of his talent yield in value to the skill with which he penetrates into that mysterious, and often fearful world, the heart of man. If he here occasionally finds a paradise, he more frequently discovers a hell, into which, like Dante, (though without the guide which accompanied the Italian) he descends, and, having there pursued his solitary way, returns with fearful revelations, disclosed with the passionate earnestness of a poet, and the wisdom of a philosopher. It is impossible, we think, to read the first story of his Decameron ("The Tragical Passion of Mar-maduke Poull") and not be convinced that in construction of plot and development of incident,—in the power of exciting intense curiosity and interest,—in dramatic portraiture of character influenced by strange and trying circumstance,—in pathos, and in that vividness of description which places one in the very midst of the scenes delineated—the author has but few equals, and no superior. The moods of passion, too, with which he deals, and the moral influences which he analyses, have, through the timidity of other writers, hardly ever been approached. If our readers love to have their sympathies aroused by what is bold in conception, and no less daring in execution, let them at once betake themselves to the pages of "The Mountain Decameron."

Stanfield's Coast Scenery. Parts 9 and 10. Smith, Elder, and Co.

These parts complete a most beautiful and attractive publication. The volume contains forty plates, representing some of the most picturesque objects in coast scenery from the matchless drawings of the marine painter, Stanfield, exquisitely engraved by our most admired artists. The descriptive letter-press is also of considerable interest, and we may add that, in every respect, the work merits general patronage, and is creditable to the spirited publishers.

BLUE INK.

You ask me, Edward, what I think
Of this new fashionable ink?
I'll answer briefly, Ned.
Methinks it will be always blue;
At all events, when used by you,
It never will be red.

Dandies.—A witty lady was, the other day, remarking on the lower order of petty clerks, milliners' and drapers' shopmen, &c. (not to mention buss cads and cab drivers), who ape dandyism in their appearance, wear bits of or prodigious mustachios, as if they were engaged in horrible warfare, and infest the streets with their smoke and filth. "Poor creatures! (she said,) I am always sorry for them; they spend all their little earnings on tobacco, and cannot afford to keep themselves cleaned and shaved!"

FRANKS'S SPECIFIC SOLUTION OF COPAIBA.

A CERTAIN and MOST SPEEDY CURE for all URETHRAL DISCHARGES, GLEETS, SPASMODIC STRICTURES, IRRITATION of the KIDNEYS, BLADDER, URETHRA, and PROSTATE GLAND.

TESTIMONIALS.

From JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, Esq., F.R.S., one of the Council of the Royal College of Surgeons, Surgeon to St. Thomas's Hospital, and Professor of Surgery in King's College, London.

"I have made trial of Mr. Franks's Solution of Copaiba, at St. Thomas's Hospital, in a variety of cases of discharges in the male and female, and the results warrant my stating, that it is an efficacious remedy, and one which does not produce the usual unpleasant effects of Copaiba (Signed) "JOSEPH HENRY GREEN, "46, Lincoln's Inn Fields, April 15, 1835."

From BRANSBY COOPER, Esq., F.R.S., Surgeon to Guy's Hospital, and Lecturer on Anatomy, &c. &c.

"Mr. Bransby Cooper presents his compliments to Mr. George Franks, and has great pleasure in bearing testimony of the efficacy of his Solution of Copaiba in Gonorrhœa, for which disease Mr. Cooper has prescribed the Solution in ten or twelve cases with perfect success. "New-street, Spring Gardens, April 13, 1835."

From WILLIAM HANTSCH, Esq., No. 3, Furnival's Inn, Holborn, late House Surgeon to the Free Hospital, Greville street, Hatton Garden.

"My Dear Sir,—I have given your Medicine in very many cases of Gonorrhœa and Gleets, some of which had been many months under other treatment, and can bear testimony to its great efficacy. I have found it to cure in a much shorter time, and with more benefit to the general health, than any other mode of treatment I know of; the generality of cases have been cured within a week from the commencement of taking the Medicine, and some of them in less time than that. Have the goodness to send me another supply. I am, dear Sir, yours very truly, (Signed) "WILLIAM HANTSCH.

"April 13, 1835."

STIRLING REES' ESSENCE—Its vast and increasing sale, from the recommendation of the highest Medical characters, as well as those who have experienced its salubrious and beneficial effects, proves its great success and superiority over every other preparation, in being the most safe and effectual remedy ever discovered for the Cure of Gonorrhœa, Gleets, Seminal Weakness, Strictures, Fluor Albus, or Whites, Pains in the Loins, Kidneys, Lumbago, Gravel, Irritation of the Bladder, Urethra, and every Disease incident to the Sexual and Urinary Organs, frequently performing a perfect cure in the short space of three or four days. It contains, in a concentrated state, all the efficacious parts of the Cubeb, chemically combined with Sarsaparilla, Buchu, and other choice alteratives, which renders it invaluable to those afflicted with secondary Syphilitic Symptoms, Pains of the Bones, Ulcers, Pimples, Blotches, Scurbutic Eruptions, Glandular Swellings, and all diseases arising from a tainted and impure state of the blood. In cases of Debility, Want of Power, both Local and General, Tabes Dorsalis, Diabetes, Wasting Impotence, and Nervous Depression of Spirits it has been taken with the most decided benefit. A regular perseverance in its use has invariably been found to improve the appetite, assist the digestive powers, and give muscular strength, energy, and vigorous health to the whole system. The most delicate female may take it with perfect safety. It is an excellent restorative after the constitution has been weakened or injured by mercurial or from any other cause.

Prepared only by the Proprietor, J. W. STIRLING, 86, High-street, Whitechapel, from whom it can be sent to any part of the world, upon enclosing a remittance, and any part of London (carriage free), in Bottles, at 4s. 6d., 10s., and 20s. each.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The Proprietor being apprised of several unprincipled Medicine Vendors, who, when applied to for this remedy, substitute, under the name of Cubebs, Sarsaparilla, &c., a worthless and injurious article of their own make, feels it is an imperative duty to say, that it is absolutely necessary, before purchasing, to see the name "J. W. Stirling," Whitechapel, is engraved on the Government stamp affixed outside the wrapper on the bottle, without which it cannot be genuine.

THE TEETH.

MR. A. JONES, SURGEON-DENTIST, to H. R. H. the Princess AUGUSTA, and the Duchess of Gloucester, has at length discovered a plan for fixing Artificial Teeth, which cannot fail to give entire satisfaction to the [illegible]. This skilful construction combines security and ease [illegible] most efficient power for every requisite of mastication [illegible] also adding support to any loose teeth; neither [illegible] springs are used. This plan claims attention and has [illegible] recommendation of the most eminent physi[illegible] and [illegible] from reference may be made. The Anodyne [illegible] to Mr. A. JONES, preserves for many [illegible] decayed teeth, allaying the pain and restoring [illegible] gum.—34, Lower Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 until 3. Mr. Jones is totally unconnected with any other Dentist in London.

HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL, unequalled for promoting the Growth of the Hair, preserving it from decay, and restoring it if injured or destroyed, rendering it of a fine, soft, silky appearance, and sustaining it in curl under the different varieties of atmosphere.

Prepared by Messrs. HANNAY and CO.,

Perfumers to the Royal Family, No. 62, Oxford Street, London.

Although long possessed of the secret, Messrs. Hannay and Co. were precluded from submitting this invaluable addition to the Toilet for public patronage during the lifetime of the individual who divulged it to them, or whose head would inevitably have paid the forfeit of its disclosure, the parties successively employed in its preparation being bound under the most solemn oaths of secrecy; and it has been kept in private upwards of three centuries.

A fine head of hair has, from the remotest ages, been esteemed the greatest ornament of Female Beauty, and in the rudest and most uncivilized countries great value is set upon a fine head of hair. The great care is proverbial that is paid to the cultivation of the luxuriant tresses of the fair captives of the Harem, and art is there well known to succeed in outvalling even the far-famed beauties of Circassia.

The Oriental Oil has been employed for the purpose during the period of three centuries, and has been found unfailingly successful in producing that object of all desires—a fine, long, soft, and silky head of hair.

Messrs. Hannay and Co. do not profess, as is done in some instances) that the properties of the Oriental Oil will produce hair upon cast iron—it will do no such thing; but, if regularly applied, it will re-produce the hair where nature ordained its existence, if lost from those causes to which baldness is referable; it will promote the growth of the hair generally,

PREVENT ITS FALLING OFF OR TURNING GREY,

sustain it in curl, render it fine and soft as silk, and impart a brilliant lustre for which it has no equal. The Oriental Oil is a pure LIMPID, WHITE, VEGETABLE SUBSTANCE, unsophisticated with the deleterious articles usually employed to dye Oils red, which are equally injurious to the skin as to the hair, and although an oily substance, the

and is therefore free from the general complaint against every other article in present use for the same purpose, including those filthy substances miscalled Bears' Grease, which are neither more nor less than a composition of Hog's Lard and Whale Oil submitted to various manipulations to divest them of the fetid animal smell.

The laws of nature throughout creation exhibit one uniform principle. Vegetation, it is well known, derives from the dews of the atmosphere a great portion of its support, and deprive it of which it soon withers and dies; so the hair, unless properly nourished, becomes weak and gradually drops off; for, minute as a single hair appears, if examined with a microscope the human hair will be found a perfectly hollow tube, with the surface covered with minute and innumerable pores resembling the skin, and which, if allowed to absorb anything of an injurious tendency, the hair is destroyed thereby: thus it will be observed that those persons subject to profuse perspiration become bald early in life, which is merely caused by the acid caustic nature of the perspiration settling on the hair and being absorbed, which entirely destroys it; but if the Oriental Oil be daily applied, it will prevent this taking place and preserve the hair free from injury, and if regularly applied to the heads of infants, it entirely removes the scurf, without the assistance of the dandruff combs, an operation so distressing to the heads of children.

Price 3s. 6d., 6s. 6d., and in phut bottles, with glass stoppers, 12s. each.

N.B.—HANNAY and CO.'s ORIENTAL OIL is particularly recommended to the notice of Merchants and Shippers Trading to the East and West Indies, being the only article for the hair that will survive a voyage to the East without turning rancid.

32, Great Russell street, Bloomsbury, and
No. 10, Ludgate-hill.

MONSIEUR MALLAN and SONS, Surgeon Dentists, respectfully acquaint their Friends and the Public, that for the better convenience of their City connexion they have OPENED an additional ESTABLISHMENT, at No. 10, LUDGATE HILL, City (opposite the Bell Sauvage Inn), where one of the above firm may be consulted daily, and at their Old Established residence, 32, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury, where they continue to restore Decayed Teeth with their celebrated MINERAL SUCCEDANEUM, so universally recommended by the Faculty in London and Paris. The operation of Filling Teeth is performed in a few seconds, without the slightest pain, heat, or pressure. They also FASTEN LOOSE TEETH, in a manner singularly efficacious, and SUPPLY WHOLE or PARTIAL SETS of TEETH, INCORRODIBLE ARTIFICIAL, or NATURAL TEETH, from one to a complete set, fixed, without wire or other ligature guaranteed to answer every purpose for mastication and articulation.

CHARGES AS IN PARIS.

THE KING OF OUDE'S FAVOURITE SAUCE, introduced by S. HICKSON, 1825, is now so well established as the best Sauce ever produced for Meats, Ragouts, Hashes, Curries, &c., as to need no further commendation. It only remains to caution persons against various bad imitations, by purchasing which they will meet with vexation and disappointment. Tradesmen have no excuse, as a proper allowance is made to Venders. It is sold in London by S. Hickson, 72, Welbeck-street; Fortnum and Mason, Sherborn and Sons, Howis, Morel, Piccadilly, Vallé, Haymarket; Burgess and Son, Strand;—Reilly and Son, and Lazenby, Dublin—and by most respectable Grocers, &c., in the Kingdom.

Also, HICKSON'S SAUCE for HASHES, STEAKS, &c., &c., is a better Sauce for family use than Harvey's, Reading, or any other Sauce.

SARSAPARILLA.

"Great praise is due to Mr. Hillyard for his very clever and much needed preparation of Sarsaparilla. His mode of preparing it preserves the necessary active qualities, which, according to the old mode, were allowed to evaporate, thus rendering it one of the most sure, as well as simple, remedies in purifying the blood."—United Service Gazette.

"In justice to one of the many preparers of Sarsaparilla, we must give the meed of praise to Hillyard's condensed preparation, knowing some friends of ours who have received much benefit from its use."—Fraser's Literary Chronicle.

Prepared only by Hillyard, chemist, 59, Oxford-street, five doors from Berners-street, and sold by him wholesale and retail; and retail by the following Agents—Prout, Strand; Willoughby, 61, Bishopsgate Without. Observe—Half-pints, 2s. 6d.; pints, 4s., quarts, 7s., being less than half the price of any other preparation of the kind, and the strongest ever made.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY.

AS the following letter received from Major General Sir Henry Wheatley, Keeper of the Privy Purse testifies.—

Sir, I am honoured with the King's command to express his Majesty's sense of your polite attention in sending the two bottles of Essence of Ginger. His Majesty has been pleased to direct me to forward you ten pounds in payment for it—inclosed you will find that amount.—I am, Sir, your's obediently,

St. James's Palace, June 25th, 1835. H. WHEATLEY.

To Mr. Decimus Woodhouse.

WOODHOUSE'S ÆTHERIAL ESSENCE of GINGER is particularly recommended to all cold, phlegmatic, weak, and nervous constitutions; it is certain in affording instant relief in Cholera Morbus, Spasms, Cramps, Flatulence, Languor, Hysterics, Heartburn, Loss of Appetite, Sensation of Fulness, Pain and Oppression after Meals; also those Pains of the Stomach and Bowels which arise from Costly Flatulencies; Digestion, however much impaired, is restored in its pristine state, by the use of this Essence for a short time, if taken in Tea, Coffee, Ale, Beer, Porter, Cider, or Wine; it corrects their Flatulent tendency.

The undernamed, and 200 other Medical men have given certificates of their unqualified approbation of the value of this Essence, as also of its superiority over all other similar preparations. Drs. James Johnson, Physician to his Majesty, A. T. Holroyd, S. Ashwell, R. Rowley, A. Middleton, C. Loudon, F. Bayley, Surgeon to their Majesties, J. Pereira, G. Pilcher, T. Salmon, F. Tyrrell, J. H. Curtis, Aurist to his Majesty, C. Millard.

This Essence is prepared only by DECIMUS WOODHOUSE, Operative Chemist Extraordinary to his Majesty, 18, King William-street, New London-bridge; and sold by him wholesale and retail, in bottles 2s. 6d., 4s. 6d., 10s. 6d., and 21s. each; and may be had of all Medicine Venders.

FURTHER CONFIRMATION OF THE UNFAILING VIRTUES OF

OLDRIDGE'S BALM OF COLUMBIA.

January 28th 1836.

GENTLEMEN,—I regret that I have not earlier acknowledged to you the great benefit which I have derived from the use of your Balm of Columbia, which, in my own case, I have happily found to possess all the virtues you ascribe to it; I at first, and by mere accident, purchased a Bottle from one of your Agents merely as a trial; and until lately, was unaware of its justly famed and great celebrity, or of your being resident, and having a principal establishment in England, otherwise I should have felt pleasure and a sense of duty to you and the public in making this acknowledgment before. About four years ago, I found my hair rapidly falling off, not occasioned by any bodily illness, and to such an extent was my head really bald that I was compelled to wear a wig; about three afterwards I began to use your Balm, and after the lapse of nine months, and the application of only three 3s. 6d. bottles, I was enabled to leave off the wig, finding my hair quite restored to its pristine strength, which it has retained ever since.

I am, Gentlemen, yours very obliged,

To Messrs. C. & A. OLDRIDGE, Balm of Columbia Establishment, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London. BENJAMIN BRIDGER, 31, Little Newport Street, Leicester Square.

OLDRIDGE'S BALM causes Whiskers and Eyebrows to grow, prevents the hair from turning grey, and on the first application produces a beautiful curl, frees the hair from scurf, and stops it from falling off. Abundance of certificates from gentlemen of the first respectability are shown by the Proprietors, C. & A. OLDRIDGE, 1, Wellington Street, Strand, London, where the Balm is sold.—Price 3s. 6d., 6s., and 11s. per bottle.

CERTAIN CURE FOR CORNS AND BUNIONS.—ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN AND BUNION SOLVENT, which gives relief upon the first application, and speedily eradicates them without pain or inconvenience, as the following will prove.—

"SIR,—For many years I suffered by Corns; latterly I felt such excruciating pain, having five on my left foot, that the frequent bathing, paring, and filing of them in no way relieved me. For months I could not wear boots, and for ten or twelve days not even shoes. I tried ALLINGHAM'S ROTTERDAM CORN SOLVANT, of which I find you are the Proprietor: after using it two days I could wear shoes, in four days, nine of the Corns, the most painful, was entirely eradicated. By this one I suffered more in particular, as it was between my toes. I have in a week after, and since, been able to wear boots. Having experienced this benefit in eight Corns in my own person, and having recommended the Solvent to many Patients of mine, who all have been cured, I deem it but just to give you this testimony, to use it as you may think proper. I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

D. EDMES, Surgeon Dentist.

1, Southampton-street, Strand,
18th March, 1836."

A further testimony to its merits, no less strong, is fully proved by the ingenuity which some unprincipled persons have exercised to imitate its title and appearance, and to substitute for it an article not merely inefficacious but mischievous: it is therefore necessary to ask for Allingham's Rotterdam Corn and Bunion Solvent, and see that J. A. Sharwood is written on the outside wrapper, as none others are genuine.

Sold by J. A. Sharwood, 55, Bishopsgate Without, in Bottles at 1s. 1½d., 1s. 9d., and 4s. 6d.; and, by appointment, by most Medicine Venders.

Immediate and soothing relief afforded to the Skin and Complexion, in cases of Tan, Sun Burns, &c., by ROWLAND'S KALYDOR.

WARRANTED perfectly innocent. "It completely eradicates tan, freckles, pimples, spots, redness, and all cutaneous eruptions, gradually realises a delicately clear soft skin, transforms even the most sallow complexion into a radiant whiteness, imparting it to a beautiful juvenile bloom. Gentlemen, after shaving, will find it allay the irritability and smarting pain; and render the skin smooth and pleasant. It preserves the skin from the baneful effects of the sun and dust, and in sun burns, stings of insects, &c., it immediately allays the most violent inflammation. Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle, duty included. Observe—Each bottle has the name and address of the Proprietors,

"A. ROWLAND AND SON, 20, Hatton-garden, London." Engraved on the Government Stamp, which is pasted on, and also printed in red on the Wrapper in which each is enclosed. Sold by them, and by all respectable Perfumers and Medicine Venders.

GINGER WINE MANUFACTORY,

Coventry-street, Haymarket, London.—Messrs. DALE and CO., having for many years past continued to receive the distinguished patronage of the Nobility and Gentry for their Double Strong JAMAICA GINGER WINE, flatter themselves, from their immense stock always on hand, they can offer that article more pure and unadulterated than any house in London. The continued recommendations of His Majesty's Physicians, and the Faculty in general, for its unequalled efficacy in cases of Gout, Spasms, Indigestion, and Flatulency, induce the Proprietors to caution the public against the extraordinary puffs now taken by numerous vendors to puff off an article of inferior value. MERRIMAN, SOLE PATENTEE of the NEW HINGED METALLIC BEDSTEADS, SHIP SOFAS, and SWING COTS.—The superiority of this Patent over all other inventions has gained it the unqualified approbation and patronage of the most distinguished Officers and Gentlemen of the Civil Service. It possesses the decided advantages of economy, cleanliness, and durability, with the greatest facility of erection and removal. These Bedsteads are manufactured in various patterns, and are equally suited for the camp, the cabin, or household use. They are particularly adapted for a warm climate, and for passengers to INDIA and the Colonies, as they will form a ship sofa or swing cot during the voyage, and at all times an ornamental article of furniture.

An inspection and comparison is requested at No. 170, PICCADILLY (Egyptian Hall), or at the Manufactory, 97, LEADENHALL-STREET, opposite Billiter street, London, WHERE ALONE THEY CAN BE OBTAINED, and where all others descriptions of Metallic Bedsteads advertised as Patent, and every kind of Camp and Cabin Furniture, with general Travelling Equipage, are supplied on the lowest Terms.

Trunk and Case Maker, by appointment, to the Hon. the East India Company.

SAMUEL LEVY, late of No. 2, Hemmings-row, having been obliged some time ago, from ill health, to abandon his business at the above place, he begs now to inform his Military and Naval friends and customers that he has recommenced it again at most spacious and extensive premises, No. 22, King William-street, Charing Cross, within a short distance East of his old station, where they will find the most extensive supply of every article formerly sold by him, and at even lower prices. He begs to assure his friends generally that the same punctuality and attention to their orders, which for so many years merited their approbation, shall mark his future dealings with them.

Portable Bedsteads, Canteens, and Camp Furniture of every description of the best manufacture 40 per cent. below the charges of any other house in the trade.

S. L. has no connexion whatever with the business now carrying on where he formerly resided.

LADIES' OUTFITS TO INDIA.—Messrs. THRESHER and CO., 152, Strand, next door to Somerset House, respectfully acquaint those Ladies and Families who are preparing for India, that Entire Outfits, embracing every article necessary for the voyage, and for use in India, may be obtained at their establishment, all of which are so arranged as to insure every comfort during the voyage, and an ample supply on arrival. Every article is made in the neatest and most fashionable manner, of materials manufactured expressly for the climate, and are prepared, packed, and shipped without any trouble to the parties.—Ladies waited upon at their own residence, and lists of articles, with the number of each required, sent to all parts of the country.

N.B. Gentlemen's Outfits prepared in the most careful manner.

HOND G. FLETCHER, 128, New Bond-street, MILITARY and GENERAL TAILORS, having for some years past established a new system of Moderate Charges for Cash Payments, respectfully inform those Noblemen and Gentlemen who have not yet patronised them, that the conveniences of their new and extensive premises enable them to give increased attention to all favours, and also to overlook all their workmen. Prices as before, viz. Dress Coats, coloured, 3l. 3s.; Frock Coats, ditto, 4l. 4s.; Blue or Black a trifle more; Waistcoats, 15s. 6d. to 1l. 5s.; Trousers, from 18s. to 35s.; A Footman's Suit of Livery, 4l. 4s. Military and Naval Outfits, the new Deputy Lieutenant's Uniform, &c.

TO FAMILIES GOING ABROAD, AND RESIDENTS IN INDIA.

W. C. MORGAN begs to invite the attention of FAMILIES going ABROAD, as well as that of CAPTAINS and MERCHANTS, to the superior qualities and moderate prices of his much admired BOTTLED STOUT and ALES, which are peculiarly adapted for exportation, large quantities of which are constantly being shipped for almost every part of the Globe. Address, W. C. MORGAN, 3, Dean-street, (Five doors from Oxford-street).

N.B.—Manufacturer of the Highly Carbonated Soda Water and Effervescing Lemonade.

INDIA AND THE COLONIES.

E. JOHNSON invites the attention of Naval and Military Officers, Cadets, Surgeons, Writers, and Passengers, proceeding to India or the Colonies, to his Improved PATENT METALLIC EXPANDING BEDSTEADS, forming Ship Sofas and Swing Cots, which for Cleanliness, Economy, Lightness, and Convenience are unequalled. Also to his new Ship Sofas, either in Rosewood or Mahogany, which may be used as Ship Sofas, Swinging Cots, or Camp Beds, forming at the same time a convenient and elegant piece of Drawing-Room Furniture.

A large assortment of Brass and Iron Camp and House Bedsteads, Spring, Stuffed, Recumbent, and Easy Chairs, Mattresses, Carriage Seats and Cushions, Mahogany, Camp, and House Drawers, Wash-hand, and other Tables, Wardrobes, Canteens, Liqueur Cases, and every description of Portable Furniture, whether for the Camp or Cabin, all at Wholesale prices for cash.

OFFICER'S BEDSTEAD, with Mattress, Bolster, Pillow, and Curtains complete, only 4l. 6s.

An inspection of the above articles is earnestly and with confidence requested at the Manufactory for every article of Travelling and Camp Equipage, 155, Leadenhall-street, only four doors from Cornhill.

DEPOT FOR NAVAL & MILITARY EQUIPMENTS.

ISAAC LEVY, Successor to S. LEVY, No. 2, Hemming's-row, St. Martin's-lane.

Begs to call the attention of Officers of the Navy and Army, &c., to his Old-Established DEPOT, where they will find ready every article of Naval and Military Equipment, Camp Furniture, Bedding, Bedsteads, Canteens, Portable Drawers, &c. &c. Officers and others attending Levees and Drawing Rooms supplied with every article required.

MILITARY & NAVAL GENTLEMEN, and PASSENGERS, both Ladies and Gentlemen, proceeding to India, provided with every requisite for the voyage, and for use in the interior, by O. H. HUGHES and CO., General Clothiers, 38, New Bond-street, London. As the greatest attention is paid at this Establishment to the style, quality, and make of the different articles, Gentlemen, who are particular, may rely on having every satisfaction given in these respects. Officers and Gentlemen returning from India will find our above Establishment adequate to supply all their wants on the shortest consumption. Every article being made in the first style of fashion, and charged the lowest remunerating prices.

TO INDIA, CHINA, and the COLONIES.

CAVALRY.

Royal Horse Guards (blue)—Towards the close of the investiture of the Bath on Saturday last, a trooper of this regt. on duty, in an apparent fit of phrenzy, rushed with his sword drawn among the assembled Knights, but he was fortunately secured without inflicting any injury. We understand that this is the second time the offender has assumed madness, in the expectation of receiving his discharge. His conduct, however, in this instance, will not be slightly passed over.

2d Drag.—are to arrive in Dublin, and assist at the splendid review in Phœnix Park to-day, the anniversary of Waterloo.

11th Lt. Drag.—Maj. Havelock has arrived from Bombay.

INFANTRY.

17th Foot—The first division left Portsmouth for Winchester on Thursday morning, and the second division next day.

19th Foot—Lieut. Harper has arrived from India.

15th depot.—1 comp., 2 officers, 2 Serjeants, and 30 r. and f. moved from Mount Talbot on 15th, to arrive at Loughrea on 17th. A company from Moeaghan to move on 25th inst., and arrive at Galway on 6th July.

22d depot—Major Pennefather, on landing at Dublin from Hull, got a route for Galway, to which station they are now on the march, with an excellent brass band. The depot has a march of 11 days from Dublin to Galway. Lieut. Preston, son of the Dean of Limerick, has succeeded Lieut. Butler as Paymaster of the depot.

23d depot embarked on board the Cumberland steamer, from Liverpool, for Dublin, en route to Galway, and arrived on the 25th.—Lieut. Phillis has resigned the Adjutantcy, and the senior Lieut. Bellamy, succeeds him. Maj. Young has left Templemore on leave of absence, and Capt. Phibbs, lately promoted from 24th, has joined the depot 85th at Clonmel.

26th—Head-quarters, under Lieut.-Col. French, from Deptford, arrived at Sydney last January.

30th depot—is stationed at the Citadel, Hull, under command of Major Ormond, after a weary passage from Dublin to Liverpool, and much sea sickness on board the vessel, which was densely crowded. Major Teague is about to exchange to another corps.

35th—Maj. Goate commands the detachment at Mill-street, Cork.

39th—Capt. Wright has arrived from India.

40th—Lieut. M'Duff and 30 Invalids have arrived from Bombay.

41st—Capt. Cochran has arrived from India.

44th—A comp. is vacant by the death of Capt. the Hon. W. F. O'Callaghan, A.D.C. to his uncle, Lieut.-Gen. Sir H. W. O'Callaghan, at Madras, and 2d son of Lord Lismore.

74th depot are to proceed to Glasgow on 15th July.

78th depot marched from Galway yesterday to arrive at Armagh on 29th. To leave 1 comp., 3 officers, 3 serjs., and 50 r. and f. at Mooaghan on 26th.

79th—Capt. Montsteveo, from Unatia. h.-p., has got the Paymastership.

86th—were to be removed to Barbadoes, to be relieved by 67th from St. Christopher's, and the latter by the 14th, about the middle of last month.

89th—Lieut.-Col. Doherty has taken the command, whose head-quarters have arrived at Trinidad from Barbadoes, to relieve the 19th, ordered home.

94th—On Saturday evening, the Serjeants of the 94th Reg. at Templemore, entertained the Serjs. of the 25th, when upwards of 50 individuals sat down to dinner, and the whole was conducted with the greatest decorum and propriety. The dinner was excellent, and a large "Haggis" graced the head of the table, which the sons of the "Land of Cakes," in both Regiments, did full justice to. After dinner a number of appropriate toasts were drank with great enthusiasm, and the company having enjoyed themselves until a late hour, broke up with the same social order and harmony, which had marked the whole evening's proceedings.

92d depot—Orders have been received at Glasgow for the embarkation of this depot for Londonderry on 7th July.

98th—This corps has not returned from the Cape of Good Hope in the Athol, though expected, but it is now certain they will come home in the Courier freight ship.

Rifle Brigade 1st Bat.—The depot crossed from Gosport to Portsmouth on Friday. Visc. Jocelyn, son and heir of the Earl of Roden, has got the Adjutantcy.

Royal Artillery.—Detachment from Dublin to arrive at Derry on 23d, and detachment at Derry to move on 27th inst., and arrive at Charlemont on 1st July. Capt. Stewart's comp. at Charlemont will move on the 4th, to arrive at Dublin on 8th July. Woolwich.—Col. Mac-Laughlan's company, 2d batt., arrived at head-quarters on the 3d. inst. from Dover. Col. Paterson also arrived from Plymouth on the 8th, to assume his official duties at the Repository. Private Warner met with a serious accident on Monday last in mounting one of the limber boxes, in course of drill. John Shepherd, an officer's servant, was brought before a bench of magistrates for purloining a silver watch from gunner Thompson, but from his hitherto good character he was ordered to attend the next court day to produce witnesses to repel the charge. The drills of the field batteries have been most active during the week. The series of balls given by this distinguished corps have been attended by all the rank and fashion of the neighbourhood, and the highly efficient band every evening perform most splendid pieces of music on the parade. The families of the officers of the artillery are most actively engaged in behalf of the unfortunate widow of the late Lieut. George Smith, of the Rl. Artillery Drivers. The circumstances attending the case are of the most afflicting nature. Her residence, No. 4, Creed-lane, Greenwich, was consumed by fire. The daughter upon whom she chiefly depended for support, fell a victim to the flames; two others are also miserably burnt, and herself, in her endeavours to preserve them, has suffered so severely as to render her in all human probability helpless for the remainder of her days.

Royal Engineers.—Capt. Gordon leaves Limerick garrison on duty for Armagh, to be replaced in the South West district by Captain Wortham, R.E. an officer who served at St. Helena during the exile of Napoleon.

Yeomanry.—The Taunton Yeomanry Cavalry, commanded by Major E. Coles, was reviewed by Col. Sir Charles O'Donnell at Orchard Portman, on the 10th inst. This fine corps was put through a variety of evolutions and movements by its commandant, and performed them with a precision and steadiness that would have done credit to any regiment of regular cavalry. Both officers and men were highly complimented by the Inspecting Officer, for their soldier-like appearance and the manner in which they acquitted themselves at the field-day. On the following morning the troops were marched out of the town for a short distance, and after cheering their commander, returned to their homes for the season.

Royal Academy, Woolwich.—The half-yearly inspection of the gentlemen cadets before the Master-General and a Board of Officers, took place yesterday, when commissions and prizes were awarded. The vacation commences this day.

The United Service Club gives a dinner to the Prince of Orange on Tuesday next.

On Tuesday a party of the 3d. Fusilier Guards relieved the detachments of the Coldstream doing duty in the Victualling and Dock-yard of Deptford.

Lieut.-Col. Sir C. R. O'Donnell has been appointed to the staff of the northern district, vice Lieut.-Col. Wemyss, who succeeds Lieut.-Col. Shaw Kennedy at Manchester.

The Duke of Wellington's grand Waterloo fête this day will be preceded by a grand review of the household troops by his Majesty and the foreign Princes, in Hyde-park. The regiments to be reviewed are the three regiments of Foot Guards, the two regiments of Life Guards, the Greys, the Blues, two regiments of Lancers, and a park of horse and foot artillery. Orders have also been given for the erection of field batteries in the Park. The troops are to be on the ground by ten o'clock; the line formed by eleven, and his Majesty will arrive about half-past eleven, when the evolutions are to commence. A double line of military will keep the ground, inside which the royal carriages will be placed.

Detachments of the following embarked on the 5th at Cork for the Cape of Good Hope:—27 foot, 2 subalterns and 15 r. and f.; 72d. 1 Capt., 2 subs., 1 serj., and 6 r. and f.; 75th. 2 subs., and 15 r. and f.; 98th. 1 serj.

Major-Gen. Lord Fitzroy Somerset held a levee at the Horse Guards on Tuesday, which was attended by several distinguished officers.

Irish Constabulary Appointments.—The four Officers to be County Inspectors are Lieut.-Col. Macleod, Major Priestley, Major Galway, and Capt. Roberts. The latter has been for several years Sub-Inspector of Cork. The new establishment will not come entirely into operation till August.

PORTSMOUTH, June 17.—(From our own Correspondent.) ...he Madagascar was commissioned on Friday, as we last ...eek announced, and her detachment of Marines was em...irked on Tuesday. Capt. Sir J. Peyton has the promises ...f nearly 100 voluntary seamen from the President and ...erne when those ships are paid off. The men are to be ...llowed one month's leave of absence, which has been sanc...oned by the Admiralty. The Moira and Sikesby transports have sailed for Cork, and the Sea-flower cutter, Lieut. ...eche, to Sheerness, to be attached to that station. The ...ockatrice, brigantine, came from Plymouth on Tuesday. ...ieut. Ross brought home the South American mail; she ...as since gone to Sheerness to be paid off. Thursday — ...ola, 84, arrived from Sheerness. The Hercules has permission to cruise in the North Sea for a week or ten days, ...o stretch her rigging, &c., and afterwards rendezvous at ...pithead. The Vanguard is expected to go for a similar ...urpose next week. The Inconstant, a frigate pierced for ...8 guns, constructed by Capt. John Hayes, C.B., was ...unched this day at about a quarter before 12. The gates ...ere opened to the public, and thousands availed themselves of it to witness the interesting sight. The ceremony ...f naming the ship was adroitly performed by Lady Dur...am, who broke the bottle of wine at the first pull. The ...nconstant as to size and tonnage is between the Pique ...nd Castor, being about 220 less than the former, and 120 ...ore than the latter. She has a very handsome bow and ...tern, and looks very compact; the following are her di...ensions: length of water line, about 160 feet; extreme ...readth, 45 feet, 4 in.; breadth for tonnage, 48 feet, 8 in.; ...onnage, about 1410; her armament is to consist of 22 ...ng 32 pr. guns, of 56 cwt., on the gun deck, and 14 long ...2 prs., of 25 cwt., on the quarter-deck and forecastle. She ...an 6ght 5 guns right aft. She is 5 feet 10 in. under the ...ema of the main deck. She was hauled into dock immediately to be coppered. When floating into the basin she ...ew 13 feet forward, and 16 feet 6 inches abaft. She ...ill be commissioned by Capt. Hayes as soon as the Dock...ard have reported her ready. Adm. Sir P. Durham on ...e occasion gave an excellent dejeune to upwards of 150 ...adies and gentlemen on the lawn behind the Admiralty ...ouse. Friday—Lorne paid off. President will be paid ...ff on Monday, and then fitted as a demonstration ship. ...hips in port.—Vanguard, Bellerophon, Asia, Pembroke, ...Spithead; Britannia, President, Madagascar, Buffalo, ...Beacon (she is in dock), Emerald, Crocker, Maitland ...nd Katherine Stewart Forbes, transports, in harbour.

MILFORD HAVEN, 14th June, 1836.—(From our own Correspondent.)—A serious accident happened here on ...uesday last, which caused considerable loss of property, ...hough, I am happy to say, not that of life. A large ...hip belonging to America, called the Mordecai, bound ...rom Liverpool to New Orleans, having put in here some ...onths back leaky, underwent very considerable repairs. ...These were completed, and she was lying a short distance ...rom one of our wharfs. On Sunday evening last she was ...iscovered to be on fire, which burst out from almost every ...art of her at the same moment. It being low water, the ...ide was nearly a mile distant, and the town possessing no ...uch thing as a fire-engine (indeed, since the removal of the ...ock-yard, that is an article known only in name amongst ...s), she was soon wholly burnt. The sight, about half-...ast eleven o'clock, was awfully sublime. Just at that ...eriod, the fire, in one liquid flame, ran along the rigging, ...hich was so completely destroyed, that the main and mizzen-...asts went by the board, dragging with them the fore-mast, ...hich would have stood some time longer, but for the main ...opmast stay not having been injured; it followed that the ...ain in falling must have drawn the fore-mast with it. ...How the fire originated cannot be imagined, except that ...pontaneous combustion from some of the unaccountable of ...ature's causes may have taken place in a quantity of coal ...al in the after-hold, as it has been known to do some...imes in other destructible articles. That beautiful 16-gun ...rvette, the Dido, the first of her class, constructed by ...apt. Surveyor Symonds, was launched from Pembroke-...ard on Monday last. At twenty minutes past 5, P.M., ...he dog shores were "knocked down," when just as Mrs. ...Bloxam, the lady of the Rev. R. Bloxam, Chaplain of ...he establishment, besprinkled her bows with the juice of ...he grape, she darted forth—not into the flames as Virgil ...ells her namesake of old to have done—but into the ...nsom of the silent and deceptive ocean. A prettier launch ...ould not have been witnessed, and the number of spectators was far larger than might have been expected, see...ing the orders for sending her afloat arrived only two days preceding. The following morning she was taken into that splendid dry dock at the western extremity of the Arsenal to be coppered, &c. The following are her principal dimensions:—

Directions have been received at this port for breaking up the Gibraltar, lazarette. She is to be sent up to the dock-yard for that purpose. Her place is to be supplied here by the Mulgrave, 74, an old ship, built at the upper Nore in 1741, and now lying at Plymouth. Sir Charles Buller has returned to duty at Pembroke-yard from public leave. Mr. Hankes, Master Shipwright of Pembroke-yard, has left on public leave for the benefit of his health.

WOOLWICH DOCK-YARD, JUNE 17th.—(From our own Correspondent.)—The Atholl, 26, troop-ship, Master, Commander Karley, has arrived off here, and brought up some marines and invalids from the East India Company's service. The Athall has been hauled up along side the Sheers, and is to be refitted here; she is in want of a few hands. The Pluto st.-v. has taken two twelve-pounders on board, one on the forecastle and one aft, which work on traversers; she is going to the coast of Spain, under the command of Lieut. Shambler, of the Lightning st.-v., who will be lent to the Pluto. The Firefly st.-v., lying in the Surrey Canal, will be brought down here, and is to be commissioned by Lieut. Joseph Pearse, late of the Blazer st.-v. The Falmouth, lighter, sailed from here for Portsmouth. Firebrand, st.-v., Master, John Allen, arrived off here on Monday from Scotland. Messenger, st.-v., Master J. King, will be repaired here, as she has been hauled into the Basin. Alban, st.-v., is to be immediately commissioned. Ships in Commission in Port:—William and Mary yacht, Firebrand, st.-v., and Atholl troop ship. In Dock. Alban, st.-v. In the Basin. Confiance, Lightning, Echo, Blazer, and Pluto.

PLYMOUTH, June 16th.—A Court Martial will be held this day (Thursday) to try Mr. William M'Auley, Assist. Surgeon of the Linnet packet. The charges are various acts of drunkenness. The Cornwallis, 74, went out of the harbour on Saturday afternoon, with a strong breeze from W. by N. In Harbour—Royal Adelaide, Imogene, Columbine, and Magpie cutter. In the Sound—Cornwallis, Minden, Linnet, and Bonetta.

The Terror, Capt. Back, was paid in advance on Monday at Sheerness, whence she proceeded the next day (accompanied by a steamer as far as Stromness) on her voyage to Wager River.

The Messenger steamer, Mr. King, Master, being under repair at Woolwich, her crew are turned over to the Rhadamanthus.

The Confiance, Lieut. Waugh, has been paid off this week at Woolwich.

The Diligence naval transport will load immediately at Woolwich, for Plymouth and Portsmouth.

The Atholl troop ship has just arrived at Woolwich to refit.

The Maitland transport, Lieut. Binstead, Agent, will take the Royals from Cork to Quebec, and bring home the 79th Highlanders; and the Moira, Lieut. Hay, Agent, will take the 85th from Cork to Barbadoes, and bring home the 19th Regt.

A new regulation is about to take place at Chatham and Sheerness, the object is to place the persons employed in the Ordinary and Dock-yard sailing crafts, immediately under and at the disposal of the Port Admiral, and render them liable to be placed in men-of-war in cases of emergency; all over forty-five will be superannuated, and the Captains of the Ordinary will have houses in the Dock-yards. Such arrangements will extend to other ports also.

In the event of Vice-Adm. Fleming proceeding as Governor to Malta, the Port Admiral's establishment at Sheerness will be discontinued.

The Westmoreland and Lady Nugent are taken up for convict embarkation for New South Wales, and fitting at Deptford.

The Surveyor of the Navy, Sir Wm. Symonds, visited Deptford Dock-yard this week.

The Firebrand steamer returned to Woolwich on Tuesday, with the Duke and Duchess of Richmond, and others who accompanied the Duke of Gordon's remains to Scotland in the same vessel.

The Portsmouth division Royal Marines was inspected by Col. Sir J. B. Savage on Monday, and the Royal Marine Artillery on Tuesday; the latter exhibited mortar and gun practice at Fort Cumberland.

The Harrier was at Rio on the 16th April, and under orders to sail on the 18th for the River Plate.

Mr. John Hepburn, Assist. Master Attendant at Portsmouth Dock Yard (Master 1796), is to be Master Attendant of same yard vice Atkinson, deceased; and Mr. F. W. P. Sadler (Master 1810), of the Buffalo, to be Assistant Master at the same yard, vice Hepburn. The latter Officer was Master Attendant of Jamaica Dock-yard, and such a trust as just appointment must give general satisfaction.

No longer exists any difficulty to the trade and navigation of the Danube; and a letter from Odessa, under date 11th (23rd) May, states that the Governor of that place, Count Woronzow, has despatched an attaché to the delta of the river, in order to prevent any impediment or difficulty being thrown in the way of English vessels passing up and down the Danube.

The Talavera has proceeded from Plymouth to Lisbon having on board stores and provisions for the squadron on that station. It is reported that she will relieve the Russell, that ship having received some damage from lightning which renders her return to England necessary.

It is intended that Lord John Hay shall be reinforced with steam vessels on the coast of Spain, and he will hoist his broad pendant on one of them. The Castor has been ordered home, her time of service having expired since September last.

The Blonde, 46, Commodore Mason, was at Coquimbo on 29th Feb., having on board a large freight of silver which she was about to bring to England forthwith.

The Rover was expected to sail from Coquimbo on 28th Feb. for Rio Janeiro and England.

The following address was presented by the authorities of Bermuda to Vice-Adm. Sir George Cockburn, the Commander-in-Chief on that station, on his departure:—"...the eventful period to the Colonies in which our gracious Sovereign was pleased to assign this extended and important station to your charge, it is remarkable that the advisers of his Majesty were statesmen to whom your whole political life had been openly opposed. While, therefore, an appointment so utterly devoid of private partiality and party considerations cannot fail to accredit the discrimination and disinterestedness of H.M.'s Ministers, it must clearly evince the pre-eminence of your own professional character; and in the history of these important times, which will chronicle the transactions of several hundred thousands of our fellow creatures in these colonies from a state of bondage to the condition of free men, will simultaneously record your elevation by an adverse Administration to an office involving merely the arduous and more ordinary duties of a great command, but in no inconsiderable degree the supervision and protection of a measure requiring the utmost energy and vigilance, and judgment, for its safe transaction. It is no flattery, Sir, to assert that the presence of such an officer at such an epoch, has given security to the anxious, and awe to the rebellious. Your flag on the waters of the Antilles during a change in colonial polity of most agitating interest has been, under Divine Providence, an amulet from tumult and an assurance of safety; and without detracting from the value and merit of other instruments in the great measure of Emancipation, we may fairly ascribe to the influence of your name much of its peaceable results."—The Address was signed by the Chief Justice, President, and the Members of H. M. Council, the Speaker and Members of Assembly, the Archdeacon and the Clergy, the Mayors and Corporation of Hamilton and St. George, the several Public Functionaries, and about two hundred other gentlemen, being all that could get access to it in the short time allotted for signature. Sir George was sensibly affected by the warmth of feeling in his favour, and returned a suitable answer. In a few days afterwards, the pilots and all the colonial population of Bermuda waited on Sir George with an Address expressive of regret at his leaving, and thanks for his continued kindness towards them.

A wealthy and respected old gentleman residing at the southern extremity of the Isle of Wight, and who has two cutter yachts, intends having one of them raced for by fishing boats belonging to the Island. The vessel is to be moored at a short distance from the coast, fronting his residence, and the boats racing will start from a given place and the one that arrives at the vessel first will be declared the winner.

The Cockatrice packet is to be paid off at Plymouth.

The Seaflower cutter, Lieut. Roche, has been removed to the Sheerness station.

The Rapid, 10, Lieut. Patten, may be daily expected from South America.

Sir Philip Durham, the Com.-in-Chief at Portsmouth has visited, and minutely expected the President throughout, and exercised the crew at general quarters and broadswords; and on the quarter-deck of that ship expressed his admiration of her great efficiency, in terms not only gratifying to the Captain, officers, and ship's company, but to the gallant chief who had left them.

Capt. Sir John Franklyn, R.N., recently appointed Governor of Van Diemen's Land, is to embark early in August. The East India built ship, Fairlie, 765 tons, Captain Ager, (late H. C. S.), now in the London Docks, has been engaged for his conveyance, and will proceed direct obart Town and Sydney, touching at the Cape of Good ope for refreshments.

The Plymouth Regatta will take place on Wednesday, th, and Thursday, 21st of July.

Letters from the Rover speak in the highest terms of the od qualities of that vessel; she sails admirably, and ved herself an excellent sea boat when rounding Cape rn, deeply laden, in very severe weather. On the same tion, the reports are equally good of the Cleopatra, 28, ich ship on leaving Plymouth, according to the statement those on board, beat the Pearl most decidedly; since n, in a five week's cruise with the Dublin, she has ted that ship in every point of sailing, and in all descripns of weather, always sparing sail, in order to keep her tion astern; as well as an American brig which had er been overhauled before.—Hampshire Telegraph.

It is doing but tardy justice to the merits of these ships. far back as the 9th of April last, we gave the informan as regards the Rover, in an extract from a letter from officer of that ship, dated Valparaiso, Dec. 14, 1835; d more than a month since, namely, May 14th, we terted the trial cruise of Dublin and Cleopatra, in an tract of a letter from Rio, dated March 3d. We mention these facts to show that our information was correct, l now confirmed, although at so late a period, by a conporary, who we hope is at length manifesting that position of impartiality which should ever guide an independent journal.—Ed.]

In addition to the passengers mentioned in our last, the lowing arrived by President at Portsmouth:—Lady and ss Cockburn, Miss Sims, and Lord Valentia; Mr. F. Scott, late of the Dock-yard, Mr. Wolrige, mate, late the Wasp; Messrs. Brooking, Mitchell, and Stokes, e of the Pike, and the officers and crew of that vessel; r. Strachan, gunner of the Melville; Mr. Barrett, carpenof the Royal Oak.

The following was the disposition of the North American d West India squadron on the 1st of May last, when ce-Admiral Sir Peter Halkett relieved Vice-Admiral Sir eorge Cockburn in the command:—The squadron, under ptain Strong, with the exception of the Snake, had ined to Barbadoes from Para, having succeeded in curing the ringleaders of the plunder of the cargo, and e murder of the crew of the Clio. The Snake was left ere to see the laws carried into execution. The Gannet d captured a slaver. The squadron were all very healthy d disposed of as follows:—Forte, 44, Commodore Pell, ad gone to Vera Cruz and the Havannah; Belvidera, 42, apt. Strong, Race-horse, 18, Capt. Sir J. Home, Bart., Gannett, 16, Com. Maxwell, and Savage, 10, Lieut. oney, at Barbadoes; the Vestal, 26, Capt. Jones, Racer, 16, Com. Hope, and Wasp, 16, Com. Foreman, ad gone to Barbadoes and Jamaica; Rainbow, 28, Capt. ennell, and Wanderer, 16, Com. Dike, were gone to ewfoundland to protect the summer fishery; Champion, 3, Com. Farr, to Halifax and Gulf of St. Lawrence, for similar purpose; Comus, 18, Com. Hamilton, was on r return to England (going the rounds); Nimrod, 2 , om. John Frazer, Dee steamer, Com. Ramsay, Snake, n, Com. Warren, Cruizer, 16, Com. Wills, Magnificent d Pickle, on the Jamaica station; Melville, Harpy, and ncher, at Bermuda; where the Racer was lately exrted from Barbadoes. Skipjack was cruising off Cuba; Thunder and Lark surveying the Bahames; Flamer and olumbia employed between the several islands, carrying mails; Meteor, st.-v., at Jamaica, rigging to return to ngland, her boilers and engines being perfectly worn out nd useless.

Royal Marines, Woolwich.—The half-yearly inspecon under Col. Sir John Savage, K.C.H., has taken place, hen he expressed himself in the highest terms of comendation. The men of the Woolwich division, under the ommand of Brevet-Major Mercer, on Wednesday last ractised ball firing in Plumstead Marshes with great effect. elcher and Paradise, late of this corps, and who were entenced to transportation, the former for life, are now in he dock-yard, and will be sent off by the first ship; this will no doubt act as a warning to their late comrades, who re now placed as a guard over them as convicts. Two esperate characters, named Parsons and Bannister, were harged with robbing a marine, on Friday last, of his money, and cutting his boots off his feet, in doing which hey severed several of the veins, and he nearly bled to death before assistance could be procured; they were remanded, he not being able to attend to give evidence. The Commandant, Col. M'Cleverly, C.B, has determined to prosecute.

List of the select committee appointed to inquire into the causes of the increased number of shipwrecks, with a view to ascertain whether such improvements might not be made in the construction, equipment, and navigation of merchant vessels as would greatly diminish the annual loss of life and property at sea:—Mr. Buckingham, Sir F. Trubridge, Mr. Clay, Mr. Barnard, Capt. Alsager, Lord Sandon, Sir R. Vyvyan, Adm. Sir E. Codrington, Mr. Polk, Col. Thompson, Mr. A. Chapman, Mr. Ingham, Mr. G. F. Young, Mr. J. Oswald, Mr. E. Tennent.

The President will be paid off on Saturday next, and will, it is understood, be re-commissioned, and try her rate of sailing with the Pique and Inconstant; the latter will be launched on the 16th inst.—Hampshire Telegraph.

[The President will be brought forward and prepared as a demonstrative ship, if not found defective; but there is no intention of commissioning her at present.—Ed.]

East India Intelligence.

The following resolutions, agreed to by the Court of Directors, may not prove unacceptable to officers connected with the Indian army. Officers who have served less than three years in India, and having lost their health there, are entitled to Lord Clive's allowance, if the Court of Directors shall adjudge them to be proper objects viz.—A 2nd Lieutenant, Cornet, or Ensign, not having real or personal property to the amount of 750*l.*, to 36*l.* 10*s.* per annum, or 2*s.* per day. 1st Lieutenant, not having real or personal property to the amount of 1000*l.*, to 45*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* per annum, or 2*s.* 6*d.* per day. Officers who have served three years in India, and are compelled to quit the country through wounds or ill health, contracted on duty, may retire on the half-pay of their respective ranks, viz.—2nd Lieutenant, Cornet, or Ensign, 54*l.* 10*s.* per annum, or 3*s.* per day; 1st Lieutenant, 73*l.* per annum, or 4*s.* per day. A Subaltern, or Assistant-surgeon, on furlough, who has been six years in India, may retire on half-pay of Ensign, if their constitution be so impaired as to prevent the possibility of their returning to India. A 1st Lieutenant who has served 13 years, or a 2nd Lieutenant, Cornet, or Ensign, who has served 9 years, including 3 years' furlough, may retire on half-pay if their health shall not permit them to serve in India. A Regimental Captain, Major, or Lieutenant-Colonel, not having served sufficient long time in India to entitle them to retire on full-pay, and whose state of health renders it impossible to continue, may retire on the half-pay of their respective ranks, viz.—Captain, 127*l.* 15*s.* per annum, or 7*s.* per day; Major, 173*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* per annum, or 9*s.* 6*d.* per day. Lieutenant Colonel, 200*l.* per annum, or 11*s.* per day. Any officer who has served 23 years (including 3 years furlough), may retire on the full pay of Captain, 191*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* per annum; 28 years (including do.) of Major, 292*l.* per annum; 33 years (including do.) of Lieutenant-Colonel, 365*l.* per annum; 38 years (including do.) of Colonel, 456*l.* 5*s.* per annum; notwithstanding they may not have attained the respective ranks.

The members of the civil service at Allahabad have determined upon a memorial to be addressed to the Court of Directors, on the subject of the rules regarding their pay whilst absent from India on sick leave.

Jeypore.—Major Alves has arrived at Doonsah, and taken a long statement from Jotha Ram, who attempted to fix the murder of Mr. Blake on Bueree Sal. It was currently reported that Jotha Ram offered 18 lacs for his release. The English force was encamped about 12 or 14 coss from Jeypore.

The annual meeting of the Bengal Military Fund took place on 27th Jan., when it appeared that not only were the disbursements a good deal within the income at present, but also that the widows' pensions, estimated by the Northampton tables, are in value more than 70,000 rupees within the amount of the capital; so that there is at present no cause for anxiety whatever for the stability of the Fund upon the present rates of subscription, pension, and other allowances.

We have to announce the death of Mr. James Alexander, at his house in Chowringhee, aged 31 years. He was the eldest son of Mr. Alexander, formerly of the council of Madras; he arrived in India in 1824, and at his death held the office of first assistant in the Accountant-General's Department, and Secretary to the Civil Annuity Fund.

MADRAS.

Civil Department.—G. O. Jan. 22.—J. Rohde, Esq., Acting Assist. Judge and Joint Crim. Judge of Chicacole, took charge of the Auxiliary Court at Vizagapatam. M. Lewis, Esq., delivered over charge of the Collectorate of Rajahmundry to C. Dumergue, Esq., Head Assist. Coll. of that District.

Military Department.—G. O. 22d Jan.—42d N.I., Lieut. James Fitzgerald to be Adjutant. Capt. M. Davies, 11th N.I., is relieved as a Member of the Clothing Committee assembled in Fort St. George. Capt. ### STANZAS.

One day, when mirth was tired and dull,
And hope held down her torch,
And woe stood near with dark eyes full,
And care sat in the porch,

I took a book that near me lay
And turn'd the pages o'er;
It was an ancient minstrel's lay,
A strain of magic lore.

I heeded little as I read,
Till bright the pages blazed,
But loud, on lifting up my head,
That hope her torch had raised.

Sorrow had wiped her tears away
To read these pages too,
And mirth smiled bright; while, stern and gray,
Care from the porch withdrew.

Who to that magic spell gave birth?
Sure, earthly it is not!
Alas! no longer of the earth,
The wizard's name was Scott!

HE STATE OF THE INDIAN ARMY.

The following extracts are taken from a letter lately essed to the Chairman of the Directors of the East ia Company, touching the state of Military Law in Indian Army, and the present position of the Euro- t troops thereof, consequent upon the abolition of oral punishment from the liabilities for the Native ny. We believe the letter to have been written by a Judge-Advocate of the Indian Army, and agreeing erally with his opinions, we shall probably return to subject at an early opportunity.—Ed ] hat Lord William Bentinck was of opinion that an en- revision of the Military Law of India, with a view to eing assimilated and simplified, had become necessary, ears from his Minute in Council of the 16th of Feb., 5, on the abolition of corporal punishment in the Native ny; at the commencement of which he observes:—

The Articles of War for the Company's Native Army e not been touched since 1797, and they confer powers o regimental Courts-Martial that have long since been sferred to tribunals of higher resort, and do not contain many minor punishments which have been substituted the task. Each Presidency has hitherto had its own arate Code; but in our last council, when two revised icles of War for the Bengal Army were submitted for ction, it was then determined that one Code should be blished for the whole of India, and steps taken, in com- nication with the other governments, for incorporating t the improvements to be found in the Annual Mutiny , and such others as local experience may point out to necessary."

n the same Minute, commenting upon the restrictive er of Lord Combermere of 19th March, 1827, and the dification thereof, by Sir Edward Barnes, on 2nd Nov., 2, his Lordship remarks:—

" I beg here to express an opinion that grave matters of le- lation of this kind should not be left to the caprice of indi- uals; but should be settled by the Legislative Council, which the authority of making Articles of War has been properly confided."

And afterwards, in reference to his earnest recommenda- n to his successor in the chief command, that he should e no time in personally investigating the systems of the ee armies, his Lordship urges it upon this ground:—

" In order that all anomalies may be corrected."

By the Committee assembled at Madras to report upon question of corporal punishment, it was also recom- ended:—

" That the Native Armies of the three Presidencies ould be governed by one Code, and that those now in use y be assimilated more to the King's Articles of War, by viding for the trials of offenders by different descriptions Courts, and increasing the penalties now sanctioned by or usage for both capital and minor offences."

In addition to these valuable authorities, much might be cited from officers who have served in India within the t thirteen years, in favour of a general revision of the sting Codes of the three Presidencies, and their assimila- n as closely as possible to the Articles of War governing e Royal Army; but I confine myself to the foregoing as ing upon public record, and therefore entitled to every ight, as the deliberate well considered opinions of the stinguished individuals referred to. From the public urnals of India, particularly those of the last six years, I ght also extract much information on the subject, as well ample evidence of the very imperfect state of Military w and its practice in India, and of the general dissatis- ction which has been excited among the members of the dian Army, owing to their being continued under the ntrol of rules and liabilities which, as regards the Royal my, have been long since modified in every successive utiny Act.

For instance:—Of the numerous variations in the Arti- es of War for the King's Forces, and for the Indian rmy, take the subject of Duelling. The last-framed rticles of War for his Majesty's Army, enact—

" That any Officer or Soldier who shall give, send, con- , or promote a challenge, to any other Officer to fight a , or shall upbraid another for refusing a challenge;— if commanding a guard, shall knowingly and willingly offer any person to go forth to fight a duel; SHALL, if an Officer, on conviction, be LIABLE TO BE CASHIERED, or suffer such other punishment, according to the nature and egree of the offence, as by the judgment of a General ourt-Martial may be awarded, &c."

But in the old Articles of War by which the Army of ndia is still governed, this offence is more severely treated, y limiting the punishment to cashiering only, in these ords:—

" No Officer, Non-commissioned Officer, or Soldier, shall presume to give or send a challenge to any other Officer, Non-commissioned Officer, or Soldier, to fight a duel, upon pain, if a Commissioned Officer, of being cashiered."

This difference places the Officers of the Indian Army under a great disadvantage compared with those of the Royal Army serving with them; and it has fallen within my observation to see an Officer of the former when on trial for sending a challenge, put in his King's commission, and desire to be judged by the more recent and mild enact- ment for the government of his Majesty's forces. The at- tention of Supreme Authorities has been consequently called to this striking discrepancy by Courts-Martial, who have been constrained under the existing law to award the severer sentence contrary to their estimate of the offence.

Again:—If an Officer in his Majesty's Army serving in either Presidency be tried by Court-Martial and sentenced to dismissal, the power of reviewing the proceedings, and of confirming the sentence or otherwise, is vested in the Com- mander-in-Chief of all India. But if an Officer of the Indian Army be similarly sentenced, the power referred to is given by the existing Articles of War for that Army to the subordinate Local Commanders-in-Chief. In this essential point also, Officers of the Indian Army feel them- selves placed under an additional disadvantage; for the proceedings on their trials are thus submitted to the review and report of local Judge-Advocates-General, to whose opinion their cases are submitted in the first instance, and at whose recommendation the trials are commonly insti- tuted, founded upon charges prepared by themselves on the exparte evidence furnished by the accusers. And further, the judgment of the Court, accompanied by the report made under circumstances so prejudicial to the party tried, receives its final confirmation or disapproval from the very General Officer by whom the trial is ordered; who thus exercises an arbitrary irresponsible power, equally opposed to the spirit of law and justice, and liable to glaring abuse in such far distant possessions. The Court-Martial records of the Madras Army alone, are well known to contain abundantly sufficient proof of the serious injury resulting to discipline from this practice, and of the unceasing appeals it produces to the Home Powers; and it thus becomes well worthy of consideration whether, if the power of deciding upon the proceedings of all Courts-Martial held upon Com- missioned Officers of his Majesty's Army wherever stationed, can be duly exercised by the Sovereign himself to the satis- faction of that very extensive body, the same power, as respects the Commissioned Officers of the Indian Army, might not be advantageously confined to the Governor-General only, similarly aided by a professional Judge-Ad- vocate-General. Such an amendment of the present system would effectually correct the evils here referred to,—would give entire satisfaction to the Officers of each Presidency,—and, restoring their lost confidence in the impartial and just administration of Military Law, would remove the very general desire now prevailing to have the judgment pro- nounced by the President of the Court-Martial immediately upon the termination of the proceedings, as in the Royal Navy.

Leaving, however, the differences of the two Acts and Articles as affecting the Officers of the two Armies, I will briefly advert to their operation on Non-commissioned Officers and Privates. For their trials in His Majesty's Army, Courts of the following grades have for several years been established:—

|---|---|
| General, | Detachment |
| District or Garrison, | Regimental; |

and to simplify and regulate their proceedings, and to mo- derate their sentences, the Articles of War for that Army classify the various crimes, and prescribe specific punish- ments for almost every nature of offence, and each degree of offender. But the Non-commissioned Officers and Privates of the Indian Army continue subject to the long established two Courts of extreme powers—the General and Regimental, with the imperfect classification of crimes, and ill-regulated punishments contained in the Mutiny Act and Articles of War enacted for them full thirteen years since. Consequently, among other great disadvantages, the discipline of that Army remains unimproved by the valuable power suggested by provisions of Sir Robert Peel's Act, and for some time introduced in the Royal Army, of proportionately increasing the punishment of obstinate of- fenders, upon proof of previous convictions.

I confine myself to these few of the numerous striking differences between the two Codes as now existing, confi- dent that they will sufficiently prove the expediency of making some effort to correct the variance,—to remove the inconvenience thereby created to the public service,—and to avoid the dissatisfaction it is calculated to excite, if per- mitted a longer continuance: for it is to be remembered that it exists in Laws framed for the government of Troops, who in reality compose but one Army, under one Supreme Power, acting in one Service, and liable to be tried by the same Officers; whose duties on Courts-martial at no time remarkably clear and easy, are by these means rendered unnecessarily difficult and perplexing; it not unfrequently happening that the same Court is called upon to try men of both Services on similar Charges; and consequently to re- gulate its sentences by the very different provisions of the two laws. To these difficulties, more particularly affecting the government of the British portion of the Indian Army, are to be added those resulting from the fact of separate and distinct Articles of War being also in force for the Na- tive parts of the Armies of each of the three Presidencies; subject, moreover, to the constant revision and alteration of the several Local Governments, and differing in their pro- visions, not only from those framed for the European portion of the Army, but also very materially from each other.

To manifest in a most striking manner the ill effects of these varied laws for the same body, or even for differ- ent bodies serving together, and the unequal discipline produced by them in the Native Armies of the several Presidencies; it will suffice to refer to the remarkable difference in the number of Corporal-punishments awarded, and of Lashes actually inflicted upon men of the Native Cavalry and In- fantry of the three Armies, for the five years from 1829 to 1833.*

| | | Cavalry Regts. | Infty Regts. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Average number of Lashes, awarded per Regt., for the five years from 1829 to 1833 | In Bengal | 1,054 | 1,621 |
| | In Madras | 2,984 | 5,187 |
| | In Bombay | 12,601 | 8,104 |
| Average number of Lashes, inflicted per Regt, for the five years from 1829 to 1833 | In Bengal | 209 | 516 |
| | In Madras | 1 852 | 3,588 |
| | In Bombay | 7,657 | 5,415 |

In considering this extraordinary statement, it must be recollected, that at the period to which it refers, the strength of the Regiments at each Presidency, was equal. To ascribe such an extreme variation exclusively, to the different de- scription of character composing the three Armies, would be erroneous and unfair; for it might be construed to imply, that the several Governments were guilty of a want of atten- tion to the subject, and of having used less exertion in the selection of recruits admitted into the Armies of Madras and Bombay, than in those received in Bengal. That some variation in number of crimes, and in severity of punish- ments, may be correctly attributed to facilities existing in Bengal for filling the ranks with men of a superior caste, is not to be denied; but the very great difference here exhi- bited, is considered mainly to result from the fact of the Armies of the three Presidencies being unprovided with an UNIFORM MILITARY CODE, and being destitute of one esta- blished system of ADEQUATE REWARDS, and of recruiting paying, and pensioning; concentrated under the supervision and control of ONE SUPREME AUTHORITY.

Nor can it be said that these awards and inflictions were so limited in the Bengal Army, on account of Discharge having been there more extensively adopted; for, on the same indubitable authority, the further surprising fact ap- pears, that through the same period, this description of punishment also, except in the Infantry of Bengal and Madras, was but little resorted to in the Army of Bengal compared with the Armies of Madras and Bombay; and still more surprising, in that of Madras, compared with the latter, as the following statement shows:— †

| | | Cavalry Regts. | Infty Regts. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Average number of Discharges per Regt., for the five years from 1829 to 1833 . . . | In Bengal | 43 | 96 |
| | In Madras | 64 | 84 |
| | In Bombay | 93 | 109 |

It is to be regretted, that the same authority does not ex- hibit the proportion of awards and inflictions of Corpo- ral-punishment in the European Regiments, including those of the King's Army at the three Presidencies. By another Return lately published, of the number of Courts- martial of various descriptions, held on Non-commissioned Officers and Privates of His Majesty's Regiments servi- in the Presidency of Bengal, for the four years from 183 to 1834, an increase is shown; which the Right Honour- able the late Governor-General and Commander-in-Chief o India, in his Minute of the 1st of January, 1835, on the question of the establishment of Penal Companies, ascribe to the relaxation of Corporal-punishment, resulting from the orders of the General Commanding-in-Chief His Majesty's Army in England, without an adequate substitute; that of transportation to New South Wales having totally failed with the portion of the Royal Army serving in India.

[We shall, if possible, resume this article next week. —Ed.

The late Duchess of Gordon had so ardent a desire to hear Mr. Pitt speak in the House, that she was induced to adopt the expedient of entering the gallery habited as a man. The Duchess had not, unfortunately, made a secret of her design, and scarcely was she comfortably seated, in expectation of the Minister's speech, when the Serjeant-at-Arms appeared and very politely whispered to her Grace that her sex was discovered, and that there existed a standing order of the House against the admis- sion of any females into the gallery. "Pray inform me, Sir," inquired the Duchess, "whether there exits a standing order for turning a female out who has once got in?"—a question that so effectually posed Mr. Colem that he effected his retreat, leaving the adventurous la in quiet enjoyment of her place.

PAY OF THE ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Sir,—In glancing over the pages of your Gazette, so re-ete with matter intimately concerning the Naval and litery interests, edvocated with independence and for-rded with zeal, I have met with a letter signed An fantry Soldier, remerking upon the double pay of the gineers, the good pay of the Artillery, and the 5s. 3d. diem received by the Ensign of the Line. He has a ch at the Ordnance Storekeepers, the Barrack-masters, l the Ordnance Clerks, and concludes by telling us the dnance wents e cleansing, and the sooner it is placed fer the Secretary at War the better.

What his object can be I do not know, but he may rest ured be will not, in his most querulous mood, use argu-ots strong enough to alter the allowances of the Infantry, Engineers, or the Artillery, much less am I led to con-do that the civil branch of the Ordnance will suffer from statements of their comforts. It was very impolite of old Engineer not to tell him when he inquired the son why they have double pay. But to make amends his taciturnity, with your assistance, I will. Nobody bts that the corps of Royal Engineers is one of science, p research, and endless occupation. It is necessary for officer of Engineers to provide himself with mathematical truments, telescopes, and volumes of works in different guages. It is also indispensable for this officer have studied many hours a day to qualify himself the work he has to do; and so far from his having to nly sign his name" (though this may happen occasion-), he has to labour many hours per diem, thus perfected is profession, to accomplish what is required of him; he to purchase a horse and fuel; he is frequently detached ere he has no mess, and lodgings are very dear, and enever he writes it is with a master's hand and hand. ese are the reasons why the Royal Engineer has double y, when compared with the Infantry; and little enough . Though not an Engineer myself, I dare say my cal-ation is not very erroneous, when I conclude, after his penses are paid, he has very little left.

" The Artillery are also well provided for." The cond Lieutenant receives 4*d.* per diem more than the ne Ensign. "The Gunners and Drivers receive good y and the smallest work they perform is paid for extra." hen employed on the King's works they receive 9*d.* r diem—so do all Line soldiers. The Gunners pay is uch better than the Line, because much more is required them. A Gunner is often in charge of a magazine, orth thousands of pounds, and when we take into consi-ration, that, independent of all that is expected of a line ldier, he has his Gunner's duties to perform, and that no ldier in the world is worked harder than the Gunner of e Royal Artillery, which has been before explained, I ink no reason can be shown from that chief of skin-flints, o is now growing out of fashion, to found a reduction in s well-earned wages.

The pay of the officer of the Artillery should be double , if justice were done him, for he does double work, and, e the Engineer, must provide himself with books, instru-ents, and saddlery, for which, at one time, he was allowed uble travelling expenses; but he was stripped of that, th his promotion, when the Government provided for the icers for their unexpected reduction, by giving them the ancies that legitimately belonged to those on the then ntracted full-pay list. Twenty-one years of Lieutenancy s the consequence to both corps, and if the Government ve us ten years' rank and pay as Captains, this would ly be restoring what it pleased them, in their contemptible ngiveness after the peace, to take away.

Pray pardon this digression from the subject of the In-ntry soldier: I do but vibrate. I cannot touch upon this bject without feeling robbed, neglected, ruined, by that generous, unprecedented, parsimonious policy, adopted masters towards servants of an deserving and devoted a aracter as ever fulfilled a faithful duty. I shall leave the orekeeper, the Barrack-master, and the Clerks to answer r themselves about their allowances, and conclude with marking to the Infantry soldier, that if he gets all he en-rs for, be it great or be it small, be has no right to com-ain; and though the pay of an Ensign, or Second Lieu-nant, is much under the emoluments of a footman, finding ut that one branch of the Service is better off than another not at all calculated to raise our resources, or add to the igh character of the British Army or Navy.

RICHARD.

[We wish some of our Correspondents would imitate the pirit of our excellent friend Richard. It is not, as we ave repeatedly said, by drawing comparisons between the dvantages and disadvantages of different branches of the United Service that good can be expected, but the exposure of evils which affect any particular branch will always have ready insertion in our columns, and we are confident that the authorities will give them consideration.—ED.

ON THE CIVIL APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

SIR,—I hasten to pray of you to correct the accidental omission of your compositor, in part of my letter of the 6th inst., on the subject of the different civil appointments in the gift of the Admiralty held by Naval officers; for, as the sentence to which I allude now stands, it appears, at first sight, to convey the immediately contrary meaning to what I intended. This has arisen by the omission of the following words after the remark—"That there may be two or three, and perhaps four or five, situations under the Admiralty now filled by naval officers which it would be impolitic and unwise to remove the possessors from, I readily admit;" and it than should have been continued, "but that such situations as the Captains, Commanders, and Lieutenants employed in the Coast Guard Service—the Superintendents of our Dock-yards and Hospitals, &c." exactly thenceforward as it has been already published.

This explanation I am sure you will kindly allow to appear immediately, by giving insertion to this letter in your next number, and, as your honest correspondent C. C., Lieutenant R.N., truly observes, if you could collect the opinions of the whole of the Navy, I am confident that ninety and nine out of every hundred would maintain the strict justice of his remarks, and mine, on this question.

SIR,—Having confided my name to you, I trust you will permit me, without entering into that personal controversy which one of your correspondents seems so much to desire, to state a few words in reply to the letters which appeared in your paper last week. You will please to recollect that my letter was addressed to you in consequence of a paragraph copied into the Naval and Military Gazette, stating that the appointments of Commissioners, or, as they are now called, Superintendents in the Dock-yards, were in future to be bestowed for five years, in order to give every meritorious officer on the list the opportunity of benefitting his family, &c. As there is no such regulation existing, nor, I believe, contemplated, it was to prevent such a report gaining credit, that I addressed you; and I availed myself of the same opportunity to point out, that were the course of changing these, and the few civil employments held by officers of the Navy, to be adopted, more particularly were these situations to be bestowed as rewards for professional claims and merit, without regard to the ability necessary to fill them (in many cases having little to do with Naval acquirements), they would assuredly be ill performed, and the necessity for such frequent changes, and the evil consequences attendant on each, would become so apparent, that eventually they would be consigned to civilians, and lost to the Navy for ever. This was what I endeavoured to show; I may have performed my intention imperfectly, for I am not much used to writing, but I am not aware that I stated anything disrespectful of civilians, or any other persons, as your correspondent asserts, or advanced any positive but what the experience of more than fifty years in the service convinces me to be correct. I know of no Civil Office in the gift of the Admiralty, so well paid or so advantageous, that it would be desirable for an Officer, burdened with a large family, to obtain it on the score of profit. The salary is never more than sufficient to maintain the rank and dignity which is looked for; and I can imagine no greater injury to an Officer so burdened, than to appoint him to a situation where, although the emoluments are large in comparison to his half-pay, his expenses will absorb them, introducing his children into a sphere where they can only maintain their position during their father's turn of service, and then consigning them to half-pay, until every meritorious Officer on the list had his turn, (in other words for life,) and to dignify this proceeding, certain of entailing ruin, misery, and discontent upon a whole family, with the sounding names of HONOUR and JUSTICE! It is but a short time since, that I saw this exemplified, and heard the opinion of one of our most distinguished legislators on this very point. He told me that he was making application to a certain quarter, for the government of a Colony, for a distinguished Officer, and that he had little doubt of succeeding. "But," observed he, "although this is said to be one of the best Officers in the service, I doubt whether he is at all fitted for such a post; however, by the aid of his Council and Attorney-general, he may get on pretty well. But here is the evil: the Officer has a large family, and little or nothing but his pay. I know from his high esprit de corps and sense of honour, that he will not degrade any office he obtains, and the consequence will be, that what with the necessity for a man of fifty insuring his life in an unhealthy climate, to obtain his outfit, and all his expenses, he will probably find himself in debt upon the expiration of his governorship; and his amiable wife and daughters must return to that humble roof and society where they are now comparatively happy, from which it is so very ill-judged to remove them; for if women can endure this change, and will ever be contented under such circumstances, then I am no judge. And although I have promised to do my utmost to further this application, it would give me the greatest pleasure to find that I had been unsuccessful, on this worthy man's account." As I am upon this subject, and observe that your correspondents frequently allude to their large families (some with ready-made families, having espoused widows, I suppose) whilst advocating their pretensions for employment, I would ask what possible claim can the existence of a large family have to the consideration of the First Lord of the Admiralty? This eleemosynary lamentation might have its effect if addressed to a Vestry board, or the governors of a charity, but it is an ill-judged appeal to the head of a department because should an appointment be granted, and the Officer lose his life in the execution of his duty, it would probably entail his orphans upon the Charitable Fund. It is, therefore, most certainly detrimental to the application for employment. I have strong feelings on this point, and am perfectly of the opinion of my old friend and commander, the late Earl St. Vincent, on this and many other matters; and I think that men is neither to be envied or respected, who could take advantage of the innocence and inexperience of a confiding woman, to beguile her into an imprudent marriage and entail domestic misery upon her for life, only relieved by false hopes of bettering her condition by a temporary lustre, which would surely react upon her feelings with ruinous consequences. In conclusion, I beg leave to inform your correspondent A., who states himself to be a Naval Officer, that I have read the recommendation of the Committee to which he alludes, and amongst many hundreds of opinions which I have heard expressed thereon, by soldiers and sailors, his is the only one that has alluded to it in any other terms than those of strong deprecation. Moreover the recommendations of that Committee have only been carried partially into effect, and I hope will never be wholly, and there are Civil appointments now existing, which have been held by Military Officers upwards of twenty years, and which not one in a hundred is qualified, by his military education, to fill. I think you have given the proper distinction of berths which should be periodically changed; and I trust we may never witness the time, when appointments are bestowed, not upon those who can fill them with credit and ability, but on those who plead the eleemosynary appeal of children to be educated, and who covet them as a means of profit and saving,—a sure mode of bringing them into contempt. In conclusion, as an old Officer, I must beg to offer my grateful thanks for the benefits the United Service are experiencing from your independent and talented paper. We long wanted such a channel, and under your judicious management, it can neither become a medium for disaffection nor servilely administer to the views of those in power.

MILITARY PATRONAGE.

SIR,—We hear much of the unbiassed manner in which Lord Hill fills vacant appointments, and it is so often asserted that he alone regards merit and service, that people who do not examine are apt to believe it. Let us look, however, to the recent appointment of Maj.-Gen. Robert Ellice to be Lieut.-Governor of Guernsey, in place of Maj.-Gen. Ross, which is understood to be fixed. I am told that General Ellice has not done any service, either before the enemy or even abroad, to justify such a selection. He in fact he has never served since he was a Major!! Now, Sir, if this is really so, how is it that Lord Hill, or his noble Secretary, can consistently with their professions, carry into effect such an appointment. Those who affect to be the secret, say General Ellice gets it, not from any merit of his own, but solely because he is in some way connected with Lord Grey's family!!! This is really startling, for on the present day, when promotion is denied us, and all appointments so few, is it to be borne that scores of General Officers, who have been from forty-five to fifty years in the service—who have seen much hard service through the Peninsular war, in the East and West Indies, and, in fact, wherever called, and who have been hotly engaged with the enemy as often perhaps as they have been years in the service—is it, I ask, Sir, to be borne, that men like these are to be left neglected, and that which some of them have a right to look to as a reward, should be bestowed on an Officer, whose chief, and, perhaps, only claim, is the being a relation of Lord Grey? If General Ellice's service merit this reward, I doubt not some of your professional readers will through your medium show what these services have been.

TRISTRAM AND THE ROYAL MARINE CORPS.

SIR,—From Tristram's last letter I am induced to expect from him some remarks on the subject of Prize-money. I have no objection to his replying to anything I may state, but I must request that he will abstain in future from any strictures on the Royal Marine corps, which will not be tolerated in civilised society. I shall be happy to hear and reply to any objections he may have to Field Officers of Royal Marines sharing Prize-money with those of their rank in the service, but I appeal to his own sense of propriety, whether any good end can be answered by personal abuse under fictitious signatures gratuitously attacking public bodies of gentlemen, from whose resentment they are screened by the concealment of their real names and address.

A. C.

[We feel certain that our friend Tristram will attend to the request of our very able correspondent A. C. The alvantage of anonymous correspondence is, that it encou- ges individuals to expose public abuses: we are always posed to personalities, whether they affect individuals or ps.—Ed.

ARMY AND NAVY PROMOTIONS.

Sir,—Having seen a paragraph in a Provincial Paper, e Devonport Telegraph and Plymouth Chronicle, in ich it is stated that you had drawn an unfair conclusion to the difference of half-pay between the Colonels of the ny* and Captains of the Navy, inasmuch as "that most of full Colonels receive only the pay of their regimental nk, either as Lieutenant-Colonels or Majors, so that a jority of the Colonels (which is only a brevet rank) are the receipt of not more than 9*s.* 6*d.* or 11*s.* per diem," believing, as I do, Sir, that there evidently is some mis- e in this representation, I would beg to ask, how many of the 100 or 150 full Colonels there are on half-pay o receive 9*s.* 6*d.* or 11*s.* per day?

If I am not misinformed, every officer holding brevet k is entitled to an addition to the pay, and half-pay also his regimental rank. Am I correct in this belief, Sir, or ? If this be correct, I again repeat, how many of the Colonels who are on half-pay are in the receipt of but 6*d.* per day? My impression is, not one. But, to ke the thing more clear, I would beg to ask further, and haps the editor of the Journal above alluded to will be ased to reply to this question—"What would be the f-pay of Colonels M'Cleverty, Abernethie, Tremenheere, Harry Lewis, of the Royal Marines, were they placed the reserved half-pay list? or that of Colonel Wingrove, o is also a full Colonel, though only Lieutenant-Colonel the corps? And, as regards the Artillery and Engineers, at would be the half-pay of Colonels Power and Young- husband, the two Junior Colonels of the Artillery, as well that of Colonels Sir Alexander Dirkson, James W. ith, Sir J. May, and Sir Henry Ross, who, though Colonels in the army, are only Lieutenant-Colonels in corps? And again in the Engineers, what would be half-pay of Colonels Goldfinch, Arnold, Burgoyne, and J. T. Jones, who are but Lieut.-Colonels in the corps Engineers, though Colonels in the army?" If the itor of the Devonport and Plymouth Journal will not e the trouble to reply fully to each and all these queries, ope that your matchless correspondent Tristram will be the pains, as he seems to be well acquainted with every ject of this nature, and has become an authority which will have the hardihood to dispute.

THE ROYAL NAVAL CHARITABLE SOCIETY.

Sir,—It is with much pleasure I have noticed your ready ertion of my second letter, relative to the Royal Naval aritable Society, "which claims our warmest interests its well doings, it being the main-stay and prop of many widow and orphan." Having in that communication on you, for the information of the members, a List of the ncipal items in our overgrown "office charges," I again to assert to that subject, in expressing my opinion ly of them. The Secretary, it appears, is allowed a sa- y of 60*l.* Now, in a Society, as I before stated, with honoured means, whose only object is that of "Cha- ," surely this is sufficient without allowing him a 5 per t. commission on monies received, amounting in the t year to 68*l.* 9*s.*; it appears to me an extraordinary e of paying a Secretary. "Why not give him a fixed ary, or the commission only, either is a sufficient remu- ration for services rendered, in fact, the latter mode is a re equitable way; again, there is a charge of 8*l.* 8*s.* for king personal inquiries relative to parties applying for f that are residing in London. I am of opinion it t Secretary's duty to make those inquiries without addi- al compensation; being a total of 134*l.* 17*s.* The charge 13*l.* 10*s.* for advertising the quarterly meetings, is ther anomaly, being no less than 3*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* a quarter, ich great expense, conformable to my ideas on the sub- t, is unnecessary; all members are fully aware that the tings are at fixed periods. On inquiry I find that 7*s.* 6*d.* will pay for 12 advertisements, in the Morning hronicle for instance; if it can be proved at the next eting that 68 Advertisements annually are absolutely essary for the well-being of the "Society," then I shall t particularly satisfied that this item does not exceed pru- ty. With respect to the postages, 17*l.* 17*s.* appears to an enormous expense, being no less than about the rage of 1*s.* 4 letter per diem; parties applying for relief ght to be requested to post pay their communications, an ject very easily attained in a short time. Our rent, &c., , is equally extravagant, particularly when I take into ount that we have the additional charge of 2*l.* 2*s.* for hire the room at the Thatched House Tavern for the Quarterly etings; we certainly ought to have a room sufficiently ge attached to our office for that purpose, "when we paying such heavy rent." The stationery charge of

We subjoin the rates of half pay, for the information of our ndent contemporary.

6*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* shows a want of "Economy," many teams may be purchased for that sum. Having gone another stage in the task, which as a member I feel it my duty to do, being influenced by no party motive, "for the Secretary I have the highest respect," it is solely upon public grounds I have dissected these charges, and to guide my "brother mem- bers" in the opportunity of being prepared to revise the present system at the next meeting (11th July), when I hope to have the pleasure of meeting a large assemblage, all anxious that "Economy" should be the order of the day. To you, Mr. Editor, I beg to return my warmest thanks for the zeal with which you have entered into my views.

No. II. TRISTRAM'S OPINION AND REMARKS UPON "LLOYD'S REGISTER OF BRITISH AND FOREIGN SHIPPING."

Sir,—In continuing my opinion of the national import- ance of "Lloyd's Register" I will next bring under public notice the rules by which the Surveyors are governed, that one and all may judge whether there is in this institution aught underhand, partial, or unfair:—

"There shall be appointed for the Port of London, and other Ports in the United Kingdom, such number of Ship- wright and Nautical Surveyors as from time to time may appear expedient to the Committee to be requisite for the objects and purposes of the Society.

"No Surveyor will be permitted, without the special sanction of the Committee, to receive any fee, gratuity, or reward whatsoever, to his own use and benefit, for any ser- vice performed by him in his capacity of Surveyor to this Society, on pain of immediate dismissal.

"The Surveyors to the Society will be directed to attend on special surveys of ships under damage, or repairs for restoration, when required by Merchants, Shipowners, and Underwriters, the charge for which will be regulated ac- cording to the nature and extent of the service performed."

The moderate fees with which the Owners are charged for the survey of their ships, prior to being classed and registered in the book, appear to be of no consideration, as the certificate of such survey must avail in recommendation for freight or passage, in decided preference to any ship or vessel without such certificate of class and qualification; for who can tell in default thereof, whether an unsurveyed, or unclassed ship may not, from leakage, damage to whole valuable cargo of perishable goods, or whether she will sink or swim in a gale or a sea-way?

I have perused with much attention, in a contemporary Magazine and Gazette, several letters and articles contro- versially supporting the absolute necessity of an immediate interference of the legislature, to enact laws to control, and to appoint Surveyors and Registers to superintend the construction of our Mercantile shipping.

However desirable and advantageous it may be to this famed maritime nation to produce the best shipping in the world, yet I am apprehensive, nay, almost certain, that that Ministry who proposed a law to govern, rule, or dictate to ship-builders in the construction, scantling, materials, and fastenings of their vessels, would be so unpopular with many influential societies, classes, and interests, as to render its resignation from that moment inevitable, although the com- munity at large may be convinced of the necessity and pro- priety of some effectual check or prevention to the navi- gation of merchantmen, which are unseaworthy, badly equipped or conditioned. This society ensures to the public that check or prevention, as no vessels are registered and classed until their owners have voluntarily submitted their construction and equipment to a strict and impartial examination, agreeably to its laws and regulations, and pub- lishes a guarantee to the passenger and the freighter, that the life or property of either may be considered safe when only exposed to the ordinary dangers of the sea. "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping" is, consequently, I humbly submit, entitled to the countenance and patronage of Government, and to the support and encouragement of the country.

As I am wholly actuated with (what I trust will be con- sidered) a laudable desire to benefit the public, I beg the favour of your publishing a few short extracts from the "Register" of its "Rules for Classification."

"The characters to be assigned to ships shall be, as nearly as circumstances will permit, a correct indication of their real and intrinsic qualities; and the same shall no longer be regulated by the uncertain standard of the port of building, nor by the uncontrouled decision of Surveyors, but will, in all cases, be finally fixed by the Committee, after due con- sideration of the reports of the Surveyors, and the documents which may be submitted to the Committee.

"There shall be two denominations of ships of the first class. The first class will comprise all ships which have not passed a prescribed age, and which are kept in the highest state of repair and efficiency. The extent of the period for the continuance of ships on this class will be determined by reference to the original construction and quality of the vessel, the materials employed, and the mode of building; but it is desirable, on grounds of national policy and of individual justice, that after the expiration of the prescribed period, ships shall be permitted to remain in the first description of the first class, or to be restored thereto for a further limited period, under certain defined regulations.

"The second description of the first class will comprise all ships which have passed the prescribed age, &c. &c. &c. but are still in a condition for the safe conveyance of dry and perishable cargoes.

"Second class ships will comprise all ships which shall be found, on survey, unfit for carrying dry cargoes, but per- fectly safe for the conveyance of cargoes not in their nature liable to sea damage, to all ports of the world.

"Third class ships will comprise such ships as are good in constitution, and which shall be found on survey fit for conveyance on short voyages (not out of Europe), of cargoes in their nature not liable to sea damage.

"The efficient state and condition of ships' anchors, cables, and stores, will be designated by the figure 1; and where the same are found insufficient in quantity, or de- fective, by the figure 2."

In my next I shall promulgate, through the columns of The Naval and Military Gazette, the bye-laws and regula- tions by which new ships are required to be surveyed while building, &c., and when I have submitted my third or fourth letter on this subject to public opinion or criticism I am in expectation of the pleasure of proving incontro- vertably that, until it may be considered indispensable in the legislature to interfere in the building, repairs, and efficiency of our merchant fleets, that the "Shipowners' Society," and "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," offer the greatest probability of protection to life and property by sea conveyance. In the meantime, I should recommend every passenger or freighter to be guided in his selection of a ship by the certificate of classi- fication and quality which a ship has to exhibit in her favour, and not by the gaudy appearance produced by paint and varnish, which in a ship, like the cosmetic and rouge upon the wanton's cheek, too often conceal disease and blemish!!!

The Unfought Duels.—The House of Commons, in its systematic interference with the innocent pleasures of the people, will persist in presenting its members from fighting duels, and thereby abridging the liberty of the subject, and diminishing the stock of public excitement and gossip. Call this a land of freedom, where a Mem- ber of Parliament must not fight his own duel! Sir R. Vyvyan, Mr. Trench and Mr. Watson have manifested every possible degree of willingness to oblige society, to promote the conversation of the clubs, and to produce some degree of agitation in fashionable coteries, by offering themselves as victims—but in vain. The Serjeant-at-Arms detained them prisoners from Friday night until Monday morning, when a cruel debate was perpetrated upon both gentle- men, and they were compelled to give up their belligerent positions from sheer exhaustion. Another promising shot was held out on Thursday night, but it went off with "a flash in the pan." Col. Sibthorpe was obliging enough to take offence at a classical remark made by Sir John Hobhouse, that "nothing is more foolish than a foolish laugh;" and Sir John, with equal consideration, took the warlike step and quitted the House, according to the example of the gallant Colonel. The House, how- ever, interfered as usual; the Col. was called back, and was unfeelingly compelled to be perfectly satisfied. We are, nevertheless, not without some hope that a duel may yet spring out of this affair; Mr. H. Grattan, in defend- ing Sir John Hobhouse, having declared "that he did not hear any words fall from the Right Honourable Baronet which any man in his senses would take notice of." Could any thing be more contemptuous? Sir John is really bound to call out Mr. H. Grattan.—Court Journal.

Royal Wit.—At the King's late dinner to the Jockey Club, Lord Westminster was boasting of Touchstone and offering to back him for a large sum against anything that could be named in the field; "I accept the chal- lenge," said his Majesty, "and will name to beat him a neck!" The match was concluded, and his Majesty called upon to name his favourite, against a race laughter, named "The Giraffe!"

A lady, who styles herself a candidate for connubial bliss, advertises in an American paper that she "ar- dently desires to unite herself to some gentleman whose habits and disposition are accordant with her own." The modest fair one says, "My complexion is brunette, eyes and hair black, nose Grecian, mouth small, my slender, but properly rounded full, height five feet two inches, ankles and hands delicately formed. Fortune about 20,000 dollars."

Naval and Military Gazette.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1836.

We express the general feeling of the United Service by declaring that the officers, one all, acknowledge a debt of gratitude to Mr. Bannerman for his able support of their claims; yet how disappointing the objections made on the part of this great nation, to the rendering of justice to her servants, by granting them that reward which has been the object of years of zealous, anxious, and arduous services. The observations of the Secretary at War (founded, we admit, upon the Report of the Parliamentary Committee of 1833) are, that Brevet promotions are only to be given "for some very particular and remarkable service." If this be intended with a view to the future, when or where is such service likely to be performed? or, if with a retrospect to the past, is it to be inferred that these individuals only are to be advanced who have been more fortunate, though, perhaps, not more deserving than others, in opportunities of distinguishing themselves? Thus giving worse than a death blow to their seniors who may be left in the back ground.

With Subalterns of from fifteen to twenty years' standing, Captains, Majors, and Lieutenant-Colonels, each of upwards of twenty years, and Colonels of 11 years' service (as at present is the case), an officer now entering the army, without money and influence to push him on, must, if Brevet promotions be deferred as they now are, lay his account to arriving at the age of ninety, before he can attain the rank of Major-General; with the Navy the case is similar; and, surely the efficiency of both services, exclusive of any consideration to the claims of individuals, strongly calls for a continuance of that periodical progression, which until now has never been denied. With regard to the objection that there is not employment for one-tenth of the present number of General Officers, it cannot be expected that any great proportion of officers who have attained that rank, are, from their years, or the decay of health, hurried on by the arduous nature of their profession, still fitted for active employment; and, in fact, promotion in the higher ranks has hitherto been considered more as a well-merited reward for the past, than with the sole view of [illegible] for vacancies in the higher departments of the service.

It is to be hoped that the subject will be revived in the House of Commons, where fair and liberal feelings will surely prevail, in giving encouragement to ministers to concede that which it is evident their inclination would lead them not to defer. It would be unjust that any new modelling of the Military system, as projected by the Secretary at War, should affect the promotion of officers who have already passed the most valuable portion of their lives under a reliance that Rank would, in its due course, reach those who had served zealously and faithfully, even if they might not have had the opportunities of particularly distinguishing themselves; and as Ministers are withheld from an act of justice, on the grounds of public economy, there is not, we are persuaded, an officer, either Naval or Military, who would not thankfully receive the additional rank he has for years looked upon as at hand, under the condition that no advance of pay should accompany this rank, until Government shall, at an after time, judge it proper to concede it to him.

In our former number we called the attention of the Admiralty to the long service and advanced age of the Field Officers of the Royal Marines, we will now look to the state of the lower ranks of this corps, and consider what benefit they have derived from the present system of promoting entirely by seniority. We will preface our statements by remarking, that although, in most regiments, some individuals are found who have served sufficiently long to be justified in repining at their lot; it is only in our rotation corps we have whole lists of discontented men, grown old in the performence of duties for which they are now no longer fit, but who are still retained in a station in the service, from which there is no adequate retirement. The junior Captains of the Royal Marines have served twenty-eight, the senior thirty-eight years, we have therefore (agreeably to our former average of the age at which they may be supposed to have joined the service) men in this rank ranging from forty-six to fifty-six years of age. The First Lieutenants have been in the corps from eight to twenty-eight years, about seventy of them having joined during the war; the ages, therefore, of these seventy First Lieutenants vary from forty to forty-six, those of the thirty juniors from twenty-six to thirty-two years. Of the Second Lieutenants we have nothing to say, except that they are generally young men, ready, able, and willing for any service, whose only regret is that this long peace has prevented their being called into more active employment; but, with respect to the Captains and old Lieutenants, we think they have just cause to complain of their hopeless condition,—have just cause to grieve that the men who fought at Lirsa, under Harte, are but recently made Captains,—that those who served in the Confiance and Shannon are still Subalterns. Were proof necessary that these officers feel strongly the neglect with which they have been treated, none better could be adduced than this, that of the hundred Captains, sixty are applicants for the retirement; nothing can more plainly shew the hopeless condition of these men, than a desire of so large a portion of them to quit a service in which they are at present subject to comparatively no privations: what, then, will be the consequence of a state of warfare? will men, weary of the service in the time of peace, willingly undergo, without hope or prospect of reward, the dangers and hardships of a Naval and Military life during war? we confess we do not think it probable they will; we do not think it probable that men, between forty-six and fifty-six years of age, will in future be content to do their duty as Captains of companies on foreign service, while he who is at ease at home shares equally with him abroad in the benefits of promotion.

Let us consider what probability exists under the present system of an accelerated rate of advancement,—we will call attention to the ages of the Captains, of whom the juniors is forty-six; the seniors joined from half-pay about the year 1823; they have therefore been twelve years going up the Captains' list, although during this period there has been an augmentation of four Lieutenant Colonels to the corps, and the unusual indulgence granted of upwards of fifty senior commissions sold, or allowed to retire on full-pay. We will suppose, for the sake of calculation, that these fifty-four steps made a difference of six years in the promotion of the junior Major; the junior Captain may therefore anticipate being eighteen years going up the Captains' list, unless extraordinary means be taken to help him forward, he will then be sixty-four years of age. How, then, can the Subalterns hope to rise above the rank of Captain? the thing is impossible; and they but delude themselves when they dream that the common course of nature will be altered for their advantage. But it may be asked, how can an alteration be made without great injustice to the old officers? We will endeavour to show that it may be done in a manner likely to give satisfaction to all parties. Several of the Field Officers have applied for the retirement: we have incidentally mentioned that about sixty Captains have requested to be allowed the same indulgence; we cannot imagine that, after their long and faithful services, any person will think these Captains are not justly entitled to the 191*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* a-year, for which they have asked, by granting to these old and worn-out servants of their King and country the boon they desire; we may promote all the war First Lieutenants, and shall thus have a newly officered corps, ready to receive such rules for promotion as may appear most likely to conduce to its future efficiency.

Having thus provided for the old officers now serving, let it be made the future rule of the Royal Marine corps to promote entirely by patronage, giving this protection to the officers of long service, that every one of whatever rank, who shall serve a certain period, say twenty years, shall be, at his own request, allowed to retire on 480*l.* a-year, and that those who shall serve this number of years shall be entitled to claim either the full pay of the rank they hold; or, if they prefer it, a retiring pension of 300*l.* a-year; by this arrangement we shall ensure the future activity of the officers of this force, and restore to an efficient state one of the most useful corps under the Crown; and in times of difficulty, by judicious rewarding merit with advancement, we may give such a tone to this branch of our Naval Service as will amply repay the first expense of the restoration.

We have reason to think that the [illegible] the Horse Guards are well disposed to [illegible] earlier relief of our Indian Regiments. [illegible] know that with the very small force at their disposal, without a different System of relief, the mere wish is impracticable. We observe that within the present year, the following reliefs have been effected:—the 1st Battalion of the Roy from the West Indies, the 7th from Malta, the 25th from West Indies, and the 38th from India. In a short time the 42nd and 88th from the Mediterranean, the 97th from Ceylon, the 98th from the Cape, and the 79th and 1st Battalion of the Rifles from America, may be expected. We do not complain that the Royals and 25th Regiments, from the West Indies, have been relieved after having served there since 1825, but we cannot see the justice of relieving the 7th, 42nd, 88th, 97th, 98th, 79th, and Rifles, from the Mediterranean, the Cape, and America, which have only served since 1825 in those fine climates, while the 45th, 54th, the 16th, the 6th, and 55th are in India, the three first having been abroad since 1819, the two latter since 1821. The fairer system would seem to be, to make fifteen years the maximum of foreign service. Is there an economist, however rigid, who would doom, to longer expatriation, 20,000 soldiers, his fellow countrymen? Let it be a rule, that no regiment, except serving in the West Indies, be relieved, so long as a regiment of fifteen years' foreign service is unrelieved. This would satisfy the regiments serving in India, and they would then feel that their foreign service had a limit, and that they were an English not a mere Asiatic army. At present the general opinion entertained by officers and privates is, that while serving in that distant land, British regiments are looked on quite as a separate force from that serving in our Colonies, nay almost as a condemned army, sentenced to general service for life. We may speak in strong language, but when was the language of truth weak? We shall never cease, till the grievance be redressed, to urge the claims of the Indian Army of His Majesty to be relieved after fifteen years' service abroad, and in doing so we hope to draw at last the attention of those who can redress the grievance to the crying nature of it. We may take an early opportunity of quoting, from the evidence before the Military Commission, the ungrounded hopes held out by the Authorities; but we have a strong expectation that we shall yet be saved from making the exposure, by learning that, at least, the regiments, which have been serving abroad since 1819, are immediately to be relieved.

The indefatigable zeal, and unflinching integrity, of the Honourable Member for Devonport, Sir Edward Codrington, in endeavouring to correct the abuses which have hitherto existed in the Naval Service, as well as in promoting, to the extent of his power, the interest and welfare of the profession at large, must entitle that gallant officer to the gratitude of the whole Navy; and though he may not at the instant succeed in accomplishing the immediate objects he has in view, yet his straightforward and unanswerable remarks will eventually be sure to be attended with vast good. Amongst the cases which Sir Edward selected, as showing the exercise of an arbitrary and cruel authority on the part of a First Lord of the Admiralty, we are surprised that he had not included that of Commissioner Aylesbury, who, in the most unprecedented manner, was superseded in the situation he held at Bermuda a few years since, as our columns have before fully detailed. Knowing as we do the liberal and right feelings of the present Board of Admiralty, we have daily looked with confidence for a thorough inquiry into this extraordinary case, which is, we believe, without a parallel in the annals of the Navy, and we still hope that a complete investigation will be had into all and every part of this transaction; for no man, let his station be high or low, should be condemned and punished, without having the opportunity afforded him of rebutting the charges which may have been brought against him by, possibly, some interested or prejudiced individual. Impartial Justice demands this, and Justice in every shape will, we are assured, be uniformly administered by His Majesty's present liberal-minded advisers.

We are much gratified in announcing to our readers, that Captain Symonds, Surveyor of the Navy, received the honour of Knighthood at the King's Levee on Wednesday last. Whether this was a spontaneous act of His Majesty, or recommended by His Ministers, it is equally honourable to all parties, as expressive of the opinion entertained by those who have access to the official reports, respecting the Surveyor's ships, and it must have the effect of confounding his traducers, who have so long endeavoured, by the most unworthy means, to prejudice the public against him. We have long expected this gracious manifestation of Royal approbation; the more so, as it has always been customary to confer Knighthood on the existing Surveyor of the Navy, and it has probably been delayed in this instance until the generally acknowledged superiority of the new system has been sufficiently proved. There is scarce a week that passes but brings some accounts confirmatory of this, and it is now universally admitted that, provided Captain Symonds's ships are properly handled, and their stowage such as the Surveyor directs, they are seldom or ever beaten. We are in possession of accounts from Rio Janeiro, which state that, in May last, the Cleopatra had beaten the French ship Ariane, in a very extraordinary degree, upon all points of sailing, after several days' trial, and, being subsequently challenged by a French brig, they worked out of Rio together against the sea breeze, and in the distance of three miles the Frenchman was a mile and a half to leeward, to the great mortification of his Admiral, who was present, and declared it to be the most astonishing thing he had ever witnessed in point of superiority of sailing and beating to windward. As we recollect the Ariane in the combined squadron in the North Sea, under Sir Pulteney Malcolm, we will give her dimensions to show in what a considerable degree they differ from those of the Cleopatra, and as another proof (if proofs are now wanting) that breadth can be preserved without sacrificing the speed of a vessel, a desideratum, as we have often said, the most happy that can be accomplished in ship-building. Length of the French ship Ariane, 137 feet 6 inches; breadth, 35 feet; depth of hold, 18 feet 2 inches; built at Cherbourg by M. Le Roux, in 1831-2, carrying twenty 30 pounders, medium guns on the main deck, and eight 30 pound carronades on quarter deck and forecastle. By contrasting the above with the dimensions of the Cleopatra, which we have frequently given, it will be found that, although the French ship is 7 feet 6 inches longer, she has 5 feet less beam than the Cleopatra,—both being donkey frigates.

The dismissal by Court-Martial, from His Majesty's Service, of Mr. Brooking, late Lieutenant in command of the Pike schooner, for the loss of that vessel, under circumstances of negligence and carelessness, has caused no small sensation in Naval circles, from the admitted reputation which up to this unfortunate event, that gentleman had sustained as an officer and a seaman. Without the slightest degree impugning the sentence of the Court-Martial, which, with the evidence produced could have arrived at no other result, we will venture to express a hope, that the extenuating circumstances of the case may be favourably considered at a future period, and that clemency which His Majesty has been pleased to exhibit to others, will we trust be extended to this officer, in zeal for the service considered second to none, and who appears to have fallen a victim to supposing too much confidence in his inferiors. The nature of the sentence, even without the pecuniary punishment, and the loss of rank which it inflicts must be sufficiently galling to a sensitive mind, and we are certain that no one can feel it more acutely, or more sincerely regret the loss of the Pike than her Commander, who took so much pains and exhibited so much skill in the management of his favourite vessel.
